The ideal or mythical world can be formed and peopled to suit the fancy—free from bruised heads and broken bones. But when we come physically in contact with the substantial, we must look out for reality. If people differ widely about substantial or objectiv truths, we need not wonder at their multiplied differences about apparent facts that no one can really know. The Materialist, from his physical point of observation, is most evidently correct when he says the material universe is the totality of all truth—the all of all; for if there be no real truth, there could be no fancied truthfulness. We may sense a truth, but we cannot speak the truth. At best, we can only speak truthfully of the truth. Neither can we think the truth, but of it. The distinction I wish to show I trust is apparent.

Roaming metaphysically is often a pleasant pastime, and, as with the novel reader, makes life more bearable. Fancy the images; "see the tear of innocence, and the lurid twinkle in a demon's envious eye." Now we see them—now we don't; there's ample room for all.

It may be said that we hav grown ourselvs, aggregating thousands of truths to the embodiment we call I, all parts acting and reacting in all the varied evolutions called life; and when they cease to act vito-mechanically they will act chemico-mechanically, and this I is no more, but truth yet remains.

Of which is of the more importance, the physical or the mythical, is ever left to the choice of all, as results of organization and education; but I plead for a distinction that shall separate the real and the mythical.

If I avow my better belief, that there never was anything made, I am called heterodox; yes, that is my doxy, at threescore and fifteen, and I love her still. ABRAM BRONSON.

Help Spread the Light.

It is acknowledged by all that the best way to spread Liberal principles is by papers, tracts, and books. Every issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a good missionary document, and every Freethought book sold is a silent pleader and propagator of the truth. There are thousands of Freethinkers all over the country whom we do not know and who do not know this paper. But our friends know them, and we ask such as are willing to spend a few moments for the good of Liberalism to send us their names and addresses, that we may mail them copies of the paper. We are willing to furnish the copies necessary for this purpose and mail them, as we hope a few extra subscribers may thereby be obtained, which will make the pecuniary outlay square. But the main object is to spread the knowledge of Liberalism, its aims and objects, what we think and why we think it. We would like every one to know that the Christian faith is a rope of sand, that the churches are taking the money of the people without giving any return. It is the duty of all Freethinkers to let their neighbors know that the fires of hell hav been quenched.

Many Liberals say they hav no time to devote to missionary work, and do not like to argue with their church acquaintances. Very well, send us the names and let THE TRUTH SEEKER argue the case. Where a man is Liberally inclined—and not dead to all sense and reason—we hope and think THE TRUTH SEEKER will bring him clear out of the fog.

To stimulate our friends in this work we make the following offer, only asking that when the sender has read the pamphlets he shall hand them around that others may be benefited.

To every one sending us the names and addresses of twenty-five independent men and women who do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who do their own thinking, we will send one copy of either of the below-named twenty-five cent books:

"Influence of Christianity upon Civilization," by B. F. Underwood.

"Advancement of Science." The Inaugural Address of Prof. John Tyndall, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Chronicles of Simon Christianus." His manifold and wonderful adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. Fidel.

"Religion not History." An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F.W. Newman, of the London University.

"The Besant-Hatchard Debate." A two nights' debate between Mrs. Annie Besant and Rev. A. Hatchard on "Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World."

"The Clergyman's Victims." A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.

"Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahweh or Jehovah," shown to be the worship of the Devil.

"Gottlieb: His Life." A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam.

"Jesus Christ." His Life, Miracles, Deity, Teachings, and Imperfections. By W. S. Bell.

"Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier," a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings.

"Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, The Book of the Generation of Jesus." First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up.

To those who do not know twenty-five persons whom a perusal of THE TRUTH SEEKER would be likely to benefit, but who can send a list of ten names, we will send either of the following by D. M. Bennett:

"Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind."

"The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers."

"The Gods of Superstition."

"The Great Religions of the World."

"Jesus Christ." Considered as an Infidel.

"An Hour with the Devil."

"Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds."

"Honest Questions and Honest Answers."

Or either of the following by Underwood:

"What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianty."

"Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."

"Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint."

"Paine the Political and Religious Reformer."

"Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs."

"Materialism and Crime."

"Will the Coming Man Worship God?

"Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity."

This is a chance to enlighten a large body of people, to help THE TRUTH SEEKER, and to get good books to circulate by only a few moments' work. We hope the responses will be many.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,

Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man.

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By Prof. John Tyndall. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50

II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Esq. 12m ..... Cloth, 1 50

III. Fo[illegible]. By Edward Smith..... Cloth, 1 75

IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain. 12mo..... Cloth; 1 50

V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

VI. The New Chemistry. By Prof. Josiah C. Cooke, Jr., of Harvard University. 12mo..... Cloth. 2 00

VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Prof. Balfour Stewart. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 12mo. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1 75

IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M. D. 12mo ..... Cloth, 1 50

X. The Science of Law. By Prof. Sheldon Amos. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 75

XI. Animal Mechanism. A Treatise on Terrestrial and Aerial Locomotion. By E. J Marey. With 117 Illustrations. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 75

XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By John William Draper. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel. 12mo..... Cloth, 2 00

XV. Fungi: their Nature and Uses. By M. C. Cooke. Edited by the Rev. M. J. Berkeley. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XVI. The Life and Growth of Language; an Outline of Linguistic Science. By Wm. Dwight Whitney. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XVII. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 75

XVIII. The Nature of Light, with a General Account of Physical Optics. By Dr. Eugene Lommel. With 188 Illustrations, and a Plate of Spectra in Chromolithography. 12mo.... Cloth, 2 00

XIX. Animal Parasites and Messmates. By P. J. Van Beneden. With 83 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XX. On Fermentation. By P. Schutzenberger. With 28 Illustrations. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Prof. Bernstein, of the University of Halle. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 75

XXII. The Theory of Sound its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J Norman Lockyer. Illustrated. 12mo..... Cloth, 2 50

XXIV. A History of the Growth of the Steam-Engine. By Robert H. Thurston. With 193 Illustrations. 12mo..... Cloth, 2 50

XXV Education as a Science. By Alexander Bain. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 75

XXVI. Modern Chromatics, with Applications to Art and Industry. By Ogden N Rood. With 130 Illustrations. 12mo..... Cloth, 2 00

XXVII The Human Species. By A. de Quatrefages, Professor of Anthropology in the Museum of Natural History, Paris 12mo..... Cloth, 2 00

XXVIII. The Crayfish; an Introduction to the Study of Zoology. By Prof. T. H. Huxley. With 82 Illustrations. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 75

XXIX. The Atomic Theory. By Ad. Wurtz, Membre de l'Institut, etc. Translated by E. Cleminshaw. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XXX. Animal Life as Affected by the Natural Conditions of Existence. By Karl Semper, Professor of the University of Wurzburg. With 2 Maps and 106 Woodcuts. 12mo..... Cloth, 2 00

XXXI. Sight: An Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By Joseph Le Conte, author of "Elements of Geology," etc. With Illustrations. 2mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XXXII. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. By Dr. J. Rosenthal, Professor of Physiology at the University of Erlangen. With 75 Woodcuts. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XXXIII. Illusions. A Psychological Study. By James Sully. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 50

XXXIV. The Sun. By C. A. Young, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Astronomy in the College of New Jersey. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 0

XXXV. Volcanoes: What they Are and what they Teach. By J. W. Judd, Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines. With 96 Illustrations 12mo..... Cloth, 2 0

XXXVI. Suicide: An Essay in Comparative Moral Statistics. By Henry Morselli, M.D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 7

XXXVII. The Formation of Vegetable Mould, through the Action of Worms. With Observations on their Habits. By Charles Darwin, LL.D., F.R.S. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 5

XXXVIII. The Concepts and Theories of Modern Physics. By J. B. Stallo. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 7

XXXIX. The Brain and its Functions. By J. Luys, Physician to the Hospice de la Salpetriere. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 5

XL. Myth and Science: An Essay. By Tito Vignoli. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 5

XLI. Diseases of the Memory: An Essay in the Positive Psychology By T. H. Ribot, author of "Heredity." From the French, by William Huntington Smith. 12mo..... Cloth, 1 5

XLII. Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., etc 12mo..... Cloth, 2 00

BOOKS SOLD BY D. M. BENNETT.

MISCELLANEOUS RADICAL WORKS.

Exeter Hall. A theological romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By Wm. McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

The Day of Rest. By Wm. McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall," "The Heathens of the Heath," etc. Price, 10 cents.

History of the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early Fathers. By Dean Dudley. Price, $1.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. Sara A. Underwood. Price, $1.75.

The Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss Susan R. Wixon. Price, $1.25.

The Prophet of Nazareth; or, A Critical inquiry into the Prophetical, Intellectual, and Moral Character of Jesus Christ. By Evan Powell Meredith, F. A. S. L. Price, $4.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By Morris Einstein. Price, $1.

The Koran. A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $2.

The Bible in India—Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By Louis Jacolliot. Price, $2.

Trance-Dynamic Cure By La Roy Sunderland. Price of Trance, $1.50; Dynamic Cure. $1.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur, Par Figault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By Zepa. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-Seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. By Kersey Graves. Price $2.00.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. By Kersey Graves. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. Fish. Price, $1.50.

Old Theology Turned Upside Down, or Right Side Up. By Rev. T. B. Taylor, A. M. Cloth, $1.25; paper, $1,00.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. By V. B. Denslow, LL.D. With an introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.50.

Superstition in All Ages. By John Meslier. A Roman Catholic priest. Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

Antiquity of Christianity. By John Alberger. 12mo, 61 pp. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By Charles E. Townsend. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50.

Sequel to Essays, By same author. Price, 75 cents.

Scripture Speculations. With an introduction on the creation, stars, earth, primitiv man, Judaism, etc. By Halsey R. Stevens. Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp. Price, $1.50.

Faith and Reason; Heart, Soul, and Handwork By Halsey R. Stevens. Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp. Price. $1.50.

The Modern Thinker. By various authors Being the most advanced speculations in philosophy, science, theology, and sociology. Second number. 8vo, 160 pp. Price, $1.00.

Positivist Primer. Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity. By C. G. David. Price, 75 cents.

The Ethics of Positivism. A critical study. By Giacomo Barzellotti, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. Price, $2.00.

Through Rome On. A memoir of Christian and antichristian experience. By Nathaniel Ramsay Waters. Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. Price, $1.75.

Christ of Paul. By George Reber. Extra cloth. 12mo, 400 pp. Price, $2.00.

Cultivation of Art, And its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper. 12mo 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20 cents.

The Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M Schlesinger, PH.D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. Price, 75 cents.

The Case Against the Church. A summary of the arguments against Christianity. Price, 50 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By Josie Oppenheim. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. Price, 75 cents.

Soul Problems, With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea. By Joseph E. Peck. Paper. 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By James Jackson Jarves. Price, $1.25.

Socialism and Utilitarianism. By John Stuart Mill. Price, $1.50.

Nemesis of Faith. By Anthony Froude. Price, $1.50.

Christian and Deist. Price, $1.00.

Socialism. Reply to Rev. Roswell C. Hitchcock. By a Business Man.

Modern Symposium. Price, $1.25.

Trial of D. M. Bennett. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 40 cents.

Some Mistakes of Moses. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, $1.25.

The Gods and Other Lectures. By Robert G Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Ghosts and Other Lectures. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 50 cents.

The Gods, etc., and The Ghosts, etc., in one volume. Price, paper, $1.00.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Price, 25 cents.

Was Christ a God? Conclusions drawn from apostolic writings. By F. Mensinga. Price, $1.50.

Abstract of Colenso on the Pentateuch. A comprehensive summary of Bishop Colenso's argument, proving that the Pentateuch is not historically true. Price, 25 cents.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible. One hundred and forty-four propositions, without comment, embodying most of the palpable and striking self-contradictions of the Bible. Price, 25 cents.

The Bhagvad Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. Cockburn Thompson. Price, $1.75.

The Clergy a Source of Danger to the American Republic. By W. F. Jamieson. Price, $1.00.

Youth's Liberal Guide for their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger A.M Price, $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By Warren Sumner Barlow. Price, 25 cents.

The Voices. A poem in four parts. By Warren Sumner Barlow. One of the most trenchant yet sensible satires on the notions, superstitions, dogmas, and inconsistent practices of ecclesiasticism extant. Price, $1.

STANDARD SCIENTIFIC WORKS

Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Every Freethinker should read them.

Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 21 Clinton Place, New York.

WORKS OF CHARLES DARWIN.

Origin of Species	2 00
Descent of Man	3 00
Journal of Researches	2 00
Emotional Expression	3 0
Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols.	5 00
Insectivorous Plants	2 00
Climbing Plants	1 25
Orchids fertilized by Insects	1 75
Fertilization in the Vegetable Kingdom	2 00
Forms of Flowers	1 50
Power of Movement in Plants	2 00
Vegetable Mould, etc.	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. THOMAS HUXLEY.

Man's Place in Nature	1 25
On the Origin of Species	1 00
More Criticisms on Darwin, and Administrative Nihilism	50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Invertebrated Animals. Illustrated	2 50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1 75
Critiques and Addresses	1 50
American Addresses	1 25
Physiography	2 50
The Crayfish	1 75
Science and Culture	1 50
Elements of Physiology and Hygiene. By T. H. Huxley and W. J. Youmans	1 50
Introductory Primer	45

WORKS OF PROF. JOHN TYNDALL.

Heat as a Mode of Motion	2 00
On Sound	2 0
Fragments of Science	2 50
Light and Electricity	1 25
Lessons in Electricity	1 00
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2 00
Faraday as a Discoverer	1 00
On Forms of Water	1 50
Radiant Heat	5 00
Six Lectures on Light	1 50
The above 10 vols., 12mo, Cloth,	19 75
Banquet at Delmonico's, Paper,	50
Belfast Address, Paper,	50
Essays on the Floating Matter of the Air in Relation to Putrefaction and Infection. 12mo. Cloth,	1 50

WORKS OF HERBERT SPENCER.

First Principles	2 00
Principles of Biology. 2 vols	4 00
Principles of Psychology, 2 vols	4 0
Principles of Sociology Parts I., II., and III.	2 00
Ceremonial Institutions: Being Part IV. of "Principles of Sociology"	1 25
Political Institutions: Being Part V. of "Principles of Sociology."	1 50
Data of Ethics: Being Part I. of the "Principles of Morality."	1 25
Study of Sociology (International Scientific Series).	1 0
Education	1 25
Paper,	50
Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals	2 00
Universal Progress	2 00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Esthetic	2 00
Social Statics	2 01
The above 14 vols., 12mo	25 25
Philosophy of Style. 12mo. Flexible Cloth,	50

Descriptive Sociology. Published in folio with Tables. Eight Parts now ready, namely:

English.
Ancient Americans.
Negritto and Malayo-Polynesian Races.
Africans.
Asiatic Races.
North and South American Races.
Hebrews and Phœnicians.
French.

Price of the first Seven Parts Each	4 00
Part 8	7 00

WORKS OF DR. J. W. DRAPER.

History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. 12mo	1 75
Intellectual Development of Europe. 2 vols.	3 00

WORKS OF H. T. BUCKLE.

History of Civilization in England. With a complete Index (not published in the English edition). 2 vols., 8vo. Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra,	8 00
Essays; with a Biography of the Author. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00
Half Calf, extra,	2 50
The Life and Writings of Henry Thomas Buckle. By Alfred Henry Huth. 8vo	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. ERNST HAECKEL.

The History of Creation; or, the Development of the Earth and its Inhabitants by the Action of Natural Causes. A Popular Exposition of the Doctrine of Evolution in general, and of that of Darwin Goethe, and Lamarck in particular. The translation revised by Professor E. Ray Lankester. Illustrated with Lithographic Plates. In 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	5 00
The Evolution of Man. A Popular Exposition of the Principal Points of Human Ontogeny and Phylogeny. 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	5 00
Freedom in Science and Teachings. From the German. With a Prefatory Note by T. H. Huxley, F. R. S. 12mo. Cloth,	1 00

WORKS OF PROF. W. E. H. LECKY.

History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols., small 8vo Cloth,	4 00
Half Calf, extra	8 00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols., 12mo. Cloth,	3 00
Half Calf, extra,	7 00
The Leaders of Public Opinion in Ireland: Swift, Flood, Grattan, O'Connell. 12mo. Cloth,	1 75
History of England in the Eighteenth Century. 4 vols., small 8vo. Cloth,	9 00
Half Calf,	16 00

WORKS OF SIR JOHN LUBBOCK.

Origin of Civilization and the Primitive Condition of Man. Cloth,	2 00
Prehistoric Times, as Illustrated by Ancient Remains and the Manners and Customs of Modern Savages. Illustrated. 8vo. Cloth,	00
Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera (International Scientific Series). 12mo. Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF. OSCAR SCHMIDT.

The Theory of Descent, and Darwinism. With 26 Woodcuts. 12 mo	1 50

WORKS OF PROF. E. L. YOUMANS.

Class Book of Chemistry. New edition. 12 mo	1 50
Hand Book of Household Science 12 mo	1 75
The Culture Demanded by Modern Life: A Series of Addresses and Arguments on the Claims of Scientific Education. Edited with an Introduction on Mental Discipline in Education by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo. Cloth,	2 00
A Series of Expositions by Prof. Helmholtz, Dr. Mayer, Dr. Faraday, Prof. Liebig, and Dr. Carpenter Edited, with an Introduction and Brief Biographical Notices of the Chief Promoters of the New Views, by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 12 mo. Cloth,	2 00

WORKS OF PROF ANDREW D. WHITE.
President of Cornell University.

The Warfare of Science. 12 mo. Cloth,	1 00
Paper,	50

HISTORY PRIMERS.

Edited by J. R. Green. 18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Greece. By C. A. Fyffe	45
Rome By M. Creighton	45
Europe. By E. A. Freeman	45
Old Greek Life By J. P. Mahaffy	45
Geography. By George Grove	45
Roman Antiquities. By S. A. Wilkins	45
France. By C. M. Yonge	45

SCIENCE PRIMERS.

18 mo. Flexible cloth.

Introductory. By T. H. Huxley	45
Chemistry. By H. E. Roscoe	45
Physics. By Balfour Stewart	45
Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie	45
Geology. By Archibald Geikie	45
Physiology. By M. Foster	45
Astronomy. By J. Norman Lockyer	45
Botany. By Dr. J. D. Hooker	45
Logic. By W. S. Jevons	45
Inventional Geometry. By W. G. Spencer	45
Pianoforte-Playing. By Frank in Taylor	45
Political Economy. By W. S. Jevons	45
Natural Resources of the United States. By J. N. Patton	45

Poetry.

Charity.

From the National Republican.

'Tis a melancholy sight to see
The poor of a great city;
Their abject want and misery
Excite our strongest pity.

But those who view it every day,
In all its strange variety,
Will not the least attention pay
To precepts of sweet charity.

One morning I meandered out
To sip the cooling breeze—
To walk the streets and look about,
Serenely at my ease;

When I saw around an office door
A crowd of beggars pressing—
All ragged and hungry, half a score—
A picture most distressing.

The reason I could not explain,
Till, walking up quite near it,
A sad-faced woman did exclaim:
"Oh, say, is he not here yet?"

A crippled negro answered, "No;
But yonder he comes now!
I see those smiling features glow
Beneath his noble brow."

"God bless his soul!" the woman said,
Her countenance lit with joy;
"He'll giv me alms to purchase bread,
And feed my darling boy!"

Then I saw a portly figure,
With gentle, manly grace,
Grasp the hand of a "poor old nigger,"
And look kindly in his face.

He gave a hearty greeting
To all that wretched band;
You could see their sorrows fleeting,
As he took each pauper's hand.

He heard the old woman's story,
With sympathizing nods,
As though he cared not for glory,
Nor to propitiate the gods.

For when her story ended,
The moisture in his eye
With the woman's tears was blended,
And sought the realms on high.

Then bounteously giving alms to each,
He bade them all good-day.
"Where does that good man preach"
(I said to a stranger), "pray?"

"At the theater," said he, with a grin,
Which I thought was rather sneaking.
"I mean what church does he figure in?—
He must certainly be a deacon."

"No, no," said the stranger, "no!
He belongs to no church at all.
He's only a lawyer from Chicago,
And his name is Ingersoll."

A Close Call.

It was an Ohio man, who, when a terrible storm began one night, rushed into the house of a neighbor and cried out:

"Jones, this is the ending up of earth!"

"I am afraid so," was the reply.

"And what shall we do?"

"Make our peace with heaven."

The wind blew still stronger, the house began to shake, and the excited man exclaimed:

"Jones, you lost five bushels of wheat last fall?"

"Yes."

"And you hav your suspicions?"

"I hav. The man who took my wheat had better own up."

"Can you forgiv him?"

"I can."

"Well——"

Here the wind suddenly dropped, and, after a look through the window, the conscience-stricken man turned and finished, "Yes, if ever I meet him, I'll tell him to call around."

A Popular Modern Divine.

The Rev. John Jasper, of "the sun do move" notoriety, is so popular in Richmond that when a stranger inquires the way to his church the directions are to take a car to a certain corner and then follow the crowd. Dr. Ludlow describes him as one of a very few of the old-time colored preachers left in the North. "As such he is an historical study. But he is of still greater interest as showing the capabilities of the negro mind. If such forceful oratory, such power to sway men of his caste, be compatible with utter ignorance, what might not Jasper hav become had he been educated in the forms of truth and trained in the arts of expression?" These impressions were given by a sermon on Jasper's favorit belief, that "de sun do move." A neighboring preacher had ridiculed his arguments on that subject, and the discourse closed with this challenge: "I dar' de Reberend Wells to link arms with me, an' we'll go up to de judgment seat of de Lor' an' say: 'Lor'! you jus' 'cide 'twix us.' An' if I'se wrong de good Lor' he say: 'John, you hab made a mistake.' An' if dat udder clergyman is wrong, de Lor' say to 'im: 'Dick Wells, you 'bominable liar! go down thar to yar own place!'"

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire. 200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

SUBSCRIBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE "PHYSIOLOGIST."

Elmina would like copies of the following Nos. of the New York "Physiologist." June and July (double No.) 1878; April and May (double No.) 1879; Nov. 1878; Aug. and Sept. 1879; June 1879; Jan., Feb., March, April, 1881. If friends will send me these Nos. or either of them I will send copies of "Matrimonial Review," copy for copy in exchange, and be greatly obliged also. Or will send, if preferred, "The Alpha," or "Herald of Industry."
Address ELMINA D. SLENKER,
3t28 Snowville, Va.

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS
The Truth Seeker,
With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid, FOR FIFTY CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A REMARKABLE BOOK!
JUST PUBLISHED.
BOTTOM FACTS
CONCERNING
SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
30tf Syracuse, N. Y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

An honorable, intelligent man of 25, without means, wishes to correspond with a lady of suitable age with some means. The lady who wishes to hav a good husband and to be a good wife for life has a chance. Address, E. A. NYGREN,
2t30 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.

LOVE AND CONJUGALITY.

Hints toward the true and felicitous in Love and Conjugality. Sexuality viewed from a higher ideal. New thoughts thereon, clearly presented, yet in unobjectionable shape. All in, or contemplating the conjugal relation should hav this essay. Sent on receipt of seven cents, postage, by S. G. LEWIS,
GRASS VALLEY, CAL. 5t30

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

TO MY FRIENDS!

No God, no heaven, no hell!
These books sound their death-knell.

"The Darwins," paper 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.—John's Way, 15 cents.—Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents. These three are Infidel romances.—Studying the Bible, 75 cents.—Specimen copies of Alpha and Herald of Health, 10 cents each.—Four tracts 6 cents. Health Hints, 25 cents.—Diana, A new Theory of Sexual Relations. Sexual Satisfaction in Continence. This book should be read by all married people and by all who contemplate marriage.—Godly Women, showing how the Bible degrades and humiliates women, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.—Private Physiology for Girls, worth five dollars to any woman if she needs health, $1.—Photos: card, 15 cents, imperial, 20 cents. — Crimes of Preachers, 25 cents.—Leaves of Grass. a splendid poem, Shaksperian in style, full of good ideas, $2.—Any other Liberal book you may want at publisher's prices.

Please order them of Elmina as she makes no profits on any of her books save those sold by herself. Address, ELMINA D. SLENKER, 6teow18 Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" 'The Declaration of Independence,' "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE.

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.
For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A Few Days in Athens. By FRANCES WRIGHT. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion. By BENJAMIN OFFEN, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, $1.

A Modern Symposium. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life. By Frederick Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blackford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward. The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Frederick Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton. Utterances never surpassed by writers and all important subjects. Noted for their terse originality. Price, $1.25.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur. Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By ZEPA. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World? By G. TOULMAN. 20 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Price, $1.25.

A Short History of the Bible. Being a Popular Account of the Formation and Development of the Canon. By BRONSON C. KEELER. This is a splendid work, showing how the Bible was manufactured by the church and ecclesiastics. Limp cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By GILBERT VALE. 20 cts.

Astro-Theological Lectures. Rev. ROBT. TAYLOR. Price, cloth, $2.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper. Price, 15 cents.

Bhagavad-Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. COCKBURN THOMPSON. Price, $1.75.

Bible in India. Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By LOUIS JACOLLIOT. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Price, $1.50.

Bible Inquirer; or, Key to Bible Investigation. Containing one hundred and forty-eight propositions; with references to the most plain and striking self-contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures. Also one hundred and fifty-two references to the most marvelous occurrences. Each quotation has a short description of its contents. By A. JACOBSON. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions: Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity, considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol. Royal 8vo. 567 pages. Cloth, $4.00.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning. It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopedia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Bible of Humanity. By JULES MICHELET. Translated from the French by V. CALFA. 8vo. cloth, $3. This is a large epic in prose. The artist historian sings the evolution of mankind. He throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds.

Bible of Rational Mind and Religion. Rational Religion and Morals. By THOMAS J. VADIEN, M.D., of St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

Bible of To-Day. By JOHN W. CHADWICK. This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible. Price, $1.50.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. By KERSEY GRAVES. 35 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever used. I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograph, and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.

Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations.
290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city

THE GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT,
33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, }
W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

1ce 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

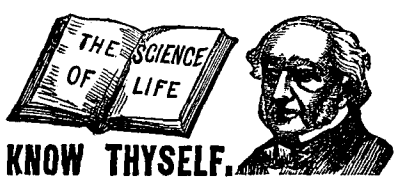
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now. Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

IT should be the labor of our lives to inform ourselvs of the uses and abuses of everything that exists, and to learn to make a proper use of all we come in contact with. If the best use we can make of some things is to avoid them and let them entirely alone, so be it.—D. M. Bennett.

THERE is in man's nature a secret inclination and motion toward love of others, which, if it be not spent upon some one or few, doth naturally spread itself toward many and maketh men become humane and charitable, as it is seen sometimes in friars. Nuptial love maketh mankind; friendly love perfecteth it; and wanton love corrupteth and embaseth it.—Bacon's Essays.

LOOK at the relations of man to the brute creation. One of us shall hav no difficulty in making friends of beasts and birds, while another excites their dread and hate, so that even dogs will scarcely come near him. There is no need to go back to the tradition of the hermits in the Thebaid or St. Francis of Assarisi, for instances of the former class. We all know the story of Cowper and his three hares, from his exquisit letters and poems, and most of you must hav read or heard of the terms on which Waterton lived with the birds and beasts in his Yorkshire home, and of Thoreau, unable to get rid of wild squirrels and birds who would come and liv with him, or from a boat taking up fish, which lay quietly in his hand till he chose to put them back again into the stream. But I suppose there is scarcely one of us who has not himself seen such instances again and again, persons of whom the old words seemed literally true, "At destruction and famin thou shalt laugh; neither shalt thou be afraid of the beasts of the earth. For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field, and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee."—Hughes's Manliness of Christ.

IF a man hav any purpose reaching beyond the hour and the day, meant to be found extant next day, what good can it ever be to promulgate lies? The lies are found out; ruinous penalty is exacted for them. No man will believe the liar next time, even when he speaks the truth, when it is of the last importance that he be believed. The old cry of "wolf!" A lie is no thing; you cannot of nothing make something; you make nothing at last, and you lose your labor into the bargain.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

THERE will always be crowds ready to fall in with the dapper, pliant ways which lead most readily to success in every community. Society has been said to be "always and everywhere in conspiracy against the true manhood of every one of its members," and the saying, though bitter, contains a sad truth. So the faithful idealist will hav to learn, without arrogance, and with perfect good temper, to treat society as a child, and never to allow it to dictate. So treated, society will surely come round to those who hav a high ideal before them, and therefore firm ground under their feet.—Hughes's Manliness of Christ.

IS there any Christian to-day, save those who are constantly in collision with the law on account of obeying implicitly the orders of Christ, who, if smitten on the one cheek would prefer a disgraceful tendering of the other to either knocking down the smiter or giving him into custody? Do the Christians take no thought for the morrow? Is it a matter of indifference as to what they eat or drink, or as to wherewith they are clothed? Let the aspect of the crowd, issuing from the fashionable churches, answer the latter part of the last query, and let the behavior at the luncheons, which happily conclude the morning service, be reply to the former.—Dr. Aveling.

VOLTAIRE and Paine still hav their readers. They hav continuators in the flesh. But neither to their books nor to their imitators are we to look for the best results of their original work. They roused men from their mental lethargy. They set men to thinking about the Bible as they had never thought before, and from out the ferment of thought which they created, and which, since their day, has been steadily increasing, has come the orderly array of knowledge, which is now accessible to the humblest student of religion.—J. W. Chadwick.

I, TO herd with narrow foreheads, vacant of our glorious gains,
Like a beast with lower pleasures, like a beast with lower pains!
Mated with a squalid savage—what to me were sun or clime?
I, the heir of all the ages, in the foremost files of time—
I that rather held it better men should perish one by one,
Than that earth should stand at gaze, like Joshua's moon in Adjalon,
Not in vain the distance beacons. Forward, forward let us range.
Let the great world spin forever down the ringing grooves of change.
Through the shadow of the globe we sweep into the younger day;
Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.
—Tennyson.

MEN are led strange ways. One should hav tolerance for a man, hope of him; leave him to try yet what he will do. While life lasts, hope lasts for every man.—Carlyle.

EDUCATE the children, and giv them fair wages for fair work in their maturity, and crime will gradually diminish, and ultimately disappear. Man is God-made, says Theism; man is circumstance-made, says Atheism. Man is the resultant of what his parents were, of what his surroundings hav been and are, and of what they hav made him; himself the result of the past, and one of the causes of what is to come. Make the circumstances good, and the result will be good, for healthy bodies and healthy brains may be built up, and from a state composed of such the disease of crime will hav disappeared.—Mrs. Besant's Gospel of Atheism.

HOW weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Fie on't! O fie! 'tis an unweeded garden
That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature
Possess it merely. —Shakspere.

Odds and Ends.

A TAILOR was startled the other day by the return of a bill which he had sent to an editor, with a notice that the "manuscript was respectfully declined."

SCOTCH Minister: "John, John, I'm afraid you are on the broad road." Inebriated Parishioner: "Weel, minister, so far as I'm concerned the breadth is a' required."

"MURDERS are plenty," said Mr. Fitznoodle, as he laid down the evening paper. "Yes," sighed Mrs. F., "people are being murdered now who were never murdered before."

A NEW HAMPSHIRE editor, speaking of the religious aspect of his neighbors, says they ruin the knees of their trousers getting religion in the winter and wear out the seats of them backsliding in the summer.

A PENNSYLVANIA man has applied for a pension because he lost one tooth during the war. The fact that he only lost one tooth would seem to indicate that he never got near enough to the front to chew hard tack.

"DID that lady take umbrage?" said the proprietor of a Harlem store to his clerk, who had just had a wordy dispute with a customer. "Oh, no, she took ten yards of turkey red calico, and wanted buttons to match.

A CELEBRATED manager is on the hunt for a new curiosity for his show. He is seeking to find a young married man whose wife can cook as well as his mother did. Twenty-six states hav been explored thus far without success.

HE slipped quietly in at the door; but, catching sight of an inquiring face over the stair rail, said: "Sorry so late, my dear. Couldn't get a car before." "So the cars were full, too!" said the lady. And further remarks were unnecessary.

SHINGLES were split by hailstones in Tennessee the other day, and women who are obliged to split kindlings in the morning are thinking seriously of moving to Tennessee, where the elements are more considerate than thoughtless husbands.

THERE are some girls so awfully nice that they will not dance with a fellow in a ball-room if his hair sticks up on the back of his head. The same girl may be seen at the age of thirty-one looking in seven different directions for a husband.

DOWN in Tama county, last week, a cat was born with two heads. It is lively and healthy, and can yowl with one mouth and waul with the other. If this breed of cats becomes common it will just set the millennium back about four thousand years.

I HAV often noticed that gallant young men walking with their sweethearts offer the left arm, while devoted married men with their wives offer the right arm. Why is this? Edith.—The left arm is nearest the heart; the right arm is nearest the pocketbook.

"DON'T you want a phonograph?" "A what?" "A phonograph. One of those things that talks back to you." "Oh, no; I hav had one of those things that talks back at me for the last fifteen years, and one's enough for any well regulated family." Exit phonographic agent.

IT is well enough to say with the poet that truth, wherever found, will draw forth homage from the pure heart; but just go and tell a woman once that her little boy is one of the dirtiest imps in town, and see how much homage you will draw from her heart, no matter how pure it may be.

IN one of his recent sermons Talmage says: "Encourage the newspaper men, for you know not with what annoyance they go through." That's a fact. One of the worst annoyances the newspaper has to contend with is opening forty different country newspapers, each having one of Talmage's sermons printed on the patent outside. That is one of the annoyances that drives journalists to profanity and beer.

"IT is a very bright paper," said Mrs. Jones, "but my husband does not like me to read it. It is so full of naughty witticisms, he says." "That's just what my husband says," said Mrs. Smith; "but he brings home a copy every week, having merely cut out the improper paragraphs. Of course I buy another copy." "Then he might as well spare himself the trouble of supplying a mutilated one." "Indeed, no; it is very useful. One cannot read an entire newspaper. I lay his copy over mine and read through the holes."

SCENE—A small lawn on Seneca street. Time noon. Personages—A parrot sunning itself on a porch beside its open cage door, and a strange dog wandering upon the lawn. The parrot speaks first. "Sick! Sick! Sick him!" The dog, with ears and tail erect, looks about for something on which to charge; he espies the parrot and an exciting scene ensues. From out of the confused mass of dog hair and parrot feathers comes the shrill cry, "Git out, you son of a gun! Git out!" Dog breaks for street. Parrot, after looking at herself from head to foot, gravely exclaims, "Polly, you talk too damn much."

IN THE SHADE.

The fat man,
With a big fan,
Lolls around on a rattan divan;
Every spot
Awful hot;
Doesn't care whether he dies or not.

The small boy
Full of joy,
Finds much fun without alloy;
In the stream
White limbs gleam;
To him life seems no more than a dream.

Boy sees man
On divan;
Wishes he could hav a fan
And lie at ease on a cool rattan.
Man sees boy
Splash with joy,
Wishes he could his time employ
Bobbing around in the stream so coy.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those sufferiug as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

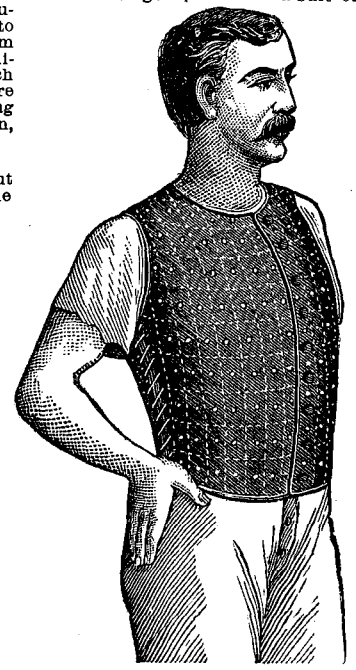
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.



This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon applicatiou at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5 00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

R-m-mber that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information,

Dr. L. Tenney,
Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 32. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, August 11, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A COLLEGE exchange says that a vicious college student being asked what he intended doing after graduating, replied, "Damfino; preach, I s'pose."

IF the clergyman would say amen when he got through with his ideas, sermons would be a good deal shorter than they are, but the trouble is that he keeps on talking.—Herald.

THE Crow Indians hav been caught putting rocks in the bales of hay they sell to the government. The day is not far distant when all Indians will be civilized enough to join the church.

"HE that is accessible to auricular vibration, let him not close the gates of his tympana," is the way a doctor of divinity rings the changes on "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

MOHAMMEDANS are excited by a belief that Mohammed, appearing to the guardian of his tomb at Mecca, has foretold the end of the world within 140 years. Incidents of the final destruction are to be a plague and a cyclone.

THE Rev. Charles W. Park was rejected by the Congregational council on account of his heretical views, but the congregation of a New Haven church indorsed his heterodoxy and hav installed him as their pastor.

A GREAT deal of religion runs in this way: "Bob, don't you want to get some of those apples over the fence?" "No, I don't." "Why not?" "Well, first because it's wrong to steal apples, and second because there's a big dog in the yard."

DURING a heavy thunderstorm in Chicago a few Sundays ago a church congregation was thrown into a panic by the vivid flashes of lightning, but order was quickly restored when a cool-headed deacon went and stood at a window and waved the collection basket at the lightning.

"HAV you ever tried the faith cure?" asked a long-haired, sallow-faced stranger, addressing a gentleman who sat behind him in a Brooklyn street car. "I hav," was the answer. "Do you believe in it?" "I do." "May I ask, then, of what were you cured?" "Certainly. I was cured of my faith."

THE daily Truth makes this pertinent inquiry: "Dr. Howard Crosby is severe on Swedenborg for his alleged immorality. But, pray, doctor, how many clericals all through Europe were during the first half of the eighteenth century mistressless? How about Luther and Henry the Eighth, who founded the Protestant church?"

MR. HANCOCK, a popular scripture reader in St. John's parish, Cardiff, and formerly a local non-conformist preacher, has caused some little sensation in South Wales by eloping with one of the young ladies of the choir. Mrs. Hancock is left in very destitute circumstances, and encumbered with debts contracted by her pious husband.

EIGHT colored persons, while attempting to swim the James River to attend a prayer-meeting, were drowned. Some of the neighbors of the deceased who went across the same river to steal watermelons got back safely in time to attend the funerals. It was hard for the preacher who conducted the services to explain how the thing happened that way.

A WILL of Archbishop Purcell, the Roman Catholic embezzler, has been found, dated Feb. 10, 1880. He bequeaths everything to his successor in the archbishopric. Probably the creditors of the deceased archbishop would be willing to let his successor hav all that he can lay hold of, if he would only pay the debts of the estate, which amount to about four millions of dollars.

THIS is the New York Herald's definition of religion. It will be noticed that it differs widely from Christianity: "Real religion, however, is remarkable for its power of endurance, not for its effervescing quality. A man has the gist of the whole matter in his heart when he can tell the truth in a trade and not sand his sugar. Religion is not excitement, either in whole or in part, but a steady pull, a long pull, and an honest pull. A man is a pretty bad specimen of what religion can produce if at the prayer-meeting he goes off like pop beer, all froth, and in his business the next day is as stale as ditch water. Unless a man can carry his religion behind the counter with him, he hasn't enough of it to do him any good."

A CHURCH scandal of a very strange kind has just disturbed the serenity of a parish in the diocese of Bath and Wells, in England. The living had been for many years in sequestration, and the vicar had long been absent, his duties being performed by a curate in charge. It was lately discovered that the vicar had died in Wales last September. Neither the bishop nor any other official had been informed of the vicar's decease, and the latter had continued to receive the emoluments, a dividend having been paid to the creditors as late as midsummer.

"RUTHERFORD," said Mrs. Hayes, as she finished the obituary column in the evening paper and glanced at a paragraph following the last death, "Rutherford, I see this paper says you were the nineteenth president of the United States." "So they say, ma'am." "But you know you wasn't, Rutherford." "Yes, ma'am." "You know that I ran these United States the four years you got the credit of it, Rutherford." "Yes, ma'am." Then Rutherford asked for a drink of crab-apple cider, and, being refused, went sadly out to weed the onion-bed.—Middletown Transcript.

THE Rev. Mr. Shields got into trouble through drunkenness in Detroit, and it came to light that he was once a prominent Baptist minister at Lima, N. Y., a fine scholar, and in every way a brilliant man. He graduated with distinction from the university and theological seminary at Rochester, and was socially a favorit, marrying into one of the most respected families of that city. But his religion failed to keep him out of scandal, and he lost his position, reputation, wife, and happiness. There was a disgraceful legal struggle over a child, which died during the litigation, and he finally sank into the obscurity of his own immoralities only to come to the surface in association with a cook whom he called his wife, and a death chamber doubly darkened by the shadow of a suspicion that he had slain her.

"SAM, you are getting pretty well along in years," said an Austin lawyer to an aged darkey. "Don't you feel afraid you'll die some day?" "No, boss, I isn't a bit afraid of death. It's how to scrub along and git a libbin' in this worl' what's boderin' me, heah! heah!" "Don't you think you will kinder wince when old man Death knocks at the door, and says, 'Come along, Sam, we hav got use for you in the other world?'" "Not a bit, boss, not a bit. I'll tell yer about dat. Did you eber go to der cirkus?" "Oh, yes." "Did, hay? Well, after de show was all ober an' yer was streamin' out of de front door of de canvas, didn't yer nebber feel sober like, an' as though yer'd spend yer fifty cents fer nuffin?" "Well, Sam, that about illustrates it." "Yes; well, when de icy han' ob death is laid on yer pulse, dat's jes' about how yer will feel. Yer'll feel as if you wanted ter go hum an' see de ole folks an' de chums what's gone afore, an' yer'll jist feel tired, an' out of sorts, an' all yer'll want is ter rest, jist rest. Dat's my theology, boss, an' I done got through carin' what the preachers say."—Texas Siftings.

THERE were only three dried-up, sunburnt, withered old parsons in the car when a commercial traveler came in. He slung his gripsack on a seat, shoved up his window with a bang, pulled a flask from his pocket, held it for a moment in a perpendicular position over his mouth, then, replacing it, drew out a "long nine" and began puffing vigorously, much to his satisfiction, but greatly to the disgust of the old fossils. "He don't know any better," growled one. "It's easy to see how he's been brought up," sneered another. The third dominie exclaimed in righteous indignation, "This isn't a smoking car, sir." With a surprised look the drummer suavely said, "Why, I'm sure I thought it was." "What reason had you for thinking so, sir?" angrily asked the homliest preacher. "Because I mistook you for a lot of old hams," said the worldly man; "but I apologize." Then he handed his flask to the nearest parson, who, after sampling its contents, passed it around. A peaceful spirit brooded over the scene, and before the train started the man with the bulging gripsack was initiating the brethren into the mysteries of railroad eucher.—Drake's Magazine.

THE latest slander on modern Spiritualism is the statement that the czar of Russia is a believer in that form of philosophy. His conversion is said to hav come about in this way: When the czar was in some perplexity respecting the measures to be taken for the safe conduct of the coronation ceremonies, it was suggested to him that he should "ask counsel of the spirits," at the hands of a lady medium who has been practicing for some years in London. The lady (who is an American) was accordingly sent for to St. Petersburg, and gave a "sitting" to the czar. The result of the seance was so satisfactory that the preparations for the coronation were hurried forward with greater energy than before, haste being recommended with much emphasis. Everything having passed off extremely well in Moscow, the czar had to come to think that "there may be something in Spiritualism after all;" and the lady on her part is said to be extremely well satisfied with the results of her visit to the Russian autocrat. The late czar, the father of the present one, was for the past ten years of his life a decided Spiritualist.

THIS story of clerical ill manners is told by the Torch of Liberty, of Wausau, Wis.: "The Torch tries its best to be charitable and kind to the gentlemen of the cloth, the well-dressed managers of matters between men and the powers behind the clouds, but it also insists that they shall behave themselvs somewhere near as well as other people, otherwise it will be an unavoidable duty to show them up. On Saturday last a prominent lady of this city—but who, by the way, has been absent for several months, a fact which accounts for the preacher not knowing who she was—went to the match game of base ball at the fair grounds. She had taken the precaution to hire a hack to take her to the grounds and bring her back, paying therefor in advance. Before the game was concluded, her baby being fretful, she concluded to return, and took a seat in the hack. Shortly after, a minister of the gospel came and looked in, but not saying a word to her, turned to the driver and requested that individual to "get down and order that lady out of the hack." The driver jumped to the ground, but upon seeing who was in his carriage, remarked that she had a perfect right there and could not be ejected. It is very probable that the preacher had hired the hack upon the same terms made by the lady, but we undertake to say that there was not a business man, a saloon-keeper, or a gambler on those grounds who would hav so far forgotten his manners as to request that a lady and her little babe should be ordered out of that carriage. After a good many unpleasant words, his saintship concluded to accept the situation, and placing his ladies in the hack sought other conveyance for himself. On the road home the ladies seemed to think it their duty to impress the first occupant with some idea of their importance, thus in a degree palliating the offense of the preacher. 'Oh, what a beautiful sky,' said one. 'Yes, indeed; it is perfectly lovely—just the color of my best dress,' remarked another. 'No, dear,' said the first; 'your best dress is Venetian lace.' And of such are the men and women who pretend to teach men in the precepts, and to be followers, of him who had not a Venetian lace or any other 'best dress,' nor did he hav a hack in which to ride. Selah!"

News of the Week.

THE King of Anam died on the 2d.

LETTER postage after October 1st will be two cents.

THE Brotherhood of Telegraphers called out the railroad operativs on strike last Monday.

THE contest for United States senator in New Hampshire ended on the 2d by the election of Austin F. Pike, Republican.

THE Rev. William L. Moore, of Jersey City, has just been mulcted in the sum of $100 for assault on a citizen of Katonah, N. J.

THE number of lives lost by the earthquake at the island town of Casamicciola, near Naples, is now estimated to hav been 8,000.

THE Rev. J. V. Given, of New Rochelle, was found guilty last week of charges of immorality brought against him by a female convert. He was suspended.

THERE were sixteen hundred deaths in Egypt from cholera last Saturday and Sunday. The number of victims to this scourge is placed at 16,000.

Two of the men who attempted highway robbery on the cashier of the Orange (N. J.) National Bank hav been sentenced to ten years' imprisonment at hard labor.

STEPS are being taken by the police of Trenton, N. J., to suppress the Salvation Army nuisance in that city. "Captain" Mary Joice has been lodged in jail.

THE son of a clergyman committed suicide at Fairview, N. J., on the 3d. If the father was of the Joe Cook stamp, there is no need of looking further for the cause of the son's self-destruction.

A MAN named Barker, living on Hurricane Creek, Arkansas, killed his daughter upon the announcement of her intention to marry a certain man against his wishes. The neighbors hanged Barker in his front door yard.

A FAMILY named Hick, residing in Charleston, Ill., having experienced more religion than they could stand, the father and mother attempted to crucify one of the younger children. The neighbors interfered, and the fanatics were placed under lock and key.

SIXTY-FIVE persons were seriously poisoned at Camden, S. C., on Friday night of last week from eating iced cream at a church festival. One young lady had died at last accounts and about fifteen others are not expected to liv. The symptoms are said to be those of arsenic poisoning.

THE Catholics of Lakeville, Conn., recently erected a seven-foot crucifix (representing Christ nailed to the cross) in front of their church. The Protestants of the town hav issued a protest, and the Romanists reply with a manifesto. It is thought that the crucifix will hav to go.

THERE is great excitement in Hungary over the result of the trial of the Jews accused of murdering Esther Solymosi. At Presburg a mob of anti-Semitics gathered and became so hostil in their demonstrations against the Jews that the authorities were compelled to order out the military to disperse them.

THE Rev. E. D. Taylor, of Autville, Ohio, procured the arrest of a liquor dealer, and when the parties met in court the publican hit the preacher a sharp blow on the head, breaking his spectacles. The minister returned the blow. A policeman restored order. Mr. Taylor was put out of court and the saloon keeper was fined ten dollars.

A GREAT demonstration was made in Trafalgar Square, London, on the 6th, the object of which was to protest against the exclusion of Charles Bradlaugh from the House of Commons. Thirty or forty thousand persons were present. The meeting passed a resolution favoring resistance of Mr. Bradlaugh to the mandate of the House of Commons. Copies of the resolution were sent to the queen, Mr. Gladstone, and to the speaker of the House.

Communications.

The Heywoods, Princeton, Worcester County, and Massachusetts.

I came to this place on the 5th of July to attend a three days' convention of the Union Reform League, a meeting which I hav attended for four consecutiv summers. The idea of this assemblage is the union in such matters as can be agreed upon, and in principle, of persons thinking diversely—a unity, therefore, in variety, such as characterizes the Evangelical Alliance, the Colloquium, the Pantarchy, the Higher Integration, etc., and which will more and more characterize the reformatory enterprises of the future. It is of the kind that you are illustrating in your effort to drive your somewhat balky span, the Materialists and the Spiritualists. The convention was, as usual, small, but representativ and earnest. It is not my present purpose, however, to giv any detail of its proceedings. I hav other matters to speak of, which I think will be more interesting to your readers.

For the third time Ezra H. Heywood is arrested and bound over to appear at court and take his trial for a pretended breach of the laws relating to obscenity. This time it is under the state laws that he is proceeded against, and his trial is to take place here in his own county, and not at Boston as before. There is consequently more of buzz and stir about the matter right here, and the whole affair is just now in a very interesting posture. Heretofore the public has been completely in the dark, and to a great extent indifferent, as to the nature of these prosecutions. That fact is beginning to change, at least in this neighborhood, and a generous disposition is beginning to manifest itself both among the religious people and the Infidels to see fair play, and to stand by Mr. and Mrs. Heywood to the extent of seeing that thev shall not be the victims of an unreasoning prejudice, or of a wicked conspiracy to persecute them. This reviving disposition toward fair play does not, except in a few instances, imply any approval of the distinctiv ideas, or of the startling and unusual methods of this original and peculiar brace of agitators and reformers, but purely and simply a demand for justice in behalf of persons for whom, as neighbors and fellow-townsmen, they are compelled to hav respect in all other particulars, except in this matter of their forms of utterance on the social question. It is therefore all the more honorable to the citizens of Princeton and Worcester county, inasmuch as they are required to conquer their own prejudices in behalf of justice.

Being here for a few weeks simply as a guest at this superb mountain rest, and having on my hands some leisure, a rare thing for me, I also find that I am somewhat of a notable just in this neighborhood, on a peculiar ground. My father was, from eighty to fifty years ago, the leading Baptist clergyman of this part of New England, distinguished for his learning, his piety, his humor, his social attractivness, and other numerous excellences which hav caused him to be remembered with a remarkable affection and veneration combined. This town of Princeton was one of the centers of his operations and influence, especially the eastern part of the town, which was prepared, as I suspect, very much by his preaching—he was a Liberal within the trammels of orthodoxy—to become as it subsequently did, a hot-bed of Garrisonian Abolitionism, and still later of Spiritualism, to the extinction of the Baptist church itself as such. The center of the town, where Mr. Heywood livs, has been always more conservativ, a stronghold of well-to-do respectability, orthodoxy, Whiggery, and Republicanism, but even here my father is remembered with great interest and respect.

Worcester county is called the heart of the commonwealth. It is the eastern central part of the state, and extends through the entire state, from the New Hampshire to the Connecticut line; is rich, proud of its traditions, picturesque, and influential. The county has two county seats—Worcester, a city of seventy thousand people, at the center, and Fitchburg, a city of far less pretensions, in the extreme northern part of the county. Princeton is between them, a town of rather small extent for actual population, including and being encroached upon territorially by the celebrated mountain, Wachusett, the companion mountain of Mcnadnock, seen in the distance, away to the north, in New Hampshire. But Princeton is in another sense a sort of county seat or small capital on its own account. Including the mountain, and being itself otherwise a magnificent jumble of elevated and fertil hills, topped with clusters of white houses and elegant residences, from which romantic homes there is a splendid and varied panorama, extending to and including at times a view of the shipping in Boston Harbor, forty or fifty miles distant, Princeton has in addition, of late years, become the favorit summer residence of wealthy citizens from every part of the country, and a group of large hotels of summer resort has sprung up to supply the demand. Princeton is, therefore, to Boston and Worcester, not wholly unlike what Long Branch is to New York and Brooklyn.

Among these hotels Mr. and Mrs. Heywood are the owners and proprietors, or, at all events, the occupants, under some embarrassments and encumbrance, of one called the Mountain Home, which was in very successful and prosperous operation, under their management, until its success was much disturbed by the scare of Mr. Heywood's repeated arrests. Since the first of these its fortunes hav been varied. Their house has been confessedly a model institution. Mrs. Heywood is the model housekeeper and manager, even among a group of women distinguished in the same way. They are about the most industrious couple I ever knew, laborious and devoted to the last degree. Unfortunately, however, for their worldly success, they hav ideas, convictions, and purposes outside the ordinary routine. They were both reared in the outspoken and audacious school of the radical Abolitionists, and when they grew to hav new views with regard to the sex question and the rearing of children, they carried their Abolitionistic boldness of speech into that subject. This frightened and repelled the conservativs on the one hand, and even more their own associates in the reformatory world, who were not ready to be committed to so much. But that "scare" is now beginning to be recovered from, and all parties are becoming more reasonable. Meantime they themselvs hav wholly refused to show the white feather, and hav stood bravely—nobody doubts that—to their colors, and bravery always commands admiration in the end.

Just now seems to be the turning-point in this battle. Their own immediate public (that of the Heywood's) are in a strange state of doubt in respect to them. Knowing them in all ways as most reputable people, as model housekeepers, them and their children as a model family, come of a highly honorable stock, and brought up among themselvs, and yet hopelessly given over to the habit of saying naughty words, and shocking the whole world by saying them, it is a puzzle and a wonder. Nobody can understand them, and yet withal the sympathies of their neighbors are steadily growing toward them. The same riddle is also unsolved the world over, so far as the facts of this case are known in any degree.

I hav had much opportunity to know Mr. and Mrs. Heywood, and I hav thought that, under the circumstances, it would be well enough that, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, I should make an attempt to interpret them, for around them the battle, if battle it is still to be, for free speech is destined in a great measure to center. They are the extreme case, and if they can be endured, anybody can.

Mr. Heywood can soon be disposed of. Though a rare man, he is not of an unknown type. He is an iconoclast—a hero of ideas, a pronounced, decided, and very distinctiv character. He plants himself radically on bottom principles; knows that the truth will in the end prevail; can afford to wait; if need be to suffer, and fights on. He is the man to lead a forlorn hope. He is the John Brown of the social revolution. He is the nearest repetition and survival of Garrison which Massachusetts has to show. He is a man of extraordinary intellectual ability, of profound convictions, of a defiant audacity in behalf of his ideas of right, of untiring industry and unflinching courage. The peroration to his defense in the last trial, before Judge Nelson and the jury, will pass into the English language as one of its classical and model instances of earnest eloquence.

Mrs. Heywood is a far more difficult character to analyze. I hav, I think, some expertness, aided by much experience, in judging of characters; but it has cost me no little study, with considerable opportunity, to understand Mrs. Heywood. To some extent I think I do understand her; and I will do what I can, in a short sketch, to make her known to your readers.

To speak rightly of Mrs. Heywood, I must go back for a little to notice her mother, some of whose strongest traits Mrs. Heywood has inherited. Mrs. Lucy M. Tilton, the mother, now more than seventy years of age, residing in Shawmut avenue, Boston, where I hav visited her, is a representativ character of a peculiar kind, well worthy of notice. She is the only person I hav ever met, except her daughter, Mrs. Heywood, distinctly and strongly imbued with the class of ideas I am about to mention, which she holds in the deepest sincerity, and can state with a cogent conversational energy peculiarly her own. She is, in a word, what the world would call a fanatical opponent of books, literature, schools, intellectual culture, and what the world deems the higher enlightenment of education. She is the apostle, on the other hand, of persistent, useful, skilled labor, and a model teacher of every part and parcel of female industry in the family, which she has faithfully taught to all her daughters. Born into the consciousness of being a person of more than ordinary nativ powers, and being deprived by conditions from acquiring book-learning in any large way, the supercilious assumption of superiority by the literary aristocracy burnt into her soul, until she came to hate the learned class as a set of snobs and tyrants, to denounce and degrade whom, in the comparison with the workers, is her special mission. She fairly hates the learned and their paraphernalia of books and bookishness, while, with an admirable inconsistency, she reads everything and keeps up with the times.

This revolt against the literary and "cultured" classes was inherited by Mrs. Heywood, and intensified and extended to other wrongs by her experience as a shop-girl in Worcester. Also deprived of the opportunity of a literary education adequate to the classic expression of the thoughts with which her observant and activ brain was teeming, she was noted and marked as a distinctiv and representativ girl, well known in the old antislavery ranks, and courted and sought for, for her bright, original, and daring manifestations of genius, in certain aristocratic quarters, where, however, her whole soul revolted against the superciliousness and pretension of superiority by the rich and "cultured" over the skilled workers, who knew more, it might be, in a day, of real, useful knowledge, than they would know in a life-time. Harassed, insulted, and worried, not so much on her own account as on behalf of the class she represents, her whole life settled down into the place of a devoted championship, first of the skilled labor class as a whole; secondly, of the women, especially of that class; and, finally, and most especially, of the working girl.

Being herself of that class, and being not of the grim order, but lively, jovial, and entertaining, she could venture on saying what she thought with the most unconventional audacity; and her bold denunciations of the snobbery around her only served to increase her attractivness and power within the two circles of life which she served, in a manner, to connect. But she always identified herself absolutely with the working girls, and refused to be accepted among the wealthy on any other terms. Under the circumstances of her life, with her quick observation, and the dead-in-earnestness of her character, notwithstanding the laugh on her lips, she could not fail to see that society was composed of two worlds, in another sense. She and others of her order were constantly approached and tempted or insulted by men of the so-called superior classes, whose private language and lives, as she came to know them, were utterly corrupt, but who were delicate and refined to the last degree in their public manifestations. While the act or conduct was utterly unchaste with those men, the society word was delightfully proper. She found also that this organized hypocrisy was as characteristic of the women of society as of the men. Her natural and inherited revolt against a pretended sanctity, propriety, and culture on the part of polished hypocrits, men and women, thus urged to its utmost, has culminated in her determination that folks shall hear openly talked about what in secret they dwell on as the staple of their lives; that the hypocrisy shall be exposed; that the inflated pretense of a virtue which does not exist shall be punctured and collapsed. This at least seems to be part, but not the whole, of the rationale of Mrs. Heywood's peculiar use of the English language.

She was then married to Mr. Heywood. His intense and continuous assault on social evils fell in with and doubtless still further tended to keep her in the same groove. Hence they are the peculiar and remarkable couple of radical reformers which we find them. They being such, the Comstock legislation, especially, outraged the ideas of Mrs. Heywood. She is also equally outraged at the public, and most of all with the women themselvs, for tolerating such legislation; and she is determined to rouse them to a sense of this enormity by soft words if they would do, but to arouse them by whatsoever means.

Add to all this that Mrs. Heywood is in a very high degree mediumistic, inspirational, and prophetic; that much of what she says and does merely flows through her as an instrument of some power which seems determined to break up the babyish and silly prudery of the people, and so to lead the way to the free discussion of all physiological and sex questions; although still, she is herself in full harmony with her inspirations. She is again utterly destitute of the sense of fear. She laughs and rollicks over what seems to the on-looker the edge of a fearful precipice. She would sooner see her beautiful home ruthlessly sacked, her children scattered, and be herself driven, as a drudge, into somebody's else kitchen, than she would back down an inch from her full claim to the right to say her full thought in her own words. Louise Michel is no more heroic than she is. She is vexed and annoyed to the last degree that it is Mr. Heywood who is attacked, and not herself. She regards this as her fight, as the woman's fight for freedom; and that any man should come between her and her own responsibility for her own acts is an impertinence. He and she are far more comrades in a common cause, where he annoys her by getting in the front, than they are the ordinary husband and wife. She threatens that if he gets in prison this time, she will never so much as visit him there, as she will not hav it understood that she is a mere wife, following the fate of a husband, instead of a free individual fighting her own battles. It is not at all, however, that she courts or even believes in martyrdom, but simply that she is willing to take the consequences of her own acts.

Folks must not mistake Mrs. Heywood for any weakling. While womanly, ladylike, prepossessing, and eminently domestic, she is hard as a flint when her rights, or the rights of those whom she represents, are invaded. The state of Massachusetts will not hav done with the matter if they get Heywood in prison. The woman will then hav to be disposed of. As to her domesticity, she prides herself upon being "the drudge," the "Bridget," the mere housewife, the working woman. She provides elegant parlor accommodations for her boarders, for the reformers, for other lady visitors, and keeps herself secluded in the basement, doing more work than three ordinary women, and training her children in the most laborious, painstaking, and housewifely artistic way. At the same time, her children excel all the children in town in learning, in demeanor, and in a certain reserved and distinguished bearing. They are welcome guests at all the neighboring houses, but seldom go. Mrs. Heywood herself is far less excluded from the society of the ladies of Princeton, who are very courteous to her, than they are from hers. She is a riddle to them. They cite her beautiful household, her children at the head in the schools and public exhibitions, their deportment, the chasteness and elegance of their dress, etc. And some of them hav the logic to quote the old book, that "we do not gather grapes from thorns nor figs from thistles," and to conclude that Mrs. Heywood can be no other, after all, than a very good woman. Still she says such awful things; and she is understood frankly and openly to teach her children all about those processes of nature which other parents conceal and religiously lie about. This belongs to a new and physiological order of education, which the public is not yet accustomed to; and on this score, the prejudice against Mrs. Heywood is intense among her neighbors, as it is elsewhere, though restrained and modified by all that they know of her personally. By the contrasts, Mr. Heywood is fairly popular; the people, especially the woman, strongly inclining to lay all the blame on Mrs. Heywood, against whom, notwithstanding the favorable points, there is as yet a strong current of condemnation.

Finding things in this state, and Mr. Heywood again in imminent danger, if nothing were done, of being convicted and got behind bars, it occurred to me that the point at what to begin the defense was here among his own neighbors. I consulted with some of the most prominent citizens, women and men, and the result was that two documents were drawn up, one a petition and protest, to whom it may concern, against this renewal of the old spirit of persecution in Massachusetts; and the other, nominally, a basis of a defense committee, of the citizens of Princeton, in the matter of Ezra H. Heywood. Finding, also, that my father's name was a powerful name to conjure with in this neighborhood, I took on myself the incipient labor of visiting families and soliciting the names of the citizens as subscribers to these documents. The result has been in three days about fifty names to each paper. Not more than one to five of those applied to refused to sign; and I believe that if the necessary labor were put into it, the citizens of the town at large would sign in that proportion. In every case I hav found Mr. Heywood, personally, spoken of in terms of high appreciation, apart from his "wrong-headed" views as an agitator.

It must not be understood, however, that the defense committee of Princeton implies what is meant by the term defense committee in New York. Whatever may grow out of the movement in the future, it is as yet merely a friendly and sympathetic expression of opinion in behalf of Mr. Heywood, and a protest against the present prosecution, as a manifestation of cruelty and persecution.

In the mean time, there is an undercurrent of agitation on this subject reaching out to Worcester, to Fitchburg, to Boston, and to the state of Massachusetts at large, which begins, in certain quarters, to hav possible political connections and effects, of which more may be heard hereafter.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

Princeton, Mass., July 24, 1883.

A Challenge to Slade.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As the discussion of Spiritualism is taking up a good deal of your space just now, I will not impose much upon you. Is it not strange that all of your correspondents, or nearly all, fall back upon Slade, and quote Zoellner as proof positiv that Slade's performances are genuin? The fact that Slade has been thoroughly exposed several times does not seem to shake their faith a particle. As we challenged him last fall, and he failed to respond, we do not expect to see him this time, either; but would request Mr. Perry and some of his other disciples to persuade Slade to be present at the Rochester convention, where he will hav a chance to face some of his Canadian friends, and to clear his character by producing some of the genuin manifestations (like those J. R. Perry has witnessed), instead of the mediocre sleight-of-hand performances he imposed on us as the work of spirits.

JOS. TEMPLETON.

Belleville, Ontario.

Spiritualism.

WHO IS AT THE OTHER END OF THE WIRES?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: THE TRUTH SEEKER well sustains it name—one so carefully chosen by our lamented D. M. Bennett, and so ably conducted by yourself. It is an intellectual arena in which any scientific, moral, or metaphysical thinker may in friendship contend with his neighbor on the ten thousand perplexities of life, and your surrounding witnesses receive the benefit of their struggles for truth.

In this view I take great interest in the pro and con contentions of many of its able contributors as the subject appears to them with their various skepticisms and beliefs, for we are absolutely living, or beginning to liv, in the "age of reason," and what human can expect a higher or nobler exercise?

Now it so happens I belong to the Spiritual wing of your subscribers, yet I am far from finding fault with those who differ from me in convictions, nor do I wonder at their skepticism. For in truth the study of Spiritualism is a very unsatisfactory one to pursue, inasmuch as it is impossible to control its ever-changing conditions. For instance, I might state a hundred events and bits of intelligence which might convey proof to me of an independent outside intelligence, but not being able to control condition would be unable to hav the phenomena repeated for the benefit of my inquiring friends. Every investigator must therefore hear and see for himself. Science, as brother T. B. Wakeman remarks truly, is knowledge systematized, and Spiritualism is fast becoming a science.

I began the study of mind and its various properties by witnessing and performing the astounding operations of mesmerism, under all its different titles, animal magnetism, biology, psychology, mind-reading, etc., and I must say its various phenomena in one sense ill prepared me for the still greater wonders of Spiritualism.

I confess that had I, like many of my fellow-investigators, stopped short in my experiments in mesmerism, perhaps I should hav thought that its peculiar phenomena covered the whole domain claimed for Spiritualism, trance, inspiration, rapping, tippings, and all, leaving a large margin for honest delusion. But no. I did see something in mesmerism which I am sure has escaped the attention of my co-investigators.

You will excuse my not stating facts in this line of wonderment, for what is the use of so doing, for here is our friend, T. Winter (who knows all about Spiritualism), who with one thrust of an icicle would transform me into an iceberg?

I cannot in heart censure the incredulity of thinkers, having in times past been a wool-dyed Materialist myself, and in one sense am one still, yet I find I must yield to the conviction of proof, and I find myself compelled to make a distinction.

I had many invitations to attend rapping seances before I took sufficient interest in the subject to attend one, not conceiving them fraudulent, but thought some yet undiscovered law in electricity would explain all. However, the year 1845 found me, with three friends equally skeptical, at a seance. The young lady medium, a modest, unpretentious country girl, a visitor at the house of her aunt, had found the phenomena of detonating sounds occasionally attending her person, and was told by others she was a spirit medium. After our entrance in the room and mixing with the company we were afraid we should be doomed to disappointment from the reluctance of the young lady to sit at the table. She remarked that for the space of three or four evenings past the responses and communications of the spirits, from being pious, religious, and evangelical, were of a very disorderly, wicked, and profane character; they would lie and abuse the company present. The reluctance of the young lady to sit at the table only hightened my curiosity. Six composed the number of persons in the company in a well-lighted room, including a Baptist deacon. We finally succeeded in overcoming her scruples. She placed her hands upon the top of the table, an ordinary mahogany tea-table. What was my surprise in its not only giving forth several detonating sounds, but also to commence sliding around among the company. At length the table stopped, but the rapping continued. I should explain that there had been a prior understanding between the medium and the intelligence operating through the detonations of the table like the following: One rap signified no; two raps uncertain, or don't know. In getting a communication it was necessary to run down the alphabet, and the communicating spirit would rap at the letter wanted to spell the word. To make short work, the spirit was asked to giv its name. It was spelled, "The devil."

Now, I assure you this was indeed singular to me, inasmuch as I was no believer in such a personage. But what confounded me was the intelligence indicated low, as it evidently was. Myself and friends were alike equally confounded. But recovering we asked, "Well, what do you want us to do?" "Go to hell," was the response. Here was more wonderment, to me at least. Recovering from our surprise I inquired, "Any particular one of the company?' It was spelled out instantly, "All."

"There," remarked the young lady, removing her hands from the table. "Aunt, I told you so," addressing the old lady, "we will hav nothing but such wicked communications all night if we set till midnight; nothing but the lowest slang and ribaldry."

My curiosity was fully aroused, the more so as it required the united persuasion of most of the present company to induce her to again place her hands on the table—which, however, she finally did, but with much reluctance.

The communications or replies were much in the same profane slang and vulgarity. Out of regard for the feelings of the young lady the company allowed her to remove her hands from the table, and then the rappings ceased, but recommenced on the floor and the back of her chair with redoubled loudness.

Here the deacon broke silence, addressing the elderly aunt, "Sister W.," he said, "it is either Satan or electricity, and I think we do wrong to pry into God's mysteries. At any rate, let us lay the sacred Bible on the table. If anything will bring a better influence, 'tis the inspired volume." And this was solemnly done. As before, the lady was induced to again place her hands upon the table top beside the Bible. The alphabet was again called, and the message received was, "To hell with the old book!"

Miss E., the medium, withdrew her hands from the table. And here the deacon proposed prayer—looking around into the faces of the company and the old lady in particular, but getting no reciprocal responsiv look of indorsement, he took his hat and timidly withdrew from the room.

"Gentlemen," the old lady remarked as we were parting, "I do not know what has drawn this strange influence around us to-night or lately; but devil, saint, or electricity, I'm determined to find out who's at the other end of the wires." The old lady was certainly a woman of spunk, and, profiting by her remark, I think I hav found out who is at the other end of the wires.

D. BRUCE.

Sabbath Laws.

I hav been waiting a long time to find in THE TRUTH SEEKER or Man some paper from an able pen elaborating the illegality and unconstitutionality of Sabbath laws. But on reading the circular of the National Reform Association, the spirit of the Lord said unto me, Write, and say something that may wake up an abler pen. The authors of the Declaration of Independence said, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are equally endowed with an inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

Mark the words—life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and they said these rights are self-evidently inalienable, and for their protection governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

There is a line, then, beyond which government itself has no right to go. That line lies between national and social rights. If law shall presume to go beyond protection and justice, it is right of the people to resist it, to alter or abolish it. Blackstone says: "This law of nations, being co-eval with mankind, is of course superior in obligation to any other. It is binding over all the globe, in all countries, and at all times; no human laws are of any validity if contrary to this, and such of them as are valid derive all their force and all their authority mediately or immediately from this original."

No man, no American, allows that government may take his life at will or pleasure. If not, will he consent that his liberty to cultivate his garden when and how he pleases can be wrested from him by law? Liberty and pursuit of happiness are as inalienable as life. and no law that would infringe is of any validity or force. Liberty means being free to choose our own business, and to work when and where we please, so long as we do not infract the rights of others.

The government can make no demand on us for one day in seven but for governmental purposes. The party that demands or asks for a day in seven is no part or party of the government. Jews might with equal propriety ask for the establishment of their Sabbath. The liberty to work, to recreate or amuse ourselvs on any day we please, is as much an inalienable right as to liv, eat, or sleep. Let it be known and read by all persons in the United States that whoever would estop us from doing on a Christian Sabbath what we may lawfully do on any other would rob us of a right which the Declaration pronounces inalienable, for the security of which governments are instituted. What shall we think of an organized clique or cliques who are not satisfied with being protected at our expense in person and property untaxed, but are willing to take from us what nature alone has given us, to secure which the preamble to the Constitution says, "We, the people of the United States, establish this Constitution?" If the Constitution sustains the doctrins of the Declaration, then whatever contravenes the doctrins of the Declaration is unconstitutional, and the Sabbath laws are evidently that.

A. B. PIKARD.

Canyon City, Col.

Col. Ingersoll on the Situation.

The Brooklyn Union has interviewed Robert G. Ingersoll, who criticises the Union's recent interviews with clergymen. He is at Long Beach, and having been shown back numbers of the Union containing articles by clergymen, who hav almost unanimously declared that the church is suffering very little from the skepticism of the day, and that the influence of the scientific writers, whose opinions are regarded as Atheistic or Infidel, is not great, and that the books of such writers are not read as much as some people think they are, was asked, "What is your opinion with regard to the subject?" Col. Ingersoll said:

"It is natural for a man to defend his business, to stand by his class, his caste, his creed. And I suppose this accounts for the ministers all saying that Infidelity is not on the increase. Only a few years ago science was superstition's hired man. The scientific men apologized for every fact they happened to find. With hat in hand they begged pardon of the parson for finding a fossil, and asked the forgivness of God for making any discovery in nature. Now religion is taking off its hat to science. Humboldt stands higher than all the apostles. Darwin has done more to change human thought than all the priests who hav existed. Where there was one Infidel twenty-five years ago there are one hundred now."

WORLDLINESS ON THE INCREASE.

"The ministers say, I believe, colonel, that worldliness is the greatest foe to the church, and admit that it is on the increase."

"What is worldliness? I suppose worldliness consists in paying attention to the affairs of this world; getting enjoyment out of this life; gratifying the senses, giving the ears music, the eyes painting and sculpture, the palate good food; cultivating the imagination; playing games of chance; adorning the person; developing the body; enriching the mind; investigating the facts by which we are surrounded; building homes; rocking cradles; thinking, working, inventing, buying, selling, hoping. All this, I suppose, is worldliness. These worldly people hav cleared the forests, plowed the land, built the cities, the steamships, the telegraphs, and hav produced all there is of worth and wonder in the world. Yet the preachers denounce them. Were it not for worldly people, how would the preachers get along? Who would build the churches? Who would fill the contribution boxes and plates, and who (most serious of all questions) would pay the salaries? I believe in the new firm of Health & Heresy, rather than the old partnership of Disease & Divinity, doing business at the old sign of the skull and crossbones. Some of the ministers that you hav interviewed, or at least one of them, tells us the cure for worldliness. He says that God is sending fires, and cyclones, and things of that character, for the purpose of making people spiritual; of calling their attention to the fact that everything in this world is of a transitory nature. The clergy hav always had great faith in famin, in affliction, in pestilence. They know that a man is a thousand times more apt to thank God for a crust or a crumb than for a banquet. They know that prosperity has the same effect on the average Christian that thick soup has, according to Bumble, on the English pauper—'It makes 'em impudent.' The devil made a mistake in not doubling Job's property, instead of leaving him a pauper. In prosperity, the ministers think, we forget death and are too happy. In the arms of those we love, the dogma of eternal fire is, for the moment, forgotten. According to the ministers, God kills our children in order that we may not forget him. They imagin that the man who goes into Dakota, cultivates the soil, and rears for himself a little home, is getting too 'worldly;' and so God starts a cyclone to scatter his home and the limbs of his wife and children upon the desolate plains, and the ministers in Brooklyn say this is done because we are getting too 'worldly.' They think we should be more 'spiritual;' that is to say, willing to liv upon the labor of others; willing to ask alms, saying in the mean time, 'It is more blessed to giv than to receive.' If this is so, why not giv the money back? 'Spiritual' people are those who eat oatmeal and prunes, hav great confidence in dried apples, read Cowper's 'Task,' and Pollock's 'Course of Time,' laugh at the jokes in Harper's Monthly, wear clothes shiny at the knees and elbows, and call all that has elevated the world 'beggarly elements.'"

SUBSTITUTES FOR CHURCHES.

"You hav stated your objections to the churches—what would you hav to take their place?"

"There was a time when men had to meet together for the purpose of being told the law. This was before printing, and for hundreds and hundreds of years most people depended for their information on what they heard. The ear was the avenue to the brain. There was a time, of course, when Freemasonry was necessary, so that a man could carry, not only all over his own country, but to another, a certificate that he was a gentleman; that he was an honest man. There was a time, and it was necessary, for the people to assemble. They had no books, no papers, no way of reaching each other. But now all that is changed. The daily press givs you the happenings of the world. The libraries giv you the thoughts of the greatest and best. Every family of moderate means can command the principal sources of information. There is no necessity for going to the church and hearing the same story forever. Let the minister write what he wishes to say. Let him publish it. If it is worth buying, people will read it. It is hardly fair to get them in a church in the name of duty, and then inflict upon them a sermon that under no circumstances they would read.

"I do not think the ministers of to-day more intellectual than they were a hundred years ago; that is, I do not think they hav greater brain capacity, but I think, on the average, the congregations hav a high amount. The amelioration of orthodox Christianity is not by the intelligence in the pulpit, but by the brain in the pews. Another thing: One hundred years ago the church had intellectual honors to bestow. The pulpit opened a career. Not so now. There are too many avenues to distinction and wealth—too much 'worldliness.' The best minds do not go into the pulpit. Martyrs had rather be burnt than laughed at. Most ministers of to-day are not naturally adapted to other professions promising eminence. There are some great exceptions, but these exceptions are the ministers nearest Infidels. Theodore Parker was a great man. Henry Ward Beecher is a great man—not the most consistent man in the world—but he is certainly a man of mark, a remarkable genius."

MORAL INSTRUCTION.

"How would you convey moral instruction from youth up, and what kind of instruction would you giv?"

"I regard Christianity as a failure. Now, then, what is Christianity? I do not include in the word 'Christianity' the average morality of the world, or the morality taught in all systems of religion—that is, as distinctiv Christianity. Christianity is this: A belief in the inspiration of the scriptures, the atonement, the life, death, and resurrection of Christ, an eternal reward for the believers in Christ and eternal punishment for the rest of us. Now, take from Christianity its miracles, its absurdities of the atonement and fall of man, and the inspiration of the scriptures, and I hav no objection to it as I understand it. I believe, in the main, in the Christianity which I suppose Christ taught, that is, in kindness, gentleness, forgivness. I do not believe in loving enemies; I hav pretty hard work to love my friends. Neither do I believe in revenge. No man can afford to keep the viper of revenge in his heart. But I believe in justice, in self-defense. Christianity—that is, the miraculous part—must be abandoned. As to morality—morality is born of the instinct of self-preservation. If man could not suffer, the word 'conscience' never would hav passed his lips. Self-preservation makes larceny a crime. Murder will be regarded as a bad thing as long as a majority object to being murdered. Morality does not come from the clouds; it is born of human want and human experience."

THE CHIEF END OF MAN.

"The shorter catechism, colonel, you may remember, says that 'man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy him forever.' What is your idea of the chief end of man?"

"It has always seemed a little curious to me that joy should be held in such contempt here, and yet promised hereafter as an eternal reward. Why not be happy here, as well as in heaven? Why not hav joy here? Why not go to heaven now—that is, to-day? Why not enjoy the sunshine of this world, and all there is of good in it? It is bad enough; so bad that I do not believe it was ever created by a beneficent Deity; but what little good there is in it, why not hav it? Neither do I believe that it is the end of man to glorify God. How can the infinit be glorified? Does he wish for reputation? He has no equals, no superiors. How can he hav what we call reputation? How can he achieve what we call glory? Why should he wish the flattery of the average Presbyterian? What good will it do him to know that his course has been approved of by the Methodist Episcopal church? What does he care, even, for the religious weeklies, or the presidents of religious colleges? I do not see how we can help God or hurt him If there be an infinit being, certainly nothing we can do can in any way affect him. We can affect each other, and therefore man should be careful not to sin against man. For that reason I hav said, a hundred times, injustice is the only blasphemy. If there be a heaven, I want to associate there with the ones who had loved me here. I might not like the angels, and the angels might not like me. I want to find old friends. I do not care to associate with the infinit; there could be no freedom in such society. I suppose I am not 'spiritual' enough, and am somewhat touched with 'worldliness.' It seems to me that everybody ought to be honest enough to say about the infinit, 'I know nothing;' of eternal joy, 'I hav no conception;' about another world, 'I know nothing.' At the same time I am not attacking anybody for believing in immortality. The more a man can hope, and the less he can fear, the better. I hav done what I could to drive from the human heart the shadow of eternal pain. I want to put out the fires of an ignorant and revengeful hell."

Organization of Liberals.

From the Radical Review.

The subject of the organization of Liberals has been repeatedly discussed in these columns. On such occasions we hav invariably expressed ourselvs as in favor of organization. We hav repeatedly urged that the isolated Liberals of every community unite in an association for the purpose of advancing their cause among their fellow-citizens at large by means of regular and systematic lectures, and of rearing their children in the light of the new spirit that has dawned upon their minds. We hav insisted on this latter point with especial emphasis as one of the utmost importance. Nowadays many Liberals allow their children to grow up under the baneful influences of what they consider a fundamentally false religion without any compunctions of conscience whatever. Such delinquency on the part of parents toward their children is criminal. No intelligent parents who hav the welfare of their children at heart will so neglect them. In advocating the organization of Liberals for the two-fold purpose of (1) advancing their ideal interests among the adults in every community, and of (2) teaching the young "what is true that they may do what is right," we hav frequently expressed the belief that there must not be too great a diversity of opinion among those who so unite in regard to fundamental questions. The term Liberal is a very vague one. There are Liberals and Liberals. There are Liberals known as Materialists; there are Liberals known as Spiritualists; and there are even Christians who profess to be Liberals. All of them possess some of the ingredients of Liberalism; we cannot deny this. We hav known Unitarian ministers take upon themselvs the defense of Robert Ingersoll against orthodox Christians, and it is not an uncommon spectacle to behold Spiritualists in the front ranks among the soldiers of liberty. We know these things to be facts, and need not be informed on them. And yet we would deprecate the union of these various shades of Liberals for the purpose of developing and perfecting constructiv Liberalism, and building it a home in the blood and bone and tissue of the people. We would deprecate such union not from any lack of respect toward those who view fundamental questions differently than we do, but from the conviction that such difference of opinion will inevitably prove fatal to the high aims of the contemplated Liberal organization.

Our deprecatory remarks hav been construed as having special reference to the Liberal Leagues, and the consequence is that we are receiving letters from Spiritualistic readers full of bitter invectivs against our alleged bigotry. We cannot but ignore all missivs conceived in such spirit. A notable exception is the communication by Mr. A. B. Bradford which we print in this issue. We publish it most cheerfully, first, because the writer joins issue with us in a most courteous manner, and second, because, aside from the point in controversy, it contains so much that is true anent the state of Liberalism in this country that it deserves to be widely circulated and read.

We admit that there is nothing in the constitution of the National Liberal League, or the "Nine Demands of Liberalism," to exclude Spiritualists, or to prevent their co-operation with Materialists so far as the secularization of the state is concerned. There is nothing to prevent a Catholic, or a member of some other Christian denomination, from co-operating with the Liberal Leaguers in the prosecution of their great aims. As a matter of fact, Materialists, Spiritualists, and Christians do co-operate in the work of secularizing the state, though the number of the latter who do so openly is limited; still many Christians, and some even of the orthodox stripe, hav declared themselvs in favor of a secular state. Of course, we doubt their consistency as Christians, just as we are not quite sure that Spiritualists, with their stultifying animistic superstition, would side with justice in state affairs if they were in the majority, instead of being in the minority, and exposed to the bitter antagonism of the churches for dissenting from some of the minor requirements of their outworn creeds. But be this as it may, it would be the greatest folly imaginable in the Liberal Leaguers to refuse or reject the aid of any class of people who sympathize, from whatever motivs, with their general aim—the secularization of the state. Whatever their differences of opinion in regard to metaphysical matters, it is plain that all persons may unite in the prosecution of the political object of the National Liberal League who believe in that object. On this point we make no quarrel with anybody.

The religious or missionary object of the National Liberal League, as Mr. Bradford terms it, is, unless we are greatly mistaken, entirely extra-constitutional. We are not certain whether the League has officially and directly shouldered it. Nevertheless, this object, as described by our critic, is a most important one, and one that ought to be pursued by the Liberals of the country in an organized capacity. It embraces much of the work that we would hav the Liberal organization so often advocated in these columns, and to which special reference is made above, undertake. Almost every word that Mr. Bradford says on this subject is true. But while he makes implacable warfare on the Christian superstition he would put in its place a superstition not less offensiv in the sight of all sane-minded men. Spiritualism is at best a delusion—as accepted by most people, it is downright superstition. It is a most singular spectacle to behold Spiritualists warring against Christianity. They appear to us in the light of persons who see the mote in their neighbor's eye, but not the beam in their own. We grant that Spiritualism is a step in advance of Christianity, rejecting, as it does, some of the latter's grossly immoral doctrins. It is a stepping-stone to a better order of things. As dissolvents of the old Christian faith, Spiritualists may accomplish some good; as architects of a new, of a nobler and a truer faith—of the faith in the self-sovereignty of human reason and the latent potentialities of man to accomplish his salvation here and now—as architects of such a faith, Spiritualists must necessarily prove a lamentable failure. Animism is the intrinsic defect of Spiritualism, and we may rest assured that its extrinsic record will be accordingly. We cannot take up a Spiritualistic paper but it contains an account or a number of accounts of spirit communications from the summer-land. These communications are invariably of such a character that we should discredit their integrity under all circumstances. They are an insult to the intelligence of our age. We hav little confidence in the reformatory capacity of men who publish, and of men who accept, these spirit communications in good faith. The best we can say of Spiritualists is that they are deluded. We know there are a number of men of science who hav espoused Spiritualism. But that is no proof of its truth. No less a man than Lord Bacon denounced the Copernican theory in his time, but that was no proof of the truth of the Ptolemaic theory which the broad-browed Verulam accepted. In the whole domain of science there is not one fact to substantiate Spiritualism—to substantiate the theory that what we term mind survives the dissolution of the brain.

Regarding Spiritualism as essentially false, we can not be blamed for refusing to co-operate with its adherents in the constructiv work of Liberalism. We do not pretend to hav penetrated the secrets of nature; but ignorant as we are of everything that lies beyond the reach of our senses and reasoning faculties, we must be permitted to reject Spiritualism in toto. We would not deny the reality of all the phenomena on which Spiritualism is built, but we refuse assent to their Spiritualistic explanation. We who look upon the universe as one grand whole, self-existent, and governed by its own immutable, eternal laws, and upon ourselvs as a part of it; who hav never had any evidence of the existence of disembodied spirits frolicking in the summer-land beyond; whom the deductions of physiological psychology compel to the acceptance of the view that intelligence is manifested only through the brain of man and the lower animals; who gather from the established laws of heredity that this brain with its ever increasing potentialities is transmitted from generation to generation in an ever improved condition, concentrating within itself the accumulated experiences and the real life of all who hav gone before; who know that if we are to liv after death it cannot be save in our children—we who accept no other immortality than that of the race and humanity must be pardoned for having little patience with the absolutely childish mockeries of modern Spiritualism. If this is bigotry, make the most of it. We would not deny Spiritualists a single right that we claim for ourselvs; we should even vindicate them the right to preach their peculiar doctrins against the whole world; but we must be allowed to dissent from their views of life, to express our dissent, and to deprecate any union of them with persons who hold views contradictory to their own.

Freethinkers' Meeting at Carthage, N. Y.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A very interesting, and I think profitable, three-days' Freethinkers' meeting closed here last evening. This is an old conservativ orthodox town, and I understand that this is the first time that an Infidel meeting of any kind was ever held here. But there are a few brave, outspoken Freethinkers in this section who are entitled to be called Liberals. They contributed the expenses, amounting to over $100, out of their own pockets, without making any appeals to the people who were in attendance at the meetings for contributions. The two most activ men in getting up the meeting were M. E. Rose and David Andres. I wish we had two such energetic men in every town in the state.

They hav a most beautiful grove here, in which the meetings were held when the weather permitted, but when too inclement they were held in the Opera House. The speakers were J. H. Burnham, of Michigan; Mrs. H. S. Lake and W. F. Peck, now of Salem, Ohio; Dr. C. Fred. Farlin, of Rochester, N. Y.; Miss Annie Hinman, of Connecticut, and the writer. Prof. Peck provided the vocal and instrumental music, and also gave one of the best lectures delivered on the occasion.

Ex-Rev. Burnham delivered two very able and comprehensiv addresses, the only fault that could be found with them being that they were a little too profound for some of the audience. Mrs. Lake also lectured twice, and with such eloquence and effect that the orthodox people present were compelled to admit that she was one of the best female speakers they ever heard. Dr. Farlin gave a very polished address with good effect, and Miss Hinman, who was accidentally present and a stranger to most persons in attendance, delighted all who listened to her short speech, Sunday afternoon.

The conferences held at every session added greatly to the interest of the meetings, and we feel sure this gathering will result in much good to the Freethought movement. Such conventions should be held in every county of the state. I think there will be a large delegation from this section of the state at the Rochester convention. H. L. Green.

Carthage, N. Y., July 30th.

Notes.

Mr. Bailey's little Liberal, published at Nashville, Tenn., has been enlarged considerably at the beginning of the second volume. It is a bright and winning sheet, creditable alike to its editor and the cause of Liberalism, and its enlargement is its improvement.

We acknowledge the courtesy of A. Chavannes in publishing The Truth Seeker card in his Sociologist. Such spontaneous kindnesses are the best kind, and show that Mr. Chavannes is no mere theorist in devoting his journal "to the increase of knowledge of the natural laws that control human happiness."

Mr. Mendum, of the Investigator, is taking a vacation from his arduous labors away out in Colorado, and Brother Seaver is holding the fort in Boston. Mr. Mendum desires a good rest, and he is wise in taking it. Although his years sit lightly upon him, he is approaching the age when he needs to favor himself.

In the course of his sermon last Sunday, the Rev. G. W. Samson, of this city, said: "I spent five years in investigating this question, and I am satisfied that the wines of the Bible were not intoxicating." Mr. Samson may be right, but if so it would be interesting to know what it was that had such a paralyzing effect on Noah during his post-diluvian spree.

Secretary Folger should be given the charge of a Sunday-school. When President Arthur had made arrangements to go on a vacation, beginning his journey on Sunday, Folger declined to accompany him. He would not travel on the Sabbath, and the president waited for Monday. It will be remembered that Folger ran for governor of New York in 1882. The Democratic vote saved the state from the curse of a religious fanatic for its chief executiv.

Senor Barca, rich, learned, eminent, extravagant, with an accomplished wife and lovely daughter, minister plenipotentiary to this country from Spain since 1881, takes his own life at the Albemarle Hotel! "There be many that say, Who will show us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us."—Advocate.

Exactly. But if the Lord had lifted up the light of his countenance upon Mr. Barca before the senor had committed suicide, it would hav been considerably more effectiv than any subsequent lifting can possibly be. Mr. Barca was a Catholic.

Mr. Lincoln, secretary of war, has denied the Catholics the privilege of erecting a chapel on the Presidio Reservation, giving as one of his reasons that great trouble has been caused by the granting of such privileges. "In one case," he says, "what appears to hav been originally a harmless license has now been expanded into a claim for a whole military reservation and all the buildings that the government has put on it at an expense of more than $300,000." Can it be possible that the church of Christ is a thief that tried to steal $300,000 worth of property? Secretary Lincoln certainly insinuates as much—and, come to think of it, it is in keeping with her record.

A Western Roman Catholic bishop proposes to fit up a steamboat as a church for the use of the more inaccessible coast Indians, and to call it Christopher. Thus does the church honor the man who, when he made the discovery which made his name famous, she opposed with all her vast power. Columbus said the earth was round, and that by sailing due west he would discover a new continent. The church retorted that no new continent was mentioned in the Bible, therefore it did not exist, and Columbus's efforts were heretical. The church would now steal this honor of discovery, and pass it to her credit. "It won't do," as Col. Ingersoll sometimes remarks.

The practical results of the vote on the Concordat in the French Parliamentary Commission, according to the London Tablet's Paris correspondence, can be thus summed up: "The state is henceforth empowered to expel the great seminaries from the houses and property granted by the state, and which they hav occupied from their foundation to the present day; to suppress the stipends of the clergy and abolish definitivly those of the canons; to expel bishops and archbishops from their residences; to suppress the scholarships of all the seminaries." France is making long strides toward a total disabling of the church, but no nation more than she has felt the humiliating and disastrous consequences of a union of church and state, which always means the subordination of the latter to ecclesiastics who work only for the attainment their own iniquitous purposes. The church is responsible for those terrible days of blood and fire which are yet a reproach to France, and the present rulers of that country do not seem likely to soon forget it.

It is ludicrous to see the "state of mind" into which the publishing of Sunday papers has thrown the Methodists. Their organ denounces it as wicked and ungodly, and a correspondent wastes over a column in considering the great guilt of reading or buying them. Being fully convinced himself that "Sunday papers are a great evil," he wants to know how he can avail himself of their benefits without committing the sin of buying them. It troubles him to know whether if he has his newsman reserve them till Monday he is not as guilty as though he had them delivered Sunday. One gentleman of his acquaintance held out for years against the awful desecration of Sunday papers, but now he buys them "to read on Monday." Is the man clear or is he a heinous sinner? Further along, however, he clears the matter up, and let the wicked note how he does it! "I never buy a Sunday paper," he says, "on any day of the week, and I never read one on Sunday. I do not abstain from reading a Sunday paper occasionally handed to me by a friend during the week." That is, he borrows it, and lets the sin rest vicariously upon the friend who bought it! Happy thought, and strictly in keeping with the Christian scheme of salvation!

On Sunday, July 22d, a brakeman named Custer, on the New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio railroad, was run over and killed. His friends lived in Meadville, Pa., and his body was taken for burial to that place, where his father owned a lot in the cemetery. The local priest, however, refused to officiate at the funeral ceremonies, and while the friends of the dead man were administering the last rites, the holy father appeared and announced that the interment could not lake place in the Catholic cemetery, giving as a reason the fact that the brakeman had not confessed during the last year. The burial was proceeded with, however, the grave being dug but three feet deep, and so near to the wall of the cemetery that one of the pall-bearers fell into it while lowering the body. These facts are furnished us by a correspondent, who vouches for their accuracy. It is a wrong state of affairs when the right of sepulture can be denied the dead by a priest, and when a man must be buried like a dog simply because he has neglected the absurd mummery of the confessional. Whether or not the body of poor Custer will be allowed to rest where his friends hav so inadequately buried it, remains to be seen. The Catholic ghouls hav the legal right, we believe, to unearth it.

The trial of the ten Jews at Nyreghhaza, Hungary, who were charged with murdering a Christian girl in order to procure her blood to mix in the passover feast, has been concluded, and a verdict of not guilty was returned. This trial goes to show, further than anything else in modern times, to what extremes persons duly filled with the love of God will go in the persecution of their fellow-men. The instigators and prosecutors in the case were Christians; the defendants, as before stated, were Jews. Extraordinary efforts and the most inhuman tortures were resorted to to extort confession from the accused. One prisoner was subjected to the bastinado and thumbscrew. A second was assaulted in court by the examining judge, forced to drink excessiv quantities of cold water, and the constable was directed to beat him until a confession was procured. Others were bound, beaten, placed in solitary confinement, and otherwise maltreated by the Christians who, being commanded to love their enemies, find pleasure in abusing those who hav never injured them. Popular feeling, we are told, was for a long time against the accused parties, and witnesses for the defense were openly threatened; but as the instigators of the prosecution were one after another shown to be liars, public opinion changed to sympathy for the Jews. The prosecution suddenly relinquished its zeal, and left the matter to the state, when an acquittal was speedily procured. This was a well-proven case of conspiracy by the members of one religious sect against those of another. It was not the first by any means, and, while Christianity can prevent, it will not be the last.

On another page we giv the reply of the Radical Review to Mr. Bradford's criticism of the editor's fling at the Rochester Convention and his unwillingness to work with Spiritualists or to allow them to work with him on an equality. He shows his generosity and great width of experience in admitting that "it is not an uncommon spectacle to behold Spiritualists in the front ranks among the soldiers of liberty." This statement would imply that Spiritualists generally are not working for further religious liberty, but that some of them occasionally do. This is exactly the reverse of the case. We believe that all except those who denominate themselvs "Christian Spiritualists" (a very small portion, by the way) are ardent and earnest advocates of reform in our laws relating to church matters. We do not care to follow Mr. Schumm further in his tergiversation; for the whole matter hinges here and he only occasionally gets nearer the truth as he proceeds. After all his excuses the bald fact remains that he does not want Spiritualists to work with him, and he certainly will not work with them. This, in our opinion, is a very narrow view, and, as we said before, we are sorry Mr. Schumm takes it, because it will hav a tendency to widen the breach a few misguided sectarian Spiritualists hav made. "Close up the ranks!" should be the order, instead of "Every man for himself." The Review doubts, in the issue of the 28th ult., whether Haeckel and Buchner would work with Spiritualists, we having mentioned those two as representativs of German scholarship whom we admired. We assure the Review that they do so work. They are both activ members of the International Federation of Freethinkers which is about to meet at Amsterdam, and unless that body has changed since Mr. Bennett was a delegate thereto, there will be no question as to the belief of the members in a future life. No Spiritualist who avows himself in sympathy with the association will be rejected, and he will not be taunted with being a devotee of superstition. The speaking for these gentlemen by the Review is a gratuitous assumption.

Some Bible Criticisms.

We hav seen partially the necessity of assailing this priestcraft now threatening to crush the nation in its anaconda folds, and poison to death the spirit of liberty with its baleful breath. It has attacked our institutions in their most vital parts. We must destroy it or be destroyed. There is but one way to do this, and that is by convincing the people it is false; for so long as they believe it to be true they will rest their souls' salvation on it, careless of what happens to their temporal interests. Convince them it will destroy their liberties—"Never mind," they will think, "so it saves our souls."

Fortunately, the adversary has given us a tremendous advantage, and exercised most admirable liberality in throwing out rope enough wherewith it may be hanged. Diplomatists say brevity is always safest, and politicians know that short platforms are most successful. But the Christians hav most unwisely founded their whole system upon a volume of such monstrous proportions that it stands among books as Goliath among men—as Himalaya among mountains—"the holy Bible, book divine; precious treasure, thou art mine!" And they hav made it certain, beyond all peradventure, that no one shall ever complain of its scarcity or be doubtful of their meaning, for they hav literally, "for a fact," flooded the world with the books; and they hav assured us that every line and word in them is of God himself. Thus, to quote one out of millions of sayings, Burgon declares "every word and line is infallible" (see Colenso, vol. i, p. 46). Rather risky, is it not, of a book so voluminous not one in a million of its believers is likely to be familiar with every verse, and so catholic that it treats or hints of every imaginable human condition and institution?

Setting out with a history of creation, and proceeding with that of a race of men, it ends with the origin, history, and nature of a new religion, with the sayings of its founder, prophets, and apostles. This new religion, as Paine says, begins with a dream and ends with a murder. The first thought that would strike a reflecting person on reading it is that if the writers are men, they will naturally show a lively faith in the science and learning of their times, and would not shock the prejudices of their age on affairs foreign to their record; but that if the author is a God, or even a genuin human clairvoyant, he will either utter some shocking heresies, some truths that future ages must ascertain, or dark sayings, which, in the light of later experience, would strike the minds of men with an irresistibly convincing power. To illustrate my meaning, let me say that a genuin prophecy would use expressions no mortal could possibly comprehend at the time, but which, after fulfilment, must strike every brain with astounding conviction. For instance, there are certain verses ascribed to the famous Nostradamus, which, if uttered at the time alleged, no person then could hav understood; yet, after their fulfilment, how plain! how striking! The most dark and senseless allusions glow the brightest with sense. There are some verses, pretended to hav been first published in 1789, of a prophetic nature. Speaking of these times among several lines, take the following:

> "Men shall speak in brazen ears,
> That shall be tongues in after years.
> Words spoken shall be sent by post,
> And not a syllable be lost.
> Ghosts shall guide the plow; and rain
> And snow shall fall as men ordain.
> The commonest of stone or stick,
> Other shall be than long, broad, thick."

Now, suppose that we had heard those words four years ago? What sense would the lines—

> "Men shall speak in brazen ears,
> That shall be tongues in after years."

convey to any one? Yet, since the phonograph and telephone hav been invented, how wonderfully striking! What sense to us now hav those lines about the stone or stick? Yet it is possible that ere long they may strike us as a common truth.

Had these lines and the others been published some ten years ago, they would settle the question of prophecy whether it is possible. In the whole scripture there is not one single prophecy that has in the manner suggested the slightest force. Take that most important one of all, that one which biblical scholars and some learned men lay so much stress upon: the alleged prediction of Jesus Christ by Isaiah. Of this even the great, learned, and candid Sir W. Jones declared it was to him proof conclusiv of the divine inspiration of scripture, so careless are the most learned men when they investigate credulously. (See Mat. i, 23, and Isaiah vii, viii, and ix.)

Remember the age in which the O. T. prophecies were delivered—an age of profound ignorance as to physical science, but one of dawning inquiry. Every allusion to the heavens and earth is made in the spirit of most profound ignorance. The writers are as ignorant of geography, astronomy, geology, natural philosophy, chemistry, philology, anatomy (and plainly manifest their ignorance), as are the Sioux Indians to-day. Suppose a man were to write a book for the Sioux, or for some ignorant children, a book for their moral improvement, adapted to their understandings—a book he knew would be for a guide for them and their remotest descendants—on their belief in which depended their temporal and eternal welfare? Suppose, knowingly, he alluded to every fact in art, science, or nature, in such a way as to confirm them in their errors and to make it reasonably certain those Sioux or children must come in time to despise his ignorance or mistakes. What sort of an excuse would that of his apologists be if hereafter they said, "Oh, the book was not intended to instruct you in science." "True," might their descendants reply in scorn, "but was it intended to confirm us in our errors? to stand as a stumbling-block of authority for ages against the progress of learning?"

A few hints of the truth would not only hav furthered the march of improvement for centuries, but must, even at this day, hav effected more toward confirming mankind in the true faith, as they call it, than all the prophecies and martyrdoms of the whole glorious companies of the apostles, without excepting even the sacrifice of Christ himself. The object of revelation must be to enlighten and convince, not darken and disgust. Positivly if science and progress are benefits, then this Bible has been a curse to the race of man. As each science has in turn been developed and each discovery been announced, they hav been opposed by "Thus saith the Lord;" nay, morality, decency, and good government, as we understand them, hav all been opposed by it.

"It seems that the world is round," says science.

"Nay, 'tis flat, for the Bible speaks of the ends of the earth," says scripture.

"Day and night proceed from the revolution of the sun."

"Not so, for Joshua commanded the sun to stand."

"The system of the universe is so orderly arranged that the slightest displacement of a planet would cause——"

"A wicked heresy. The sun itself once moved backward and caused the shadow on Ahab's dial to move."

"The whole system is perfectly arranged, and the orbs are held in place by gravity."

"Pooh! wretch! do you not know that he holdeth them in the hollow?" etc

"The sun is the source of all light and heat."

"You are certainly wrong, for light existed before the sun, as we are told in Genesis.

"But for the sun there could be no vegetation."

"Sir, vegetation flourished ages before the sun was made; at least an age, for the scriptures declare vegetation was created on the third day, and the sun on the fourth, and the more advanced Christian geologists declare day to mean age."

"The study of antiquity is most deeply interesting," says the antiquarian. "Lower Egypt is the Egypt of Abraham's day, yet we find ruins of mighty cities in Upper Egypt that must hav been ruins even in Abraham's time, while there are remains that show a greater antiquity than even those of Upper Egypt."

"Beware!" says the Bible idolater. "Remember that 'twas but a few years after the flood when Abraham went to Egypt. How could there be ruins left in Upper Egypt of an older time? It is very difficult as it is to account for any people at all being in Egypt so soon after the flood, let alone your stuff about older cities."

"Comparativ philology," says the student of language, "throws wonderful light on the story of our race prior to the historic period. It is certain that language is subject to the law of development or evolution, and that varieties of language are due to isolation, climate, scenery, and other environments."

"Never bother your head about that," says the learned scientist of the Bible. "Holy Writ settles that question. The diversity of language is due entirely to the confusion at Babel."

And thus every time we attempt to frame a reasonable theory as to the early life of man we are met by this flood story. No history, no ruin, no monument can date back of forty-two hundred years, the time of that deluge, for it was in fact a new creation with the Noah family as progenitors of the race of man. The honest, reasonable histories of ancient peoples, the probably veracious records of ancient religions that hav been kept unbrokenly by priesthoods, or hav been discovered by our own researches amid ruins or in depositories hidden by earthquakes for ages, are all treated as deliberate lies, because they declare that nations existed before the flood, who had bibles from which the Jewish priests stole theirs. As to the Old Testament Bible itself, it is an honest, artless book for the most part, and affords the strongest testimony against the pretensions, and even the doctrins, that modern Christianity is based on. Nowhere does it claim that the book so lately compiled and named holy scriptures is the word of God. Nowhere does it tell us Moses wrote the books ascribed to him, nor that Joshua wrote the book of Joshua, nor that David wrote the Psalms of David. It clearly tells us that those books were written centuries after they were all returned to dust. It tells us in Chronicles and Kings both that no such books had ever been known to the Jews until King Josiah's time. It there tells us that some one pretended then to hav found the book of the law of the Lord, which is a small portion af Deuteronomy only, to his great astonishment and that of all who heard of it—a book the existence of which was unsuspected by kings and priests (2 Ch. xxxiv). Moreover it tells us that the whole book was lost, burnt, when the temple was taken. Ezra, or Esdras, tells us that when, after the temple was rebuilt, he was asked by the Lord to read the law to the people, he could not do so, "for thy book is burnt," and that having fallen into a trance he repeated it before certain scribes, who took his sayings down and then read them. What part of the Bible was that? What part of the great book of history, fables, records, sayings, poetry, and dreams called the Bible, every syllable of which is the veriest word of God, was this? Surely but a small portion—the Jewish law held in remembrance by the priests.

Again was the temple burnt and everything destroyed. Not very long after this, when by communication with Greeks and Romans the barbaric, illiterate Jews of Judea had become accustomed to letters, and after the thousands of Jews of Alexandria, and scattered everywhere, began to communicate with those at home, the Jews began to show the effects of this intercourse. The very few books they ever had began to be written; the Talmuds were composed. What few records they had before were on stone, and the idea of their having composed a book like the Old Testament on stone is absurd. Clearly, then, about this time some persons wrote out the historic parts of the earliest periods, for all through the Pentateuch, Joshua, and Judges, we find references to events commemorated in the earlier times by piles of stone, etc., the writer saying, "And they are there to this day." We also find names given to places which they never had until centuries after Joshua and Judges. Suppose some one should hand you an old history of Ireland, claiming that it was written a thousand years ago, and you found in the midst of a chapter a statement that some event occurred "before the Dutch had founded New Amsterdam on Long Island, opposit where Brooklyn now is?" You would know that the book was not written a thousand years ago. Just like this are some statements in the Bible that were claimed to hav been written ages before. And yet men who are scholars are so blinded by their religion they will not see it.

And there is another wonderful prophecy by Isaiah wherein Isaiah is represented to hav said, a long time before the captivity of seventy years and the birth of Cyrus, that the captivity would occur, the temple be destroyed, and that Cyrus, the king of Persia, would rebuild it. "There!" they will exclaim; "look at that! Why, man alive! can you doubt after that?" And yet there is nearly a whole chapter of Isaiah word for word the same as a chapter of Kings, being a historical narrativ—not very nice reading, either. Kings and Chronicles were both written long after the captivity. The prophecy was used to influence Cyrus, who is represented as boasting that the God of all the heavens had called him by name, Cyrus, long before he was born, to rebuild the temple. Well! suppose we do grant it was a prophecy made so long before; was it fulfilled? No. Read Josephus; read the fourth chapter of Ezra and see. No sooner had they begun than they were stopped. The people of the land, to frustrate their purpose, hired counsellors against them all the days of Cyrus, even to the reign of Darius the Persian, . . . and made them to cease by force and power. . . . "So I ceased until the second year of Darius"—about 75 years later. So here was the prophecy not fulfilled.

HOLT.

An Uninformed Class.

Where on earth can you find a class of people more ignorant and stupid in relation to many of the most important concerns of life than the clergy are? Turn them out of their coward castles, the pulpits, and not one in fifty would hav knowledge enough of anything useful to earn his bread.

And even in religion, to which they pretend to giv all their attention, after having studied seven years to fit themselvs for preaching, their ignorance and stupidity are astonishing. The other day I had occasion to go through the butcher's yard, and there saw a large Newfoundland dog and a cat quietly taking their breakfast from the same bone. After they had finished their meal the dog laid himself down in the sun and the cat lay down on top of the dog to keep warm. These animals, in their natural state, are deadly enemies to each other, but without any Bible, and without paying tithes to any pulpiteer, they hav learned to liv together in harmony, and hav really so strong an affection for each other that if a stranger should suddenly lay hands on the cat the dog would protect her.

Clergymen often seeing such examples of peace and affection in the brutes, are too stupid to receive instruction from it, but go into their pulpits and preach that it is sometimes the duty of rational men and Christians to go into war and mangle and slay one another! I can learn more of what I call the true gospel or principles of peace in a menagerie of wild animals than I can in a church. There a clergyman sees a lion and a tiger, natural enemies, living in peace and harmony, pent up in the same little cage, and then goes to his pulpit and preaches that it is sometimes the duty of two nations of rational and Christian men, separated by a broad ocean, to meet and murder each other!

If we wait for the clergy and churches to abolish war, the millennium of peace will never come, and I want, before I die, to see the Liberal papers, which are making about all the improvement that is made, take hold of war, the bloody remnant of barbarism and priestcraft, and put it aside. I want to see them laboring in earnest for an international congress, that shall settle all national disputes without a resort to arms. And why will not you, Mr. Editor, take hold of this matter in earnest? You could not be engaged in a better work for the good of your race.

Berlin, N. J. J. HACKER.

Temperance.—Christianity.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Your publication of my former note encourages me to write further upon this subject.

When the church, after all her past opposition to the temperance cause, seized the control of the reform from the Washingtonians and other total-abstinent organizations, she proclaimed political or "legal suasion" as the rule. "Moral suasion" was therefore virtually at an end. The old and true temperance reformers, who had most successfully appealed to the reason and judgment, the manhood and the feelings, of inebriates and liquor dealers, for their families and society at large, and whose appeals were usually irresistible, were either forced to fall in with the dominant party, or retire from labor in the good cause. What can men hope to accomplish with reason to the fallen, so long as others, or society at large, are swinging the club of "Prohibition," and threatening to knock out their brains by "force of law?" How can we reason with a man, and hope to show him the error of his course, while enemies fill his ears with denunciations and threats? The intelligent thinker, who understands human nature and the workings of "law," will readily perceive why the true reformers were compelled to retire.

The Christian church has never adopted any reform except on compulsion, and then only to damn it; and the drinking characteristics of the people of the United States to-day are much greater than when the church pretended to embrace the temperance reform thirty-eight years ago.

When antislavery began to be quite popular at the North, the "M. E. church North" claimed under some circumstances to be antislavery. The church divided solely on account of the bishop holding slaves; but even up to the Proclamation of Emancipation by Abraham Lincoln, Jan. 1, 1863, several conferences of the "M. E. church North" extended into slave states, and including slave-holders. Their clergy and laity vied with others of the cloth in denouncing and anathematizing Garrison, Phillips, Foster, Pillsbury, Wright, Burleigh, Mrs. Rose, Mrs. Foster, Mrs. Mott, and others tried and true. The contemptible "laws" to make slave-hounds of northen men; the mobbing of Abolitionists, and the breaking up of antislavery meetings, received the indorsement of the church almost universally. Since slaves can no more be bought and sold upon Christian auction blocks, the church claims, to those who know no better, that it is the "work of the gospel," although some of their teachers, thirty-five years ago, asserted that "Jesus Christ would under certain circumstances hold slaves." I mention this as a sample of Christian reform. Their history in one reform is their history in all. The Christian religion has always claimed perfection. Any other means to reform mankind, other than the church dictates from her blessed "gospel," is rank heresy. Education and reason, as means, must ever be scouted. Stuffed with Bible inspiration, whenever in power, she wields the club of "prohibition" and "force of law," shouting, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv!" "If any man preach any other doctrin let him be accursed!" "He that believeth not shall be damned!" And millions in the past hav fallen victims to her horrid persecutions.

And these very means to crush and trample out heresy and Freethought, like all other harsh, severe, and oppressiv enactments, hav had just the opposit effect, and hav directly increased the number and boldness of so-called heretics. Such has ever been, and ever will be, the effect of such enactments. Make penalties what you please, 'tis all the same. Let the overseer threaten Adam and Eve with the "death penalty" for touching that "apple-tree," and as soon as his back is turned, that simple young couple—who had not before noticed the worthless crab, and perhaps never would, but for this "prohibition" mandate calling their attention and curiosity to it—yes, as soon as the overseer had walked out behind the hedge, and set down "to rest," that silly pair lost no time in gathering up clubs, brickbats, and old boots, and even pulling pickets off the garden fence, and pelting off and hogging down every crab on that tree. Such is prohibition. Oh, that there had been two Liberal prohibitionists (?) there! Then, with the overseer, they had "a majority!"

Take little children just able to creep upon the floor. Don't try to instruct, but call their attention to objects they can get, and command them not to touch them; and in nine cases out of ten they will crawl directly and take the "forbidden" objects. Is it because they are "totally depraved?" Not at all.

Tell a man of any mental independence that he shall do this or that, and although he had thought strongly of doing so, you may expect the rough answer, he'll "see you in —— first."

The harsh, severe, oppressiv enactments of Great Britain toward her "colonies in America," lost her those colonies. Her godly treatment of Charles Bradlaugh, though meant to crush out Liberalism, will Liberalize all England. Her similar course toward Ireland has already lost her the respect of millions, and will, if persisted in, dash her throne into the dust.

The enactment of "Fugitiv Slave" laws and "Dred Scott" decisions; the mobbing of Wm. Lloyd Garrison, and many others; the breaking up of the anniversary meeting in the Tabernacle in New York, etc., was meant for nothing but the crushing out of abolitionism; yet the shameful proceedings and enactments had just the opposit effect. Human liberty, like Jim Crow in the old song:

> "De harder dat you knock him down,
> "De higher up he bounce."

To crush out D. M. Bennett, and Freethought and free speech, was the object of the Comstock enactment; and thirteen months of cruel imprisonment was the fate of that noble man. What was the result? Never before, as then, and since, did Liberalism and Freethought "go marching on!" Hundreds of thousands speak Mr. Bennett's name with heartfelt praise, and millions yet shall repeat the story of his wrongs and his greatness. M. FARRINGTON.

Denver, Iowa, April 23, 283.

From a New Standpoint.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"I rather like this church business," observed the police reporter, tipping his hat back and laying down his pencil. "I never reported a sermon before, but I think I could get into the racket with a little practice and make it work away up in G!"

"What church hav you been to?" asked the law reporter condescendingly.

"I don't know the name of it," mused the police reporter. "I forgot to inquire. It's the one where the man has the good sense to wear his duster in hot weather. Most of the fellows when I was a boy and had to go to church used to wear the same coat all the year round, but this man came out in his white linen, and it made me cool to look at him."

"Do you know what he preached about?" asked the law reporter, with a sardonic smile.

"He didn't seem to preach about much of anything. He'd start out all right, but as soon as he got under way the choir would clip in and break him all up. And the congregation kept talking to themselvs all the time, so you couldn't hear what the man was getting at. In my report I go for that congregation now, you bet."

"How did you like the service as a whole?" inquired the law reporter.

"I suppose it was well enough," replied the police reporter. "They passed something around and all hands took a snack but me. I don't believe in carrying things too far, and while I'm not much of a Christian, I don't go to church to eat. The service was good but I didn't take any. What do you call that thing where they pass around a box and all hands chip in?"

"Did they sing while it was going on?"

"Yes, a man got up in a sort of side chapel where they've got a tall piano, and sang something about Naomi kissing her mother-in-law. What is the name of that part of business?"

"The Offertory. Did you put anything into the plate?"

"I didn't know the limit, and the man didn't wait long enough for me to ask. I was willing to go into the game, but I want to know what the ante is at least. When they got through with the deal they took all the boxes and dumped the winnings in together and handed them up to the man that was bossing the thing; but I don't think it amounted to much, for he had to get down on his knees to see what he had captured. But I like it. I'm going to study up on the racket, and if I don't get into that game before I finish, you can call me a Dutchman."

And with this threat to embrace Christianity from the Episcopal standpoint, the police reporter went back to his account of the proceedings, which he headed, "A Very Enjoyable Affair," and closed with the statement that "the exercises were kept up until nearly dinner time."

HOW MARTIN LUTHER BECAME A MONK.—Returning to Erfurt, in the Summer of 1505, from a visit to his family at Mansfeld, Luther was overtaken by a storm. The lightning struck the ground before his feet; he fell from his horse. "Holy Anne," he cried, to the mother of the Virgin, "help me! I will become a monk." Next day at Erfurt he repented of his vow, but sought and found admittance in the Augustinian Monastery at Erfurt.

A Young Inquirer.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I read very frequently of Mr. Mulkittle's inquisitiv boy. He is very inquisitiv, but Jimmy McCurgy, of this place, can ask more questions in one day than young Mulkittle can in a month. A few days ago, as he was about starting to school, he said:

"Pa, Gen. Grant circuforted the world, didn't he?"

"Gen. Grant did what? I guess you mean Gen. Grant circumnavigated the globe."

"Yes; I mean he went around it, didn't he?"

"Yes."

"But how could he go around it?"

"Because the earth is a round ball or sphere, and therefore it can be circumnavigated."

"Why is the earth a spear?"

"Because the Lord made it a sphere for reasons best known to himself, I suppose."

"Well, pa, when the Lord made it a spear did he want to spear anybody?"

"No; he didn't want to spear anybody. He didn't make it a 'spear,' but a sphere. That means a round ball or globe."

"Was Shakspere a round ball?"

"No; Shakspere was a poet, and Shakspere was his name."

"Well, tell me how the Lord could spear anybody with a round ball."

Mr. McCurgy having lost his patience, said:

"Go off to school in a hurry, or I'll knock hell out of you!"

Jimmy was silent for a moment, and then interrogated:

"Pa, isn't it bad to swear?"

"Of course it is, but you torment me so much that I can't help it. The Lord says, Swear not even by the earth, for it is his foot-stool."

"But how could the Lord use a spear for a foot-stool? Has a spear got a cushion on it like Mary's organ stool? Are all poets foot-stools like Shakspere?"

Mr. McCurgy grabbed for him, but too late; he was gone. W. S.

TOOLS USED IN BUILDING THE PYRAMIDS.—During a residence of two winters in a tomb at Gizeh Mr. W. M. Flinders Petrie collected evidence showing that the tools used in working stone 4,000 years ago were constructed with a jewel as the cutting edge. He stated his reasons for coming to this conclusion in a paper read before the Anthropological Institute, a resume of which is published in a recent issue of Engineering of London. Solid and tubular drills, straight and circular disk saws, and lathe tools were made with jewels set in metal. The lines of cutting on a granit core made by a tubular drill form a continuous spiral, the grooves being of a uniform depth and width throughout, showing that the cutting point was not worn as the work advanced. The regular taper of the core would indicate that jewels were also set upon the outside and inside of the drill, thereby facilitating its removal. In some specimens of granit the drills sank one-tenth of an inch at each revolution, and the pressure necessary to do this must hav been from one to two tons. The skill of the workmen and the capacity of the tool are illustrated by the clean path through both soft and hard material—no difference in the groove being perceptible, although it passes from a soft substance into quartz, subjecting the tool to an enormous strain. In plane surfaces the depth and width of the cuts indicate the successiv stroke of a saw, and the use of the circular saw is proved by the regularly curved lines. The forms of the tools were the same that experience has sanctioned at the present time. The scarcity of the diamond and the lack of strength in the sapphire and beryl lead to the consideration of corundum. Nothing has been found about the metal of which the tool was made or the method of setting the jewel.—Sun.

THE Union Médicale of June 2d announces a discovery of the highest scientific interest, and which, if it turns out to be real, will show that prehistoric man is no longer a myth. On piercing a new gallery in a coal mine at Bully-Grenay (Pas-de-Calais) a cavern was broken into containing six fossil human bodies intact—a man, two women, and three children—as well as the remains of arms and utensils in petrified wood and stone, and numerous fragments of mammals and fish. A second subterranean cave contained eleven bodies of large dimensions, several animals, and a great number of various objects, together with precious stones. The walls were decorated with designs of combats between men and animals of gigantic size. A third and still larger chamber appeared to be empty, but could not be entered in consequence of the carbonic acid it contained, which is being removed by ventilators. The fossil bodies hav been brought up to the surface, and five of them will be exhibited at the mairie of Lens. The others are to be sent to Lille, in order to undergo examination by the Faculte des Sciences. Representativs of the Academie des Sciences, of Paris, and of the British Museum, having been telegraphed for, are expected to be present.—Nature.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - AUGUST 11, 1883.

A Minister's Errors.

The following letter explains the subjoined extract:

MOBERLY, Mo., July 28, 1883.

MR. MACDONALD: A few days ago I had a little discussion with a clergyman in regard to the contradictions of the Bible. I published a few of them in one of our daily papers, and I inclose you his last reply to me, and wish you to answer it and publish it in your next issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and oblige, H. W. JOHNSON.

The minister's attempted defense of the Bible is:

"EDITOR BEACON: Of date July 24th, I noticed that 'Liberal' labors hard in his futil attempt to make it appear he has discovered a Bible contradiction. Such verdancy is quite refreshing on account of being so seldom met with. He has the audacity to sign himself 'natural man,' which class of men I hav proved beyond successful contradiction by the Bible, cannot know or perceive spiritual things. (See 1 Cor. ii, 14.) To the unsound, spiritual things are hid (2d Cor. iv, 3). The Bible is a spiritual book, and 'Liberal' says he knows nothing about spiritual things. In that case wisdom would dictate he giv it up and engage in something he does know something about. He might as well try to ridicule the science of astronomy, because he cannot comprehend the mysteries of the solar system—this great timepiece of the skies, which never varies and first gave to man the idea of forming a clock to tick off the moments of time and keep march with the sun. Just as well ridicule the science of medicin because he can't understand all the mysterious effects the roots and herbs will hav on the human system. The savior says, 'I am the great physician of souls,' and that is what 'Liberal' needs most. He needs to be healed of his blunders.

"This, in connection with the fact that the savior died to redeem us from all errors of life, is of vastly more importance than the number of angels and men that were seen at the savior's tomb and which Liberal harps so much about.

"Of so great importance is the fact that he arose from the dead that it revolutionized time, because the day was considered greater than the day the world was made. That wonderful event causes me to-day to date July 26, 1883, showing the number of years, months, and days since that eventful period. There was such great commotion, earthquakes and darkness, that even his enemies said in their fright, 'Surely this is the son of God.'

"This brings me to consider the supposed Bible contradictions that 'Liberal' has selected. I will briefly reply, but do not expect 'Liberal' to see it any more than a blind cat would see its way out of a dark cellar on a stormy night.

"The thing most needful for us to know is that there is power in Christianity to lift men up out of a low, carnal life, imbued with the principles of love and peace while here on earth and an assurance of life and peace everlasting.

"'Liberal' says: 'Mark says one young man; Matthew, one angel; Luke two men; and John, two angels were seen at the tomb.' I deny any contradiction. Matthew tells what he saw, Mark what he saw, Luke what he saw, and John what he saw. Mark could hav seen one man while Matthew saw one angel without any contradiction. Luke might hav seen two men while John saw two angels, and no contradiction. Each statement might hav been correct without contradicting the other. Each tells what he saw and does not pretend that he saw everything in that vicinity.

"John xx, 12: Mary sees two angels, one at the head and one at the feet of Jesus. Mark (xvi, 5) does not contradict this, for Mary saw the angels within the sepulcher and after the angels spoken of by John had fled. Another was seen on the stone after it was rolled away—two angels in the tomb, standing on the right.

"All this simply proves that there were men and angels at the tomb.

"As for 'Liberal' being tormented with the devil because he can't comprehend, it is a mere subterfuge. It is not certain that he is accountable. If he is he will be punished for his wickedness and nothing else.

"'Liberal' must be of that class that strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. "OBSERVER."

The sneer at the natural man is not well. All men are natural till their natures are perverted by a perusal of some impracticable and impossible salvation scheme, by which their lives are rendered unnatural and unhappy. A natural man is happy. He takes pleasure in nature. He sees the beauties of existence; he laughs with the cheerful and helps the afflicted because his human nature is naturally good. He is free from fear; looks on the bright side of things, and makes of life a merry holiday. The "regenerated" man, on the contrary, is constantly troubled by the fear that he has been selected from the beginning of all time to burn in hell. Try as hard as he may, he cannot be certain he will escape this fate. This fear renders him unhappy, and has driven thousands insane. The Christian religion makes men gloomy, morose, and fretful. Its devotees imagin that a laugh displeases God; that indulgence in pleasure is wrong and must be expiated by rigid self-denial, and in many cases physical torture. The difference between a natural man and one "born again," or "regenerated," is, the one sings of freedom and joy, the other wails forth the fate of the damned. When the Christian finds there are no damned, he will consider his life wasted.

The Bible is no more a spiritual book than Shakspere. It purports to giv an account of how God created the earth; of how he made man to sin; of how he proposes to rescue a few from the consequences of that sin, and eternally torture all the rest. It relates very circumstantially many material events, while its talk about spiritual things is very hazy. About every material fact is found to be stated incorrectly, and, so far as any one can know, the spiritual matters are treated as carelessly. The laws of astronomy can be demonstrated and shown to the incredulous. Will this minister demonstrate the existence of heaven and show the Lord to the incredulous? Medicin is not a science, and he does well who doubts the efficacy of most drugs. And whereabout in the Bible does Jesus say, "I am the great physician of souls?" It is of no earthly account, but the minister should giv us chapter and verse for it.

He makes another stupid error in saying that our calendar begins with the resurrection of Jesus. According to the Bible, Jesus was crucified in the year 33 A.D. The calendar is not based on any supernatural event except it begins in Christian countries about the time of Christ's birth. Yet there is a discrepancy of twelve days between the Roman Catholic and the Greek Catholic churches. If the minister were in Turkey he would date from the hegira; if in China, by dynasties; yet he would not consider Mohammed a true prophet, nor Confucianism the true religion. There was no earthquake and no darkness when Christ was supposed to be crucified, and no other supernatural interposition, and the "enemies" that said, "Surely this is the son of God," are myths. The accounts of that event are so mixed that there are grave doubts of the crucifixion. Certainly the resurrection is a falsehood. No dead man ever came to life. The records show that no convulsions of nature occurred at or near Jerusalem at that time. The story is not vouched for by any reputable historian. The four gospels alone tell the story, and they tell it in four different ways. The minister believes them all. There were, according to him, three angels and three young men at the tomb—one angel belonging to Matthew, and two to John. One of the young men was Mark's, while Luke saw double. Probably he had not recovered from the effects of the last supper. But if we admit for the sake of the argument that there was an assortment of young men and angels around the tomb—the number visible varying according to the condition of the observer—how shall we reconcile the conflicting statements as to the time the crucifixion took place? Two alleged gospel writers, Matthew and Luke, assert that it was at the ninth hour, while John, equally reliable, says it was at the sixth, and Mark, whose character at that time was as good as the others, boldly maintains it to hav occurred at the third hour. Unless Christ was crucified three times some of the evangelists lied, and if they lied in this matter why not in all? Or if God inspired them, and they were but penning history according to divine instruction, then the heterophemy must be attributed to the Lord.

Then again, as to the sepulchral visitants, Matthew says "Mary Magdalene and the other Mary" first visited the sepulcher. Mark asserts that it was Mary the mother of James and Salome. Luke has it, "Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and the other woman," and John, who always would differ with the rest, says it was Mary Magdalene.

But to this preacher there is no discrepancy in all these stories, neither in the angels. He simply says John's angels must hav fled before Mark's young man got there. But Mark's young man was "in the sepulcher, on the right side," and John's angels were also in the sepulcher, "one at the head and one at the foot of where the body had lain." They couldn't hav missed each other, and we must conclude that the writers of the gospels did not compare notes. And as there is no evidence that either gospel was in existence till over one hundred years after the event is alleged to hav taken place, we can see how these little slips in memory occurred.

But if there is a "power in Christianity to lift men up out of a low, carnal life, imbued with the principles of love and peace while here on earth and an assurance of life and peace everlasting," why don't it do it? If Christianity can do all this, why is it that there are so many villainous Christians in the world, and why is there so much misery and trouble? Christians lie and cheat and steal; Christians fight and murder fellow-Christians by the thousand. One Christian uses his brain to invent a gun to kill other Christians by the hundred, and Christian rulers honor him who makes the most terrible weapons. Christian nations hav been more warlike than other nations, and the church of Christ has alone killed more heretics than there are people in the state of New York. Her ministers are the most immoral of men. Her members fail the oftenest in business and compromise at ten cents on the dollar with the creditors. And when they die they take advantage of the divine bankrupt law, hav their accounts all charged to Christ, and slip into heaven under cover of Peter's coattails. There is no love and peace on earth among Christians, and before there is in heaven they will hav to change their natures very considerably.

Our gentle Christian givs an example of the "life and peace everlasting" of the future world in his closing words. If 'Liberal' is accountable, he says, "he will be punished for his wickedness." And what is this wickedness? Lying? cheating? stealing? murder? No—worse than either of these! Not believing the Bible to be the word of God! This shows at once that "Observer" is a Christian. Just think of it a moment. Here is a man who has committed no crime, has wronged no one, yet he is going to be burnt and baked and roasted on red-hot coals forever, because he does not believe that a certain book, filled with lies and absurdities, was written by a good God. Is not this one fact sufficient to cause good men and women to renounce a system of religion which teaches and upholds such a doctrin?

It must certainly appear so to all whose bread and butter does not depend upon its perpetuation.

Thirty Thousand People Speak.

The indignation of England's Liberals at Mr. Bradlaugh's unconstitutional exclusion from Parliament was grandly shown at the monster meeting held in Trafalgar Square, London, on the 6th. Thirty thousand voices united in demanding for him and his constituents the rights belonging to freemen, and urged him to resist the action of the officers of the House of Commons. There are not lacking indications that the people of England are tired of the reigning family, of the grasping penuriousness of the present occupant of the throne, and the lustful debaucheries of the prospectiv regent. It is believed that Mr. Bradlaugh's activ advocacy of a republican form of government for the three isles has not a little to do with keeping him from the position which Northampton elected him to fill. A disregard on the part of the queen, the premier, and the speaker, of the memorial adopted at the Trafalgar Square meeting and presented to them will inevitably hasten the coming of the republic. The killing of the Affirmation bill by the House did not settle the question raised by Mr. Bradlaugh's election. It only postponed the reckoning, which will be heavier the longer delayed. As the state church is at the bottom of the bigoted perversion of the law, and the illegal withholding of rights from liberty's champion, disestablishment of that institution will surely follow. It may be years before the Secularists win all their points, but progress is the order of the day, and just as certain as evolution has raised man from savagery to civilization is it that monarchical institutions and monarchical churches will giv place to broader and infinitly better forms of government and modes of worship. The present government of England, and especially the House of Commons, will hav the bitter satisfaction of knowing that it helped the movement on wonderfully by this treatment of Mr. Bradlaugh.

And the church will then no doubt ask whether it pays to practically disfranchise Atheists. If there should be a violent struggle in the House as a result of this last meeting of freemen, the government can thank itself. As the Tribune says, the performance will not be nearly so disgraceful for Mr. Bradlaugh as for the House of Commons.

Scaffold Slush.

The church ought to be ashamed of itself for the ado it makes over murderers. On the 3d inst. a negro named Lee was hanged at Richmond, Va., for killing the husband of a woman with whom he was intimate. His was a double crime. Before his conviction he was a common, brutal, lustful negro. After that he was good Christian. He was "converted" by three colored clergymen, who baptized him in a bathtub, the authorities not being willing to trust him to go to the river. His conversion was only of a week's duration. When he was under the minister's care, and after the latter's remarks, he shouted, "I am free! I am free! I hav found my savior!" After his baptism he cried, "Let me fly to heaven; don't hold me!" Just before he left his cell for the gallows he said, "I am going to be married to-day to Jesus," and sang:

"Oh, for an overcoming faith
To cheer my dying hour!"

He then prayed, asking a "divine blessing" on every one, including the man who was to pull the "props from under my feet." He regarded himself as a pilgrim going to heaven, and joined the ministers in singing, "Come, let us join our friends above." In the closing speech allowed him he said, "I think I am prepared to make my peace with God, and trust that I will be able to meet you all in heaven."

The woman who participated in his crime is also to be hung. Her last words to him were, "I'll try and meet you in heaven."

This farce, and the numerous others of its kind which take place, are disgraceful. If such people are the saved, what decent man will want to get religion or go to heaven? These two lustful murderers are to be of the elect, while the husband, struck down in the night, is presumably to be damned. He would probably thank his stars that such is the case. If an orthodox heaven really existed, it is in no wise likely such wretches as these would get into it, while the fact that their ravings are incited by ignorance, fostered by the church, makes the spectacle horribly disgusting.

The Church Losing Ground in Geneva.

The following picture of the condition of religious affairs in Geneva is given by the Independent. Geneva, it will be recollected, is the place where Calvin, the Presbyterian, burnt Servetus, the Unitarian, for his heresy in contending that a son could not possibly be as old as his father, and that the charge against God of illicit intercourse tended to belittle his character. The account shows a very decided change in public sentiment since those days of church prosperity:

"The utter and total collapse of the Protestant church of Geneva is one of the saddest of ecclesiastical events. A new Consistory was elected a few Sundays ago. Every Swiss citizen who claimed to be a Protestant had the liberty of voting, and the wildly Liberal ticket was elected for the third time since 1874. The conservativs charged that their opponents were Materialists, and the latter accepted the name readily. Their organ, the Genevois, said that now most people, happily, trouble themselvs very little about what is called the salvation of the soul; that men of well-balanced minds rather giv their thought to making the best of this world; that faith has had its time, and religious belief is fast disappearing. Indeed, it sounds like a leaf out of the essay of the North American Review's 'A Non-Churchgoer.' Every minister elected in the church of Geneva since 1874 is either an avowed agnostic or a declared opponent of Christianity. A few old believing ministers remain, especially in the country parishes, but the church looks blacker than without them. They do not relieve but intensify the darkness, and can do no more than show a warfare of belief which leads the masses to call it all nonsense and superstition. A little healthy persecution like that which the Roman Catholic church received on the occasion of the establishment of old Catholicism and the expulsion of Mgr. Mermillod, would do good. Mgr. Mermillod is now back, with a bishop besides, something not known in Geneva since Calvin, and with an enthusiastic and growing following."

From the concluding sentences of this we gather that the Catholic church is resuming the position in Geneva occupied by her before the advent of Calvin. All, or nearly all, of that worthy's followers are now Materialists or Catholics, and the struggle for supremacy is to be between these two opposit bodies. It is with no malicious feeling we call our contemporary's attention to the fact that this is precisely what we predicted only two short weeks ago. We make no claim to prophecy in this. It is simply the logic of affairs. There is no restful halting-place between the abject subjection of the mind demanded by the Catholic church and the broad liberty of Rationalism. When Protestants cease to protest against wrongs committed by the church they place themselvs in the position they assailed at the beginning. It remains for the Rationalists to take up the work of protesting and go on with it, which they are doing with good effect. Persecution, which the Independent says would do good, will not work. This is not the sixteenth century, and Materialists are not the sort of people to be burnt and imprisoned with impunity. They cannot be driven back to Protestantism in that way, and the charitable wish expressed is not likely to find realization even in the canton of Calvin.

Dog Days.

VIENNA, July 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I have been a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER for a number of years, and hav not asked any questions. Now I would like to know why it is that about this time of the year we hear about dog days. When do they begin? when end? and why are they so-called?

Yours, C. S. TREMAINE.

Dog days are so called from the heliacal rising of Sirius, the dog star. The "heliacal rising" of the star is when, after being in conjunction with the sun, and invisible, it emerges from the light so as to be visible in the morning before sunrise. The ancients reckoned their dog days to be forty—twenty before and twenty after the rising of the star. The time of the rising depends upon the latitude of the place. Dog days begin about the 20th of July and end the 1st of September. The ancients thought that the rising of the dog star was the occasion of the extreme heat usually experienced at this period, and so named it dog days. But the star rises later and later every year, and in time will rise in what is now our winter. Probably the period will continue to be called dogs days, though, all the same.

"She Did It."

"And the man said, the woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat" (Gen. iii, 12).

A few days ago a man and woman were found lying on a bed in their lodgings in this city, both shot through the head. The woman was an adventuress of great personal charms, the man a son of a Saybrook clergyman. A letter was found on the table saying they had recently been secretly married, but being unhappy they had concluded to go to paradise together. It was apparent from their positions that the man had first shot his companion and then turned the revolver against himself. From the character of the woman, the marriage story is doubted, and the general opinion is that they were both equally to blame for their questionable relations.

Before the coroner's jury the father of the man made a statement. His son, he said, was a religious youth; he did not drink, smoke, or swear; he attended Sunday-school, and had the Bible lessons perfectly to heart. He further added that the letter could not be his son's, for it breathed "bold Infidelity," inasmuch as no Christian could hope to attain the Elysian fields who took his own life. From these facts he argued that the woman not only wrote the letter, but committed the rash act that removed two persons out of the world.

Much can be forgiven a bereaved father who desires to clear the character of his son, but he should hav remembered that perhaps the woman had a father also. And his coupling the name of Infidel with a brothel suicide is the extreme of Christian meanness. That the doing so came from force of habit of lying about Infidels is undoubted. The imputing the sin to the woman is not original with him. Adam did it, and for it he has always been regarded as a whining coward. The world has more respect for a man who stands up and takes the consequences of his acts than for one who hides behind the skirts of his partner, be she his wife or his paramour. Laying it to the woman is contemptible. The average woman is as moral as the best of men; nine times out of ten her fall is directly owing to the persuasion of the man. It is essentially a Christian dodge to aver that "she did it." Shoving their sin on to other people is what the whole church does. This clergyman was true to his teaching.

That the coroner's jury did not believe in the Adam style of whining is shown by their verdict that the couple came to their deaths at the hands of the man. Evidently they did not consider his religion any bar to his criminality.

A short time ago the Methodist Advocate said that only Infidels committed suicide. This case is the second, in this city, in one week, of Christian self-destruction, and in Englewood, Ill., on the 3d, a young Sunday-school teacher was found dead behind the altar of the Lutheran church. In his right hand was a revolver, and on the blackboard over his head the words, "The dead cry never."

What is the Advocate's opinion now?

Lectures and Meetings.

THERE will be a meeting of Spiritualists at Spiritual Hall, Omro, Wis., September 14th, 15th, and 16th. Mrs. H. S. Lake, Dr. G. H. Green, and C. E. Watkins, the slate writer, will attend. Dr. J. C. Phillips is secretary of this association.

WE are requested to say that Mrs. Lake, who is advertised for the Rochester Convention, cannot be there, as she will speak at the Valley Falls, Kansas, State Convention at that time. The announcement occurred by mistake. Western societies will please address Mrs. Lake at Flint, Mich., until August 28th.

THE Mediums Medical Association of the state of Michigan will hold a meeting at Orion (at the Spiritualist camp-meeting) on the 14th, inst., at 10 A.M., for election of officers and general business. Business of importance is to be presented at the meeting, and a general attendance is desirable. C. A. Andrus is president of the association and W. Hicks secretary.

MR. J. R. PERRY, of Wilkes Barre, Pa., a member of the New York State Freethinkers' Association, and manufacturer of "Perry's New Pianos," proposes to furnish one of his best pianos for the use of the Freethinkers' Convention. Mr. Perry's pianos are claimed to be "better than the best," and if a skilled performer gets hold of it the convention will hav good music.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S appointments for August are as follows: Carbon, Ind., 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, and 10th; Daleville, Ind., 11th; Kent, Ohio, 12th and 13th; Salineville, Ohio, 14th, 15th, and 16th; Erie, Pa., 18th and 19th; New Holland, Pa., 21st, 22d, and 23d; Philadelphia, Pa., and Newark, N. J., 24th, 25th, and 26th; Scranton, Pa., 27th; Rochester, N. Y. (Freethinkers' Convention), August 29th to Sept. 2d.

THE second quarterly meeting of the Lake Shore Conference of Spiritualists will meet on Lily Dale Camp Grounds August 9th, 10th, and 11th. Good speakers will be in attendance, and music will be furnished by an excellent quartet. Business of importance will come before the meeting, and Mattie E. Hull, the corresponding secretary, hopes that every member of the conference will make an effort to be present.

T. B. WAKEMAN and Courtlandt Palmer will attend the New York Freethinkers' Convention at Rochester closing Sept. 2d. From there they will continue on West, toward Milwaukee, attending other conventions, and filling lecture appointments as they go. Arrangements, partial in some places, and complete in others, hav been made for them to lecture—at Buffalo, Erie, Pittsburgh, Salem, Alliance, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Kalamazoo, Dowagiac, Chicago. There are openings for a few more engagements, and if Liberals and Leaguers in western Pennsylvania, or in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin wish to engage them for a day or evening lecture, they may make application to the League secretary in New York for time and terms.

THE Seventh Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held in Milwaukee, Wis., Sept. 21st, 22d, and 23d, at the Freir Gemeinde hall. The secretary asks that all "good Leaguers and Liberals be present to make it a memorable occasion, and resolve that they will hang together and meet in seven times seven more congresses, or until the church lets go her grip on our pockets, public schools, United States mails, and seventh days." Six new Leagues hav been organized during the last two months, which is a cheerful showing for an infant organization during hot weather, when people who hav no fear of further hot weather in hell are naturally disinclined to attend meetings. But Liberals should remember that the church encroachments on their liberties are going on without postponement, and act accordingly.

The Convention Hotel Rates.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Will you allow me to make a special request through THE TRUTH SEEKER?

There will be many places where our friends can procure cheap and good board at Rochester during the convention, but hotel and boarding-house proprietors are like many other people, selfish, therefore I request our friends to make specific agreements for rates of board and lodgings in advance, so that they cannot be overcharged when they come to leave.

H. L. GREEN.

Lo, thou art numbered with the things that were,
Soon to be laid upon the dusty shelves
Of antiquaries, once so strong and fair,
Now classed with spells of magic, midnight elves,
And all half-lies, that pass away themselvs
When once a people rises to the light
Of primal truths and comprehends its heaven-born right.

—The Church: C. P. Cranch.

Communications.

Funerals of Liberals.

I wish to present a few thoughts on the above subject, because I believe the position of Liberals in that respect has a greater tendency to hinder the general advancement of their ideas among the people at large than anything else. In all ages of the world, and among every people, the ceremonies in connection with the burial of the dead hav been considered of great importance, and they hav usually been of a religious character.

We all, without regard to our opinions on matters of religion, at such times feel the need of consolation and kindly words of sympathy, not only from relativs and personal friends, but from the people at large in the community where we liv.

It is right that this should be so, and all, be their opinions what they may, should assist each other with kindly words and deeds.

At such times, our common humanity, if properly cultivated, will lead us to offer our assistance in such manner as those who are afflicted may desire. We should refraim from offering advice in regard to how afflicted neighbors should conduct such occasions, but seek to know their wishes and help them in the manner most congenial to their feelings. Our personal opinions may more properly be advocated at other times.

In this country, funeral services are generally held in churches, and cemeteries are mostly under church control. And in the nature of things this cannot all be changed at once. Be patient and work for union and harmony.

The custom of having some kind of religious exercises on such occasions has so strong a hold on our poeple that almost everybody, whether they hav any well-defined religions opinions or not, feel that at such times they must conform to the customs of the community in which they liv.

This feeling has so strong hold on the minds of many who profess to be Liberals, that in most cases they hav not the moral courage necessary to induce them to act in accordance with their opinions as expressed in every-day life.

Without being aware of it, many people on such occasions act the part of hypocrits, which is a forcible reason for organizations that will admit of a change. I know of families who hav never paid a dollar to build a church or pay a preacher, and who hardly ever enter a church, except at funerals, will often allow themselvs to ridicule everything pertaining to church matters, but when death comes to their families, they do not hesitate to conform to the usual religious customs, and employ a preacher to officiate; sometimes without paying him for the services rendered. The laborer is worthy of his hire, and those who employ should pay.

All this seems inconsistent, but custom and priestcraft hav so strong a hold they dare not do otherwise. Men in business fear that to carry out their real sentiments at such times would injure their financial affairs, and politicians, who are always very sensitiv, might lose a few votes when much needed.

All classes are more or less controled by the prevailing sentiment of the community in which they liv.

It should not be expected that people will outgrow their prejudices or wean themselvs from old customs all at once; but it is time Liberals made more effort in this matter, for nothing else tends so strongly to incline the masses who do not believe in church creeds to giv them moral and pecuniary support. The time has arrived when very many who belong to orthodox churches—and nearly all who do not—discard the doctrin of eternal punishment.

How inconsistent, then, for such persons in their seasons of affliction to employ preachers to giv them consolation, who, if they preach what their creeds say they believe, must tell the afflicted friends, in many cases, that the immortal spirit of their departed friend has just commenced an eternal existence of misery—"Where the worm dieth not, the fire is not quenched, and where the smoke of their torment ascendeth for ever and ever."

Many who do employ clergymen on such occasions would be highly offended if he should tell them so, but how can he do his whole duty to his God and to those he believes to be traveling that broad road that leads to eternal death, if he neglects to impress it on the minds of all at such times?

This matter, if true, is of more importance than any or everything else, and those who believe it true should cry and spare not, should be unceasing in their efforts to save humanity from such a fate.

What, then, should we do?—and when I say "we," I mean not only Liberals, but everybody who does not accept the revolting doctrin of eternal punishment. I would not be considered so egotistical as to think myself capable of formulating a plan that will accomplish so very desirable an object. But I will take the liberty to make some little suggestions, hoping they may serve as an inducement to others more capable to giv the matter thought, which will cause all to act, and the result may develop a plan that will do a good work for humanity in this life. Let us cease striving to find out God and his attributes, a future life and its conditions, and turn our attention more earnestly to matters pertaining to the duties of this life, which we know we possess.

To-day we really know no more of the solution of these problems than when the inquiry began—which is simply nothing. Let us cease striving to appease the wrath of an imaginary deity by bowing in abject adoration to and craving pardon of a being of whose attributes, or existence even, we cannot know or understand anything.

The efforts of mankind to do this, and do it aright, hav been the great theme the world over, and the result has always been wide differences of opinion and misery, caused by war consequent upon the contention and strife resulting therefrom, and always ending in utter failure to advance one single step in finding out the great mystery.

For these reasons let us lay these questions away, and with them also the kindred question of the divine inspiration of the Bible.

There are many good things in that book that I would not blot out nor cease to urge humanity to practice. The trouble is, we are required to take it all as good, when there is so much that is unreasonable, contradictory, and bad, which cannot be harmonized, that has caused such a multitude of opposing sects, each knowing positivly its way to be the only right one, because the information is derived from God's word, and the votaries of each are sure they are right, for the reason that they are God's people.

Now, friends, let us all endeavor to outgrow this situation. People should be educated to do so, and Liberalism, in its broadest sense, must be relied on to accomplish the work. Organization seems necessary to do it, but there is a tendency in all organizations to unconsciously drift into personal differences, by those who lead the work, and before they are aware of it, the intolerant spirit of sectarianism often creeps in and destroys its usefulness. In order to make these reforms a success, Liberals should strive to liv and teach in such a manner as to gain the confidence and respect of all good people.

We may persuade mankind to embrace the right, but a spirit of imperious, coerciv intolerance is sure to render nugatory the best efforts of those who resort to that course. The religious customs in regard to the burial of the dead seem to hav a stronger hold on all people than anything else. Very many seek a place in some organization mainly on that account. And Liberals, therefore, should do more in this direction than they hav done, or they will fail to gain the confidence of the masses.

Our clergymen, our churches and cemeteries, are proper persons and places for such occasions in many cases, as society is now organized. Persons who are used to addressing public gatherings are needed, and the Liberal element does not in many places at present furnish all that is wanted.

Christianity is fast outgrowing the horrible and unjust doctrin of eternal punishment, and all who do not believe it should giv the clergy to understand that in order to retain their confidence and support, they must cease to believe and teach it.

They must turn their attention more to the duties of this life. Make funeral occasions a time and place not merely for eulogy of the dead, but an occasion to teach that which will benefit the living and prepare them for the duties of this life. Inculcate the necessity of practicing temperance, charity, industry, economy, honesty—all the virtues that help to make up the sum total of happiness in this life. By so doing much will be gained that will be of practical benefit in a world that is not imaginary.

All who do not believe in the unjust and unreasonable doctrin of future punishment should unite in conducting funerals in harmony with their principle. In the rural districts in particular there is need of reform and more independent thought and action in this matter. "The Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns," etc., may and should be used in many cases where suitable speakers are not readily obtained. But most essential of all is a spirit of unanimity and manly independence among those who profess to be liberal in religious opinions, which shall cause them to exert a controling influence for the general good. They should be careful and not allow themselvs to drift into the same state of bigotry and intolerance that has so long controled religious organizations.

The world is making progress in this respect, and we should be careful not to stop its advancement by differing over questions that ever hav been and still remain unknown and unknowable. When such men as H. W. Beecher repudiate the doctrin of eternal punishment and other similar heresies, and are sustained, as he has recently been, by a unanimous vote of confidence passed by the Congregational Association of New York and Brooklyn, we may take courage and strive to unite all such in one grand effort to eradicate the idea that mankind are to be eternally punished for belief. If we are to be punished for belief, who is wise enough to determin which, among the many, is the right and saving one? Christ is represented as saying, "He that believes and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." And Christians usually say, Believe on him and you will be saved. But all the Protestant sects, the Catholics, the Greek church, and even the despised Mormons, believe this, but each is not willing to concede that the belief of the others will save them. What, then, shall we believe? Cast beliefs and creeds away, and teach and practice that "the world is my country and to do good my religion."

"O friends of man! if you would win
Our race from selfishness and sin,
Look not too far away;
You need not go to foreign climes,
You need not wait for better times,
Begin the work to-day.
Commence at home, make heaven there,
By every influence, art, and care,
That kindly natures know;
Thence like the wave-mark on the tide,
Extend that circle still more wide,
In never-ceasing flow."

Grattan, Mich. C. CLOSE.

"A Cordial Christian Evolutionist."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I am glad you found room for Henry Ward Beecher's letter to Mr. Kennard in your valuable paper, and should be greatly pleased to see the talented writer sufficiently evolutionized to be worthy of enrolment among the able contributors to your journal.

The Rev. Henry Ward Beecher seems to flatly antagonize modern orthodox theology. There was no Garden of Eden, no forbidden fruit, no tempting devil, no fall of man. "No great disaster met the race at the start." The eloquent preacher believes "that man was evolved from the animal race below him," and a savior and an atonement for Adam's sin is therefore quite superfluous. It is unnecessary to preach repentance and forgivness of sins. "Othello's occupation's gone!" A fabulous atonement need not be invented to meet a "fabulous disaster."

The Protestant clergy, however secure they may feel in their faith, should not fail to heed these impressiv and significant words from the greatest and most eloquent preacher in America: "No one can express the earnestness with which I feel that in the advance of science, which will inevitably sweep away much rubbish from the belief of men, a place may be found for a higher spirituality, for a belief that shall hav its roots in science and its top in the sunlight of faith and love."

It has become a proverb that "rats desert a sinking ship," while the brave captain and crew struggle till the last. But in the old ship called Orthodoxy the reverse of this is now taking place. The gallant captain—or rather the commodore of the fleet—hauls down his flag, spikes his guns, and leaves the sinking ship to its fate. But the burrowing rodents, hiding in the darkness and gloom of their old retreats, still remain on board the fated craft, unable to perceive their impending fate. PETER ECKLER.

World Formation by Accretion.

The hypothesis of the gradual cooling of the earth and other heavenly bodies from a gaseous or molten state, though generally accepted by scientists, will hav to be given up. The accretion theory of world formation answers to all the data of astronomy and geology. It is based on two incontrovertible facts, namely:

1. Our solar system swarms with innumerable meteorites which are continually falling upon the planets, and thus slowly adding to their bulk.

2. It is a law of nature that pressure produces heat; it therefore follows that by the prodigious pressure of gravity the center of a planet becomes heated, and the thickness of the crust prevents the radiation of the heat into cold space.

A priori the effect produced by this internal heat would be exactly what we see on the surface of planets. An expansion of the comparativly small melted core of the moon, caused by ages of accretion from meteorites, would create on the surface of that thick-crusted satellite deep fissures and sharp mountain peaks. Expansion of the earth's greater core and smaller proportionate crust would make its surface far less rugged than that of the moon. Jupiter, with a diameter nearly twelve times that of the earth, would doubtless hav a very thin crust, which would be red hot, and this is now believed to be the fact from telescopic observation. Our sun, with a diameter a hundred times that of the earth, would become just what it is—a vast ball of liquid and gaseous fire. And may we not conceive of suns so vast as to throw off into space in the form of fiery gases all they receive by accretion or perhaps even more?

The rate of meteoric accretion we are as yet unable to determin even approximately. The astronomical editor of the New York Sun says that "no less than four hundred million meteors enter the atmosphere every twenty-four hours;" but he further says that "they can add no appreciable percentage to the bulk of the earth during the lapse of ages." That depends on the length of the lapse of ages. Earth life has probably existed at least a hundred million years, and allowing for the average weight of a meteor only seven grains, or one-thousandth of a pound, we hav one hundred million pounds addition to every square mile of earth since animate existence began. This, though not "an appreciable percentage to the bulk of the earth," is certainly an appreciable quantity, and in my judgment it ought to be multiplied by millions, for I conceive no other origin of worlds than meteoric dust or debris.

The Laplace hypothesis is furthermore disproved by the comparativ data of astronomy and geology. We hav allowed a hundred million years for the past period of animate existence on the earth. What geologist would venture to assign a shorter period? Is it not certain from the discoveries in the Devonshire caves, that man existed more than a million years ago? How, then, can you limit the period of evolution from the lowest animal existence until the evolution of man to less than a hundred million years? But the data of astronomy do not allow more than a tenth part of that time for the whole period of earth life until now. Indeed it only allows eighteen million years for the contraction of our planet from infinit space, and announces that in five million years our sun will be reduced to half its present volume, when of course all life on this earth will hav ceased.

"O star-eyed science, hast thou wandered there
To waft us back the message of despair?"

The cooling or contraction of the sun has never been proved inductivly, and never will be. But perhaps in the course of a hundred thousand years it will be known that the heat of the sun has sensibly increased. W. H. B.

THE opinions of the heir to the thrones of Prussia and Germany, where the personal predilections of the sovereign are still of such vast importance, remain shrouded in so profound a mystery that the smallest indication with regard to them is sure to be eagerly caught up. A peculiar interest, therefore, attaches to the announcement that the crown prince and princess hav gone out of their way to express their respect for the memory of Schultze-Delitzsch and their sympathy with the work to which he devoted his life. Schultze-Delitzsch was above all a philanthropist and a social reformer, but he was also a politician, and there was a very close connection between his political views and the schemes which he favored and promoted for improving the condition of the working classes. What these political views were nobody needs to be reminded. Schultze-Delitzsch was a peculiarly strong and consistent Liberal—nay, Radical of the old school, intensely jealous of individual freedom, detesting bureaucratic influence, believing exclusivly in the principle of self-help. That is not the sort of man whom Prussian royalty—not even Frederick William IV. in his must gushing moments—has hitherto delighted to honor.—Pall Mall Gazette.

THEOLOGICAL ITEM.—The following conversation between two Irishmen actually occurred on an Austin street last Sunday morning, and was overheard by a gentleman sitting in his gallery, reading the morning paper: "I didn't obsarve yez in the choorch this mornin', Denis." "I don't wonder at it, for I was aslape in me bed at the toime." "Why do yez neglect your clerical duties, Denis?" "To tell yez the trooth, I'm bewildered entoirely by the number and divarsity of the choorches. There is the Hard Baptists, and Shell Baptists, and, be jabbers! the Camel Baptists. Then there's the Northern Methodicals, and the Southern Methodicals, and the Northern Presbyters, not countin' the Episcopates, and even the dom nagurs hav a new choorch on top av the hill."

AT a circus in Bismarck, D. T., the other day, according to the Bismarck Tribune, a colored man and his wife occupied front seats, and when a terrific gale of wind began to rip the canvas the woman planted her knees right down in the dust and began to call upon the Lord to save her and spare her life. The man threw his arms around a stake driven in the ground and cried out: "Look 'yah, ole woman, you bettah ease up on dat prayin' an' grab a centah pole if yo' doan wanter leab dis country ahead ob de reg'lah precession. Hit's all right to rassle in pra'r in de ordinary program ob life, but de Lawd ain't gwine to head off dis tornader as a pussonel favor to you. You jes' grab a centah pole now, an' shet yo' eyes."

PROFESSOR PROCTOR reasons that the moon has grown old six times as fast as the earth, a comparison of the masses and radiating surfaces of the two bodies making it evident that the earth's internal heat was originally sufficient to last six times as long as the moon's supply. On the very moderate assumption, therefore, that only twelve millions of years hav passed since the earth and the moon were at the same stage of planetary life, this astronomer shows us that sixty millions of years must elapse before the earth will hav reached the stage through which the moon is now passing.

CHARLES LAMB was once called upon to say grace. "Is there no minister present?" "No." "Then let us thank God," replied the humorist.

Letters from Friends.

BRADFORD, July 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Newton, in explaining the laws of gravitation, says a body once set in motion and acted on by no force will move forward in a straight line and with a uniform velocity forever. Mr. Editor, what are we to understand by the words "once set in motion?" Is it that there once existed in our solar system a force great enough to set our earth going at the rate of one and one-half million miles in twenty-four hours, and then disappeared ghostlike (as no astronomer has found it since it set our planets going)? Or is it that Newton did not understand or know the force that moves the planets, and used this first-impulse idea merely to cover up what he could not explain? Or is it as a student of astronomy told me—who, by the way, is a member of the Presbyterian church—that it was the power of God; and where, he added, can you find better evidence of a living God than this?

Which is it, or is it at all? If it is, how is it? Can you, or anyone, explain? G. A. KORNER.

OREGON, MO., July 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: When a novel, strange, incredible phenomenon is to be investigated, shall we giv more credit to those who persist in denying, doubting, and discrediting it, or to those who affirm and accredit the same? I am aware that Hume's celebrated argument against miracles is employed by skeptics, but a little clear thinking will show that it has no application. Miracles, such as raising the dead, are contrary to all experience. For ages no eye-witness has come forward to attest a miracle. But one might almost as well say birth and death are contrary to experience as to say that Spiritual phenomena are so, for there are thousands, yes, millions, of people living who never saw a child born or a person die. But there are thousands of witnesses to spiritual phenomena of this kind; they are of ripe years, of good understanding, large experience, learned in arts, sciences, or trades requiring sharp powers of observation. They were very skeptical when they began to observe—often hostil; they examined long and faithfully, and often knowingly took upon themselvs shame and scorn for affirming their belief in the genuinness of the phenomena. To merely name them would occupy several of your columns. Now, either I am not qualified to weigh testimony, or else those who make light of their conclusions are writing of what they know very little. Take the "Report of the London Dialectical Society." That alone, under the circumstances, is enough to establish the facts alleged. Take the reports of Crookes, Wallace, Zoellner, Hare, DeMorgan, and others. Add to these this one fact so overlooked and so despised by the unthinking—that all history is full of examples of these spiritual occurrences. What are we to say? Surely it will not do to wave these statements aside after the manner of "Podsnap!" Those who write of these things after the manner of Truesdell ought to reflect one moment in this way: Suppose the mass of mankind were to treat me and my statements as I am treating those of others? Let me say this in conclusion: In all this world's experience there never was such a thing as this—that even half a dozen ordinarily honest, disinterested persons conspired to deceive the world and deliberatety lie about certain facts. It could not be. Show me the interest, and I will believe a lie has been told.

CLARKE IRVINE.

ADRIAN, July 23, E.M. 283.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in the last number of THE TRUTH SEEKER a little criticism on my article of June 16th, on the subject of "Materialistic Immortality," by J. H. Hirt. Friend Hirt commences his article in a very friendly and respectful manner—a manner worthy the notice of every critic—and then adds: "Perhaps I did err in saying that mind was material;" then admits to Mr. Ringer that brain is the cause and mind the effect to a certain extent only. Brain, he says, we know is material, and therefore subject to the same laws that the matter of any other part of our system is subject to. But is it brain only, he asks, that causes this effect? Can a pulp of gross matter in itself contain a power capable of performing such wonderful functions? I always thought not, which, perhaps, caused me to conclude—and that, perhaps, too hastily—that mind is material. But more of this at another time.

All right, Friend Hirt, but be sure and keep within the range of common sense, so that we carnal-minded folks can get a glimpse, at least, of what you mean. This subject of—not mind and matter, but matter and mind, is a great subject indeed, and it is well for us all to keep within the range of common sense, and not waste time and paper in garrulous words without intelligent meaning.

In reference to mind or spirit being anything else than a property of matter, science is silent. Winwood Reade, in his book, "Martyrdom of Man," is intensely interesting. (And right here let me say to those of our friends who hav not seen this grand work of nearly 600 pages, written by this scientific, historical, and truly honest traveler, that they should send to THE TRUTH SEEKER office and get one; price, $1.75). Now turn to page 392, and read along forty pages, and you will hear what science has to say on this subject of man, matter, mind, etc. But for the present we will read but a few lines from page 411, where he speaks in this way: "The origin of mind is an inscrutable mystery, but so is the origin of matter. If we go back to the beginning we find a world of gas, the atoms of which were kept asunder by excessiv heat. Where did these atoms come from? How were they made? What were they made for? In reply to these questions theology is garrulous, but science is dumb. . . . Mind is a property of matter. Matter is inhabited by mind. There can be no mind without matter."

And now, in reference to the balance of Friend Hirt's article, where he addressed himself to me, I think if he will read those forty pages over—in "Martyrdom of Man"—then take up THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 16th, and carefully read S. P. Putnam's article on page 370, then reread my article, he will be able to understand that all there is of us comes to us from the outside world—as Mr. Putnam has it, from the objectiv and not from the sensational. In his own words, sensation is the impact of the outward universe on the mind of man (on the brain, I should say).

And now, with saying this much, I am willing to leave this matter for the present with the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and remain as ever, a friend of human progress, S. D. MOORE.

SCIENCE AND S. P. ANDREWS.

COLUMBUS, July 18, 1883.

MR EDITOR: Please let me, too, hav a few words about S. P. Andrews.

First, I thank you much for publishing the plain, clear, and very able articles of Mr. Andrews and his opponents and critics.

Ever since I saw Mr. Andrews's magnificent brain, thirty-five years ago, and hav heard and read its products, I hav considered his to be the most comprehensiv mind, embracing all atoms and all worlds, all matter and all space, that I ever knew. He reminds me of Addison's ideal of God—"a being whose center is everywhere and circumference nowhere."

Through and from his well-developed symmetrical brain he looks out upon the external great whole, and with the very long levers of his front and upper brain he radiates out and sweeps over an immense and unmeasured scope, and sees all the relations and functions of the objectiv and subjectiv.

A Unitarian once said of the Universalists: "I wish they had less of the ist and more of the universal." So, I suppose, Mr. Andrews can say the same of his critics.

Wakeman and Putnam are very clear and able, and I feast on their illuminated and penetrating minds.

Andrews is all-sided, all-comprehensiv, and sees all that anybody else does, and generally much more, and much beyond, and often much more right under their noses and eyes, right around and within them. His front-brain drawers are full of perceptiv objects or raw material below, and full of theological, inferential, deductiv, digestiv, classifying, elaborating, generalizing, finishing faculties above. His Universology is the product, the necessary product, of his fine, activ, well-balanced front and upper brain. There is a correspondence between and a nice adjustment of his Universology to his cerebral developments and activities.

When all our brains are as full, large, fine, and activ as S. P. Andrews's, then we shall all be clear-sighted Universologists, and be able to see the relations of the objectiv or raw material (seen through the lower front brain) to the finished fabric of the upper front brain.

The points I want to make are that "the agreement of our subjectiv ideas with the objectiv order of the world" is the result of the combined and cooperativ action of all the organs or forces of the front brain; that Universology requires for its full and clear understanding and comprehension every organ of the lower, observing and fact-gathering brain, and then and at once the action of the higher and logical brain to manipulate and elaborate these phenomena and facts into the finished form of knowledge or science.

As the perceptiv organs of the intellectual are, as Mr. Andrews says, "begripped," organically, to the adjoining reasoning organs above, so the objectiv and subjectiv are eternally geared together, acting and reacting upon each other and producing exact scientific knowledge.

It is no wonder that ordinary and fragmentary front brains do not understand and appreciate Mr. Andrews's all-comprehensiv philosophy.

J. H. COOK.

NEW HAVEN, July 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Reading through the last number of your paper I am induced to address to you a few lines. Of course all your readers are aware what this part of the country presents in the way of religious liberty. Connecticut was the state which can lay claim, I believe, to the first capital punishment of a woman for witchcraft in the time of the colonies. Since then education and influx of such as are not Puritan descendants hav done much to create a somewhat liberal spirit here, but the majority of present inhabitants are still strongly addicted, outwardly at least, to that monster of ridiculous superstition, Christianity. Last month I addressed to the Morning News, a bright young paper here, an article in which I attempted to show that Sunday, as enforced here, is contrary to all spirit of tolerance, liberty, and, above all, the vested rights guaranteed by our Constitution, advising that the churches had better shut up shop if they found it necessary for their existence to hav laws created making all people conform to their ideas of Sunday observance, etc. The article was worded quite strongly, and I did not suppose the paper would dare publish it. I know none of the others here would run the chances of thus injuring their subscription list by being so outspoken; but the Morning News did, to my intense surprise, bring the article in question, just as written, and, what is still more wonderful for this city, gave it a powerful indorsement in an editorial. Such straws certainly show which way the wind blows, and I shall stir up the subject again shortly. I expected that some fanatic Christian would take up the matter and attempt to justify the position of the church, but, to my regret, such did not happen. That would hav opened a chance for clearing up a few points in the eyes of good believers, and I was prepared to take advantage of it.

I hav been handing my papers, after they were read, to others, and think I shall get some subscribers for you. You might send sample copies to the names inclosed. I think you could strike oil somewhere.

Please advise me through THE TRUTH SEEKER if there is a Liberal League in New Haven, and its officers' names. C. F. DEMMER.

[League No. 15 is located in our correspondent's city. Lester Robinson, president; A. F. Hume, treasurer, and Arthur S. Welch, secretary, 10 Hughes Place.—ED. T. S.]

HELENA, July 23, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: W. S. Bell made us a short call on his way east. He lectured in Tecumseh the 17th ult. He is the same old Bell, and the Christians tremble when they listen to the ring. I hope the Bell will continue to ring as long as there is there is a Christian to be found. Truly, W. P. BROOKS, M.D.

BUSHNELL, July 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been reading THE TRUTH SEEKER for a long time on credit, for which I am very thankful, for I could not get along without it. I hav read every copy since it started in Paris, Ill., and I think I shall continue to read it as long as I can see to read. It is more dear to me than the Christians' Bible is to them. So help me, dear TRUTH SEEKER.

Find money order for $2 50 on subscription.

O. P. TEITSWORTH.

PICKENS COUNTY, TEXAS, July 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I hav a place about eighteen miles north of Gainesville, Texas, on Red river, in the Chickasaw Nation—about 1,000 acres in cultivation and under fence. I would like to form a stock company with some Liberal party or parties for a term of years, to run the place as a stock farm. I want the men capable of running such a farm, and with money. I believe we hav as healthy a country as anywhere. If you know of any such person or persons, please ask them to come down and see for themselvs. Yours respectfully, R. H. LOVE.

DEERSVILLE, July 22, 283.

MR. EDITOR: As my subscription to your valuable paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, has expired, I inclose $1.25 for six months more. I loaned a number containing "The Christian Revision Councils," and can't get it again. Please send me another copy of it, as I valued it very high. It is a sticker to Bible worshipers. It makes them squirm to hear of the very holy men who canonized God's holy word, as they call it. I should like very much if some sharp man would come here and giv some lectures on the subject of Freethought. Our clergy here are still preaching dead gods and live devils. It is very strange indeed that persons claiming to be intelligent can act the cannibal in an enlightened age of the nineteenth century, eating a dead god and drinking his blood, who died eighteen hundred years ago.

A. AULD.

GRAY, July 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My subscription as a trial subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER expired some time ago, but I hav not renewed till now; so please find the inclosed price—$1.25—for six months. I highly esteem the paper for its scientific teachings and its revelations of mythical theology. I liv in a Christian community, where Christianity prevails, and where but little Freethought is exercised. Now, if I tell my tenets concerning futurity to a Christian, he is almost struck dumb, or as if he was shocked with a galvanic shock, if he don't fly in a passion and become very angry. I am of an inquisitiv disposition, wanting to know further into such mysteries as biblical myths, but had no source from which to start, till I recently obtained a copy of the "Age of Reason" (though my friends told me not to hav anything to do with the book, as it would ruin me), but I sent and got the book, and it has led me to other sources of light, thought, and Liberalism, as my wish is to read all and hold fast that which is good and reject the evil. So I am truly glad and thankful to you and all Liberalists who hav assisted in disseminating such information, which is calculated to elevate and enlighten the minds of humanity, and especially to the departed D. M. Benrett, for the information and freedom of mind his publications hav given me. For such information as is given in THE TRUTH SEEKER will remove this fabulous theology from among us, so in a few more generations they can start from a more permanent foundation.

You may expect my support as far as my abilities will permit for books, papers, etc.

LEANDER WOODY.

CARSON CITY, NEV., July 26, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed please find $5—$2.50 to apply on the Monument Fund for D. M. Bennett; and $2,50 apply on the number of THE TRUTH SEEKER sent to me at this place. I am not, as a rule, much in favor of spending money in building monuments in cemeteries, but I see by report in THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 21st inst. that the funds contributed are not quite sufficient to pay for the monument being built, so hav sent my mite. I would much prefer to hav seen a fine Bennett Hall built. I will pay $100 toward building such a hall, and if needed will double or treble the amount. I am well pleased with THE TRUTH SEEKER. I take something over twenty different papers and periodicals; THE TRUTH SEEKER is usually the one read first. I take two numbers, one mailed to this place and one to Buffalo, N. Y. After reading them, I giv them to others to read. I think there is no other way that we can do so much in opposing churchcraft and priestcraft, as in a free distribution of Liberal literature. I hav traveled over the road between here and Buffalo fifteen times, and every time hav distributed Liberal and Spiritualistic tracts and papers along the route, mostly of D. M. Bennett's writings. I use every effort I can to induce young people to read them. I find they very soon change their views on religious matters after they commence reading Liberal works. I gave some reading matter to the son of a Methodist clergyman who was member of his father's church; it very soon spoiled him for a Christian. I hav supplied him liberally with books and papers for the last three years, which he reads and distributes and has been the means of opening the eyes of scores of young persons to the absurdities of church doctrins. One instance was that of a young man of his acquaintance, who was to be baptized the next Sunday. While out gunning with him, he made it a point to giv him a few Liberal ideas and contrast them with church nonsense, which so convinced the candidate for baptism that when the day came for his washing he failed to come to time, the church losing their game in this instance. I fear I am making my letter to long. It is my wish that you may liv long to continue the work so nobly begun by our lamented friend D. M. Bennett. Truly yours, A. H. FRANK.

MR. PUTNAM RATHER SPITEFULLY OBJURGATED.

NEW YORK, August 6, 1883.

MR. PUTNAM: In the face of your own logic your argument and appeal addressed to the reason of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER is amusing. An appeal to reason against reason!

You claim to think—and I admit your claim—that you hav made "a fair statement of the fundamental affirmations of Universology concerning mind and matter." Your claim is a "fact," but the other "fact" remains that you hav made no fair statement at all. Which "fact" is "supreme" in this case? Your statement is partially true and partially false, but so false that the falsity vitiates the whole. Besides, the question of which is first—mind or matter—in being or existence, has not been brought up at all in this discussion. It has been considered only as to which was first in obtaining knowledge—and you yourself hav said "there is no priority." And you accuse Mr. Andrews of not sticking "to the point under discussion."

You claim to think that you hav made a fair statement of Mr. Andrews's position on the "Supremacy of Reason." Your claim is a "fact," but the "fact" remains that you misunderstand and wholly and totally misrepresent him. And you hav only to read his reply to you and Wakeman "in solidarity" to perceive this; and I venture to affirm that Mr. Andrews knows just as well as you do whether THE TRUTH SEEKER and the Investigator and scientific rationalists hold the same position that he does or whether he holds the same position that they do or not.

You claim to make a fair statement of his doctrin of the "infinit reason." Where did you get your quotation marks for that? Mr. Andrews holds no such doctrin. He does hold, as all "scientific rationalists" do, to the supremacy of the human reason in all matters of judgment; that that is the final arbiter in all matters of dispute, and he holds, also, that the human reason is the highest reason known to man. He does not acknowledge, nay, he does not conceive of, any "infinit reason" back of the material universe.

Your representation of his doctrin or science of analogy is as slanderous as the rest. Where you get your understanding of Universology I cannot conceive, unless you "evolved it from the depths of your own consciousness." You certainly did not get it from the teachings of Mr. Andrews. I hav been his student more or less interruptedly for the last fifteen years, and I hav heard no such ideas as you hav set forth as his.

He "believes in conforming to the outward, to a certain extent at least." You are complimentary!

Your assertion that Mr. Andrews is not "a scientific rationalist" is an assumption that you know—are capable of judging better than he—whether he is or not. Well, if I liked to say unpleasant things I might, but I forbear.

Universology not a science? Indeed! Read Dr. Ellsberg's testimonial. Compare that with your estimate. And he a man, too, who is not only a scientist in the special sense of the term, such as you do not claim to be, but a sciento-philosopher as well. Read the testimonials of Prof. Rice and of J. Storer Cobb and the others. They are no scientists and you are, and it is your special province to decide what is science and what is not!

Before you again philanthropically make the attempt to enlighten the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER as to what are and what are not the doctrins of Universology, I advise you to sit for a short time at the feet of the master with a little of that "humility" which you ascribe so exclusivly to "science," and learn what Universology is. Or you might learn something of the pupils. Very respectfully,

A. C. MACDONALD.

FORSYTH, GA., August 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In the slang of the regenerated, this part of the Lord's moral vinyard is just now being treated to the sight of a tremendous attempt by the preachers to bring about "an outpouring of the Holy Ghost." In other words, the annual whitewashing of the backsliding saints, and the scooping in of stiff-necked outsiders, is in progress day and night, the most vigorous assaults being made upon the battlements of his satanic majesty's territory. As the buzzards congregate from afar around the defunct bovine, so hav the "gospel sharps" gathered together here to enjoy a feast of souls and a flow of divine drivel. But, "parturiunt montes, nascetur ridiculus mus." The celestial fishermen hav made a water-haul; the fish are too sharp to bite, and too strong to be scooped in with the nets. For which the Lord be praised! There is too much intelligence here, and too many reading and thinking men for so-called "revivals of religion" (God save the mark!) to make any headway. The "shepherds" with one accord pronounced this the hardest place they ever saw, and after two weeks of ranting, shouting, singing, praying, and weeping, they hav consigned Forsyth to everlasting perdition. The kind of religion preached here by the Methodists and Baptists is too dead for a revival, and all that remains to be done is to giv it decent burial, and send for "Bob" Ingersoll to deliver the funeral oration. As an evidence of the "style" of one of the "wrestling Jacobs" conspicuous among the clerical mountebanks who hav been "cutting their shines" for the amusement of our people, I must cite you to the "Rev." Christian, an imported bulldozer of sinners.

Our local secular paper, run by a sort of camp sutler of the army of salvation, speaks of his efforts: ". . . Rev. H. C. Christian conducted the meetings the remainder of the week. He did some of the most earnest and powerful preaching that we hav ever heard; but the effect was nothing like what might hav been expected. Only a few outside the church went to the altar for prayer. . . . Three persons, during the meeting, applied for membership."

This deluded fanatic would proceed thus to entrap the sinners: "The whole congregation will please rise to their feet. Let all those who hav found Christ be seated." This trick would leave perhaps a score of persons standing, too honest to sneak down to avoid being conspicuous; upon whom the reverend gentleman would proceed to pour out the seven vials of wrath. One night he made the following statement: "I hav a brother and a sister-in-law about to die; I am summoned away to see them; but such is my interest in the salvation of this people that if you desire me to remain and preach longer I will do so. Let all who wish me to remain come forward and giv me their hand." There was a painful silence for at least five minutes. No one stirred. The sensible people seemed to think he had better go where duty called. But finally three or four little girls went forward and "squeezed his flipper." That was all. But, nothing abashed, he announced that he would pray over it that night and do as the Lord directed. As he stayed over, it is to be presumed that he did so under special divine instructions.

At another time, in the midst of a great tumult of shouting, groaning, and singing, he yelled at the top of his voice, like a Comanche on the warpath: "Come up to this altar, all of you, and the Lord will convert you before you could say 'Jack Robinson!'"

Such is the style in which men who claim a divine mission are endeavoring to spread the gospel in a civilized community. It is hardly necessary to add that it don't spread. A few weak-minded women and their little children are nearly the only recruits gained by the onslaught of such men.

"Let there be light," has been spoken here; and the light of truth is slowly but surely dispelling the darkness that has been thrown around religious subjects by the efforts of such men as this blatant ignoramus—even in Georgia, the worst priest-ridden state of the South. Yours for more light,

JOHNNIE REB.

Poetry.

Freethought Rhymes.

In days gone by, the people thought
That only what the clergy taught
  Was worthy of belief;
They held the keys of heaven's gate
And knew the mysteries of fate—
  Eternal joy or grief.

Now, men hav learned that all may pry,
With open ear and eager eye,
  Throughout all nature's realm.
There's no monopoly of light,
And he is safe who does the right;
  For law controls the helm.

T'was said that God from naught made earth,
And gave to varied life its birth,
  Within six solar days.
He made things all at once complete,
All very good to his conceit,
  So marvelous were his ways.

But science says: Throughout the past
The world has grown, in ages vast,
  By nature's forward plan;
The whirling star-dust formed the world,
And life by slow degrees unfurled
  From Moneron to Man.

T'was said that erring man eat fruit
When tempted by a talking brute:
  God's wrath upon him fell!
But mercy kept a chosen few,
For whom Christ's death should sin undo,
  And save their souls from hell.

But now we learn that man arose
From savage natures, and his foes
  By knowledge will be slain.
His path is ever up and on,
And conquests, by his study won,
  Redeem from ill and pain.

The railroad, telegraph, and press,
Work mightily to render less
  Impunity of crime.
Extension of the reign of law,
From evil deeds will men withdraw,
  And haste the golden time.

Man need not fear eternal wrath,
Nor vengeance lurking in his path,
  Should he presume to think.
But nature givs her richest prize,
To him who dares in search to rise,
  And at her fountains drink.

Her works new revelations giv,
A Bible that will ever liv
  And shed increasing light.
Beyond the writings of the Jews,
Her precepts blessedness diffuse,
  And teach the true and right.

Ye earnest men! no longer shrink
From speaking what you truly think!
  Proclaim the truth you find!
And let free search, free speech, free thought,
By blood of ancient worthies bought,
  Advance the human mind!

R. C. A.

Music in Nature.

From the Century.

Far, far away, in fields of waving gold,
  I hear the tassels' rustling symphonies,
While myriad insect orchestras unfold
  Their rasping medleys in the apple-trees.

In seas of creamy clover, white and pink,
  Hum tippling bees, all drowsy with perfume;
And, in the orchard, one wild bobolink
  Breaks the repose of twilight's dreamy gloom.

The wind wakes solos in the somber pine
  Upon the hillside, desolate and lone;
And, in the wood, through labyrinths of vine,
  Is heard the brooklet's lisping monotone—

Which mossy caverns, echoing, repeat;
  While o'er my soul, in tender changes, flows—
Murmurous, melodious, and strangely sweet—
  The subtle music no musician knows.

Trouble in the Church.

"Things is looking smoky down our way again," remarked the Jamaica farmer, as he paid the cash for advertising a lost cow. "It isn't what might be called pleasant times among the sistern."

"Which church is in trouble this trip?" inquired the cashier, receipting the bill.

"The Baptists hav got into trouble among themselvs," replied the old man with a sigh. "You see, the Baptists fixed it up for a strawberry and cream game, and on the sale of the tickets was doin' considerable ropin' in among outsiders. They had it all laid out for a big swell, when the first thing they knowed the pa'son slipped his wind, and a big question arose whether they should go on with the shin dig or lay it over until they'd hold the stiff. A good many was for goin' right ahead just as though nothin' had happened, but the rest was inclined to think the pa'son wouldn't like it, and wanted to postpone the tea fight until they had planted the old man, and then they could go on and hav a good time without exciting comment in other congregations. They came to me about it, bein' a deacon."

"What did you advise?" asked the cashier.

"I advised them to hav the funeral and the festival together, and charge the mourners so much a head to hear the service and heave in a plate of cream at the end. That would hav enabled all hands to get in on the last sad rites and caught the whole business for the festival."

"How did they seem to take that?" inquired the cashier.

"They thought that was just the scheme," replied the old man, "and I lay right up to the masthead for the suggestion. But they didn't fetch it," and the old man heaved a heavy sigh.

"What interfered?" demanded the cashier, with increasing interest.

"When they came to examin the matter, they found they didn't hav ice enough to keep the corpse and the strawberries, and so they had to hav the funeral and the festival separate. That mistake busted the church for the summer. The mourners kicked because they didn't get any ice cream at the funeral, and the people raised a row because there was no corpse at the festival. And there's where the matter stands now."

"How do you imagin it is coming out?" interrogated the cashier.

"That's pretty hard to tell," muttered the old man. "You can't judge what church folks will do when they get started. I recommended that they hav a post mortem and admit all hands holdin' festival tickets, but they didn't seem to think that would work, and now they are figurin' on another festival to admit the mourners at half price and giv the people at the last festival a ride at the next funeral. It's a mighty hard thing to run a church in a country place, but we've got to hav some kind of a contrivance to hold the Christians together, and I don't want to see our Baptist racket broken up."

And the old man went off meditating on the possibilities, while the cashier informed a reporter that salaries could not be anticipated, and took out his own for two weeks in advance.—Ex.

Help Spread the Light.

It is acknowledged by all that the best way to spread Liberal principles is by papers, tracts, and books. Every issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a good missionary document, and every Freethought book sold is a silent pleader and propagator of the truth. There are thousands of Freethinkers all over the country whom we do not know and who do not know this paper. But our friends know them, and we ask such as are willing to spend a few moments for the good of Liberalism to send us their names and addresses, that we may mail them copies of the paper. We are willing to furnish the copies necessary for this purpose and mail them, as we hope a few extra subscribers may thereby be obtained, which will make the pecuniary outlay square. But the main object is to spread the knowledge of Liberalism, its aims and objects, what we think and why we think it. We would like every one to know that the Christian faith is a rope of sand, that the churches are taking the money of the people without giving any return. It is the duty of all Freethinkers to let their neighbors know that the fires of hell hav been quenched.

Many Liberals say they hav no time to devote to missionary work, and do not like to argue with their church acquaintances. Very well, send us the names and let THE TRUTH SEEKER argue the case. Where a man is Liberally inclined—and not dead to all sense and reason—we hope and think THE TRUTH SEEKER will bring him clear out of the fog.

To stimulate our friends in this work we make the following offer, only asking that when the sender has read the pamphlets he shall hand them around that others may be benefited.

To every one sending us the names and addresses of twenty-five independent men and women who do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who do their own thinking, we will send one copy of either of the below-named twenty-five cent books:

"Influence of Christianity upon Civilization," by B. F. Underwood.

"Advancement of Science." The Inaugural Address of Prof. John Tyndall, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Chronicles of Simon Christianus." His manifold and wonderful adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. Fidel.

"Religion not History." An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F.W. Newman, of the London University.

"The Besant-Hatchard Debate." A two nights' debate between Mrs. Annie Besant and Rev. A. Hatchard on "Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World."

"The Clergyman's Victims." A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.

"Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahweh or Jehovah," shown to be the worship of the Devil.

"Gottlieb: His Life." A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam.

"Jesus Christ." His Life, Miracles, Deity, Teachings, and Imperfections. By W. S. Bell.

"Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier," a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings.

"Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, The Book of the Generation of Jesus." First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up.

To those who do not know twenty-five persons whom a perusal of THE TRUTH SEEKER would be likely to benefit, but who can send a list of ten names, we will send either of the following by D. M. Bennett:

"Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind."
"The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers."
"The Gods of Superstition."
"The Great Religions of the World."
"Jesus Christ." Considered as an Infidel.
"An Hour with the Devil."
"Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds."
"Honest Questions and Honest Answers."

Or either of the following by Underwood:

"What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity."
"Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."
"Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint."
"Paine the Political and Religious Reformer."
"Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs."
"Materialism and Crime."
"Will the Coming Man Worship God?
"Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity."

This is a chance to enlighten a large body of people, to help THE TRUTH SEEKER, and to get good books to circulate by only a few moments' work. We hope the responses will be many.

CORRESPONDENCE.

An honorable, intelligent man of 25, without means, wishes to correspond with a lady of suitable age with some means. The lady who wishes to hav a good husband and to be a good wife for life has a chance. Address, E. A. NYGREN,
2t30 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.

CHRISTIANITY VS. HUMANITY.

GEORGE CHAINEY
will lecture on this subject
AT GERMAN MASONIC TEMPLE,
220 EAST FIFTEENTH ST.,
(Rooms of the Liberal Club),
SUNDAY EVENING, AUGUST 26,
AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.
TICKETS, - FIFTY CENTS.
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

CHANDOS CLASSICS.

A series of standard works in poetry, history, and general literature. Fine binding.

	Price	Post
Legendary Ballads of England and Scotland. By John S. Roberts	.65	.08
German Literature. Richter, Richler, Zschokke, Tieck	.65	.0
Complete Angler. Isaac Walton and Charles Colton	.65	.08
Lives of Novelists and Dramatists. By Sir Walter Scott	.65	.0
Poetical Works of Eliza Cook	.65	.08
Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By Edward Gibbon. In four volumes	2 60	.32
Poetical Works of Charles Mackay	.65	.08
History of England. By Henry Hallam	.65	.08
Lockhart's Spanish Ballads and Southey's Chronicle of the Cid	.65	.08
The Romance of History. England. By Henry Neele. Illustrated	.65	.08
The Romance of History. India. Hobart Caunter, B D	.65	.08
The Romance of History. Italy. C. Macfarlane. " " Spain. Don T. de Trueba	.65	.08
Doctor Syntax. His Three Tours in Search of the Picturesque, of Consolation, of a Wife. With colored illustrations	.65	.08
Homer's Iliad	.65	.08
" Odyssey	.65	.08
Life and Remains of John Clare. By J. L. Cherry	.65	.08
Selections from the Talmud. By H. Polano	.65	.08
Everyday Book of Modern Literature. By C. H. Townsend	.65	.08
Johnson's Lives of the Poets	.65	.08
Milton	.65	.08
Essays on Chivalry, Romance, and the Drama. By Sir Walter Scott	65	.08

SHAKSPERE'S WORKS.

	Price	Post
Complete. Fireside Edition. Crown octavo. Large type. Morocco, gilt edges. Illustrated. With a full and Comprehensive Life, Notes, Glossary, etc.	4 00	.50
Crown Octavo.	3 75	.48
The Avon Edition. Sheep, marbled edges, library style	3 00	.42
In three volumes. Comedies, Histories, Tragedies. Half Russia, gilt top	3 00	.48
The same, in cloth	2 50	.48
Dramatic and Poetic Works, complete in one volume. Illustrated, with life by Alexander Dyce. Sheep, marbled edges	2 50	.38
Scarlet Border Edition. Illustrated. Complete, red and green. Morocco, gilt edges	1 50	.20
Handy Volume. Shakspere complete, in 13 vols. Green cloth, red edges	5 00	.35
Arundel Edition. From the text of Clark and Wright. Illustrated	1 50	.24
In 3 vols., brown cloth, edited by Clark and Wright	1 50	.27
Complete from the text of Johnson, Stevens, and Reed. Octavo. Paper Binding,	60	.18
Large quarto edition bound in gold and black. Illustrated	1 00	.24
Arlington Edition	60	.16

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

Poetry.

The Wanderer.

Upon a mountain's hight, far from the sea,
I found a shell;
And to my curious ear this lonely thing
Ever a song of ocean seemed to sing—
Ever a song of ocean seemed to tell.

How came this shell upon the mountain hight?
Ah, who can say
Whether there dropped by some too careless hand—
Whether there cast when oceans swept the land
Ere the eternal had ordained the day?

Strange, was it not? far from its nativ sea,
One song it sang—
Sang of the mighty mysteries of the tide—
Sang of the awful, vast profound and wide—
Softly with echoes of the ocean rang.

And, as the shell upon the mountain's hight
Sings of the sea,
So do I ever, leagues and leagues away—
So do I ever, wandering where I may,
Sing, O my home—sing, O my home, of thee!

What Is the Use?

From the Times-Democrat.

What is the use of this impetuous haste?
The end is certain. Let us take our time,
And hoard the vital forces that we waste
Before our day has reached its golden prime.

What is the use of rushing with spent breath
After the old age, its furrows, its white hair?
Why need we hurry so to welcome Death,
Or go half-way with hands stretched out to Care?

There is no use. Dear heart, if we but wait,
All things will find us. Let us pause, I say;
We cannot go beyond the silent gate
That lies a short day's journey down the way.

So let us take our time in youth's fair bowers,
The summer season is so brief at best.
Let us look on the stars and pluck the flowers,
And when our feet grow weary, let us rest.

Let us take time for love and its delight;
It is the one sweet thing that pays for all—
The bitterness of life, for sorrow's blight,
For pain's despair, and death's funereal pall.

In that lost era when the world was new,
Love was men's first pursuit and life's excuse.
Now has that time come back to me and you.
Why should we seek for more? What is the use?

The Sought-for Found.

BOTTOM FACTS CONCERNING THE SCIENCE OF SPIRITUALISM. Derived from Careful Investigations covering a period of Twenty-five years. By John W. Truesdell. A Book containing over 300 pages of carefully prepared, intensely interesting, and highly valuable matter, together with numerous illustrations which are indispensable to a thoroughly clear comprehension of so-called spiritual mysteries. Elegantly bound in cloth. Price $1.50.

"The very thing my soul hath panted for these twenty-five years," was my glad thought as I opened the book and read its title page; but when I went and perused the motto, "If I am deceived I pray that I may not know it," my enthusiasm sunk to zero, and I half determined the book was not worth wasting time on. I had read so much for so long of spirits and spirit-sayings and doings, that, like the old theologies, they grew to be a wearisome sameness of platitudes—full of myths, fables, errors, and superstition, with only here and there a grain of truth to keep them alive. I read nearly half through the book before I could determin whether the author was endeavoring to establish more firmly a belief in the ism or to entirely overthrow it, so impartially did he giv to both sides a full and patient hearing. At last it dawned upon me that Truesdell was one of the most perfect adepts in the art of clothing his facts with a veil of ironical, caustic sarcasm that would naturally deceive one into believing he meant precisely what he said. To very many of us, who hav followed up every phase of Spiritism since the first appearance of the Rochester rappings, this exposure of the trickery and fraud practiced by mediums is nothing new; but the old facts, when given by one who has been there, by one who has carefully investigated the subject for twenty-five years, one who has tried, practiced, and accomplished the feats attributed to spirits, and one who bears an unimpeachable character as a banker, a neighbor, a friend, and a citizen—each revelation carries the weight of full conviction with it. Such an adept was Truesdell in producing phenomena, and so wonderful were the manifestations at his seances, that Spiritualists had no doubt of his being a powerful medium, and they accepted and indorsed him as such. His contributions to the Banner of Light were always read with interest and accepted by Spiritual believers as evidences of his desire for truth divested of fraud and charlatanism, but, alas! when the Banner found out that even its own darling pet frauds were classed along with the rest, it was the one black drop too much, and it thus turns upon its once cherished correspondent—giving the book the best possible recommendation to a Materialist who believes death ends all, for we feel sure where it condemns we shall be glad to accept. It says:

"It has never been our lot, in the course of twenty-six years' experience, to meet with a book embodying more virulent stabs by innuendo at personal reputation, more arrant self-conceit and over-balanced bombast, 'full of sound and fury, signifying nothing,' than this collection of three hundred and thirty-one large-typed-small-mattered pages which hav thus found their way to the public through the press of a ready publisher. . . .

"Like his action regarding his alleged mediumship or its opposit, his book is written in such a vein of double entente that when he makes what would be a direct statement in other men's vernacular, it is in his instance veiled either in stilted bathos or virulent sarcasm to such an extent that his meaning is not directly apparent."

As I run over the pages of this collection of "Bottom Facts," and see the comic, unique, yet faithful-to-the-letter illustrations, I marvel that I did not see at once the author's full design. The long, solemn-faced, expectant visages of the sitters, as they are waiting for raps and other manifestations, are ridiculously comic, and they so nearly tally to the real that one is irresistibly drawn into smiling over them as of pictures of some long-gone superstitious, half-forgotten age.

Friends, I just wish I was able to print twenty-five cent editions of this book, to scatter broadcast over the land. There is no subject on which I now feel so deep an interest as this great and fast-spreading delusion—for delusion I feel it is, even though so many dear and beloved friends and relativs assure me it is a reality. Long arrays of ponderous and powerful names are given as proof of its authenticity. But remember in the past just as many and just as great names could hav been brought forward as believers in a flat earth, an endless hell, a universal deluge—walled up waters—animals that could talk, ghosts that could beget sons, gods that could plant wheat and reap potatoes, or any miracle you can conceive of. To these all-powerful deities nothing was impossible. The believers would stake their all; aye, life itself, on the truth of their delusion. But now our Spiritual friends deny all these things, but their credulity accepts the materialization of fruits, flowers, diamonds, and even human beings out of a little pure air mixed with the aura of a medium. The old god-believers believed

"He took a pinch of nothing,
And made the glorious earth;
Another pinch of nothing,
And oceans had their birth.

A little lump of nothing
Produced the powerful sun;
And so he worked on nothing
Till sky and stars were done.

And when the world was finished,
Of dust he made a man,
By mixing it with nothing,
On some mysterious plan.

Then took a rib from Adam,
With nothing for a knife,
And mixing it with nothing,
He made a full-grown wife."

And the new spirit believers believe a medium givs a nothing—i. e., a ghost or spirit, power to take a bit of common air, here in this chamber, and with a little invisible something emanating from the medium, create or form a roomful of real, tangible persons, clothed in real, tangible clothes, all of which can be felt and handled, and bits of them clipped off and preserved as mementos.

All I regret is the book is not four times as big. I hope you will all send for a copy and read and criticise it in our TRUTH SEEKER. I want bottom facts, and if you can knock the bottom out of Truesdell's facts I shall be very glad; yes, glad, even though it forces me to acknowledge I am on the wrong side, for, however certain we are that we hav the truth, we never regret it when we are once convinced we did not hav it. This is the beauty of a fact. It is always welcome—let it come from friend or foe. It is like a diamond. Its value is in itself. Yours, ELMINA.

IT is not, perhaps, generally known that Pope Leo XIII. is not only a writer, but, like Cutter of Long Island, "a sort of a poet." With great modesty, however, and perhaps to escape general criticism, he has confined his poetic effusions entirely to the Latin tongue. The St. James Gazette is not very enthusiastic over these productions. "We hav looked through the volume of verses just published," it says, "and we can say with absolute certainty that any average Eton boy could giv points to his holiness in the matter of Latin verses. But of course, as the work of a pope, it will hav a certain circulation."

THE average salary of Methodist ministers in New England is $560 per year.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS
The Truth Seeker,
With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid, FOR FIFTY CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A WIFE WANTED.
An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

LOVE AND CONJUGALITY.
Hints toward the true and felicitous in Love and Conjugality. Sexuality viewed from a higher ideal. New thoughts thereon, clearly presented, yet in unobjectionable shape. All in, or contemplating the conjugal relation should hav this essay. Sent on receipt of seven cents, postage, by S. G. LEWIS, GRASS VALLEY, CAL. 5t30

A REMARKABLE BOOK!
JUST PUBLISHED.
BOTTOM FACTS
CONCERNING
SPIRITUALISM!
The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.
Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.
Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y.
30tf

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
"NATURE'S HARMONY,"
Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.
"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."
A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.
200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.
Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.
The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."
The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."
Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.
The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.
Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.
What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

Interrogatories to Jehovah.
Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.
Established 1857. Beats the World.
There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.
Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.
If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.
REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.
GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.
Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.
Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.
"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).
40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.
No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.
No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.
No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.
No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.
No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.
Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.
No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.
No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.
A Fabricated Account of
A Scene at the Death-bed of
THOMAS PAINE.
DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?
18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,
Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S
SOCIOLOGY;
OR,
The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.
ILLUSTRATED.
Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 21 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1; Postage, three cent stamps.
Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.
Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever used. I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograph, and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, N. Y
6m9

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY Piano and Organ Co,

No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A.M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited, The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city.

THE GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place. New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY —OF— RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

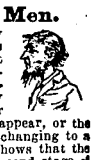
Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS



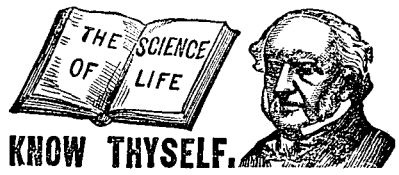
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc, but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
80 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

SCIENCE is thus teaching us the great age of the earth, and the great antiquity of the human race upon it. These great facts are very damaging to current theological dogmas, and pointedly disagree with the teachings of a pseudo revelation. In matters of this kind, however, science is the arbiter which the world will accept, and it is in vain for the adherents of obsolete theories to attempt to push her aside.—D. M. Bennett.

FOR my part, I long ago espoused the cause of religious liberty, not because that cause was popular, but because it was just; and I am not disposed to abandon the principles to which I hav been true through my whole life in deference to a passing clamor. The day may come, and may come soon, when those who are now loudest in raising that clamor may again be, as they hav formerly been, suppliants for justice. When that day comes I will try to prevent others from oppressing them, as I now try to prevent them from oppressing others. In the mean time I shall contend against their intolerance with the same spirit with which I may hereafter hav to contend for their rights.—Macaulay's Speech on Dissenter's Chapel Bill, 1844. [One of the noblest speeches of the many noble ones that Macaulay has left behind him. It is steeped in the philosophy of Locke, and penetrated with the fire of Milton's "Areopagitica." The occasion of the speech was temporary, and in itself of limited importance; but the principles involved in the discussion are for all times and for all seasons.—C. W. C.]

THERE is a virtue in passiv endurance which is often greater than the glory of success. It bears, it suffers, and still it hopes. It meets difficulties with a smile, and strives to stand erect beneath the heaviest burdens. Suffering, patiently and enduringly borne, is one of the noblest attributes of man. There is something so noble in the quality as to lift it into a highest region of heroism. It was a saying of Milton, "Who best can suffer best can do."—Dr. Smiles's Duty.

No endeavor is in vain;
Its reward is in the doing,
And the rapture of pursuing
Is the prize the vanquished gain.
—Longfellow.

A MAN'S greatness lies not in wealth or station, as the vulgar believe, nor yet in his intellectual capacity, which is often associated with the meanest moral character, the most abject servility to those in high places, and arrogance to the poor and lowly; but a man's true greatness lies in the consciousness of an honest purpose in life, founded on a just estimate of himself and everything else, in frequent self-examination, and a steady obedience to the rule which he knows to be right, without troubling himself, as the emp eror [M. A. Antoninus] says he should not, about what others may think or say, or whether they do or do not do that which he thinks and says and does.—George Long.

WHEN opinions are free, either in matters of government or religion, truth will finally and powerfully prevail.—Thomas Paine.

WHEN the question of religion came up for my decision, it was impossible for me to pin my faith upon the sleeve of any other person, or to be satisfied with anything less than the intelligent approval of my own judgment and conscience.—N. R. Waters.

HOW sick one is of all sermons such as they are! Why will men go on thrashing over and over again the old withered straw that was thrashed out centuries ago, when every field is waving with fresh, quite other crops craving for their hand.—Froude's Nemesis.

O GOD, from whom all blessings descend, whom the storm and the thunder obey, preserve us from error; deign to inform our minds; attach us to that eternal reason by which thou art guided and supported in the government of the world.—Cleanthes the Stoic (300 B.C.).

I SAY unto you that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance. —Jesus. O God, be merciful to the wicked; for to the good thou hast done everything in making them good.—Cleanthes.

THE popular religion insists that we are not saved by character; that character has nothing to do with salvation; that we are saved by the blood of Jesus, and by that alone. And yet a great majority of the votaries of the popular religion manifest a clean and honorable behavior. It is not in the bond. Salvation by character is our creed of creeds.—J. W. Chadwick.

OF different systems of faith, that is the best which is the truest.—Paley.

THE sincere man speaks as he thinks, believes as he pretends to believe, acts as he professes to act, and performs as he promises.—Dr. Sam. Smiles.

WITHHOLD not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it. Say not unto thy neighbor, "Go and come again, and tomorrow I will giv," when thou hast it by thee.—Proverbs iii, 27, 28.

LIGHT is the one thing wanted for the world. Put wisdom in the head of the world, and the world will fight its battles victoriously and be the best world man can make it.—Carlyle.

MANY Unitarians are Arians, that is, they believe that Jesus pre-existed. . . Other Unitarians, probably the larger part of them, believe that he was a man, supernaturally born of his mother only. . . . But there are many [and the number is constantly increasing] who believe, as I do, that Jesus was the son of Joseph and Mary; that the accounts prefixed to the gospels of Matthew and Luke, inconsistent with each other, are not genuin, but were taken from the thousand marvelous stories which were invented in the second and third centuries of the Christian era to magnify, in the eyes of the ignorant and credulous, the founder of the new religion, and to do away the reproach of his crucifixion.—What Do Unitarians Believe? by Rev. S. J. May.

Odds and Ends.

GOLIAH didn't liv long enough to accuse David of an ungenerous fling.

WHAT'S the use of being good when the gamblers all belong to the "better world."

THE cost of stopping a train of cars is said to be from 60 to 40 cents. When the train is stopped by another train these prices become somewhat inflated.

YOUNG men having experience in paying attention to young ladies assert that it is easier to drive with one hand than it is to row with one hand.

NEW JERSEY, it is claimed, is the only state where the farmers pick green blackberries, cover them with black varnish, and pass 'em off as perfectly ripe fruit.

"PLEASE to giv me something, sir?" says an old woman. "I had a blind child; he was my only means of subsistence, and the poor boy has recovered his sight!"

"I ALWAYS hav sense enough to know when to stop drinking," remarked Sandy. "I thought you generally stopped because you hadn't cents enough to keep on," said Zenus.

AN OX team is singularly symbolic of courtship and marriage, for it begins with a bow, continues with a ring and a yoke, progresses with a tongue, and ends by presenting to the world the picture of a goaded pair.

"WERE you in the late war?" asked a veteran of a badly demoralized citizen, who came hobbling down the street on a crutch. "I don't know how late you mean," was the sad reply. "She gave me this one last night before tea."

A FRENCH lion tamer quarreled with his wife, a powerful virago, and was chased by her all around the tent. On being sorely pressed he took refuge in the cage among the lions. "Oh, you contemptible coward!" she shouted, "come out if you dare!"

THE following placard hangs up in a Tennessee store window:

Peppermint Ile for Hed ake
Bellie "
Toth "

THE coal man's cart broke down as he was going to weigh the coal. "You needn't fuss to weigh that coal," said the man that had purchased it. "If it's heavy enough to break down the cart, it weighs more than any ton of coal I ever got before. I'm satisfied."

THE Princess Louise is going to send a number of her paintings, both oil and water-color, to the Boston Exposition next October. There seems to be a settled determination on the part of some of the royal family to bring about war between the United States and England yet.

IN discussing the mother-in-law question the Boston Transcript calls attention to the fact that there was one married man who never had a mother-in-law. His name was Adam, and he had not been married twenty-four hours before he got into trouble. If he had had a mother-in-law, she would hav kept a close watch over the apples, and neither Eve nor Adam would hav got a chance at them.

AT a recent Sunday-school picnic the superintendent, passing among the crowd just settling down to lunch in the grove, overheard an angry Teuton, in the midst of a group of children, unburdening his mind with vigorous profanity. Touching him on the shoulder, the superintendent said, "My friend, you must not swear here." "Not schwear! Und vy not?" "Why, these children must not hear such awful words." "Vell, und vosn't dose jusht the children I vas schwearin at? He!"

JOHN BUNYAN was a prisoner before Justice Walsh in Brooklyn recently. "Aren't you ashamed of yourself?" said the court with a scowl. "Bunyan you were corned last night!" "Well, there's such a little difference between bunions and corns, judge——" "Both are unnatural swellings of the feet, but yours is an unnatural swelling of the head," responded the court, "and I guess we'll hav to giv you a chance to sleep it off." Then all watched the pilgrim's progress toward the Black Maria.—World.

"NOW I want to know," said a man whose veracity had been questioned by an angry acquaintance, "just why you call me a liar. Be frank, sir, for frankness is a golden trimmed virtue. Just as a friend, now tell me why you called me a liar?" "Called you a liar because you are a liar," the acquaintance replied. "That's what I call frankness. Why, sir, if this rule were adopted, over half of the difficulties would be settled without trouble, and in our case there would hav been trouble but for our willingness to meet each other half way.

TOM BROWN was an ignorant, queer boy, and was constantly doing things of an unaccountable nature. One day a lady for whom he had been doing chores said to him: "Tom, you're an odd genius." "Yes'm," replied Tom, not knowing exactly what she meant. "I don't quite comprehend you." "What, mum?" "I mean I don't know how to take you." "Dad does." "How?" "He takes me by the seat of the breeches, mum, and the nape of the neck, and shakes me like I was a rat." The lady didn't indulge in that sort of "comprehension."

THE bathtub waste pipe had clogged up and the family plumber was viewing the remains. "This is terrible!" he exclaimed. "You didn't send for me any too soon." Then he went away and ordered the water turned off. Next day he sent around two men, a boy with a spirit lamp, and a wagon-load of tools. The men dug up the hydrant, after which they were compelled to go to a neighboring saloon and play seven-up for the champagne, and the boy had to go to a base-ball match and hedge a few bets. When the small boy of the household came home from school in the evening he stuck a switch into the waste pipe and the bathtub was soon cleared of its contents. By this happy chance the plumber's bill was cut down to $197. This story teaches that the small boy is mightier than the plumber.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA

MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE

EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE

CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,

Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,

WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain

Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing that they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,

Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5 00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the mone, if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information,

Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 33. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, August 18, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE is talk of providing an "assistant" for Bishop Potter, of New York. We are in favor of this measure. It is too much for the old fellow to empty the spittoons for the whole diocese.

A BOSTON clergyman chose for his text last Sunday, "It is not good that man should be alone." At the close of the sermon every unmarried female in the congregation touchingly responded, "Ah, men!"

THE Salvationists who hav been arrested in Syracuse for making a noise in the streets declare their willingness to go to the penitentiary. The Syracuse people are perfectly willing that they should go there, and stay as long as they want to.

THE Theosophists of India hav started a London Lodge, and gave a soiree a short time ago. The leading spirits are Mr. A. P. Sinnett, the author of "The Occult World" and "Esoteric Buddhism," and Mrs. Kingsford, both friends of Colonel H. S. Olcott.

SOME folks who always go to church
Are just as mean as "pizen;"
For, while the preacher leaves his perch,
They keep their eagle eyes on
The deacon who propels the plate
To take up the collection;
And as he comes down to their seat,
They look the wrong direction.

JOHN RILEY and Patrick Manley, while excavating on Edward G. McCleary's farm in Watervliet Center, N. Y., last week, unearthed a mastodon at a depth of about thirty feet. Some of the bones will be taken to the Geological Museum in Albany. A large smooth stone of reddish color, and shaped like a heart, was found near the ribs.

ONE of the Presbyterian church's Chinese converts of Paterson, N. J., has been sentenced to a year's imprisonment in the New Jersey penitentiary for an atrocious assault upon a countryman. He boasts that he attended Sunday-school every Sunday, and that his teacher got up a petition for his pardon. Christianity appears to restrain from crime a good deal less than Confucianism.

"AH, me!" sighed a South Side Christian the other day, while discussing heavenly affairs in the midst of his family, "Rev. Mr. Thompson has gone off on Beecherism. He is a good preacher, too, and I am sorry for this." "Well, I've always thought he and Mrs. Jones were entirely too intimate, and that it would end in something like that," said the dear wife, as she left the room to see about supper.

THE French Radical quotes the following extract from Andre Berthet's lay catechism to prove that this catechism may be placed safely in the hands of children: "What is God? I don't know. Who created the world? I don't know. Whence comes humanity and where is it going? I don't know. When and how did man appear upon the earth? I don't know. What becomes of us after death? I don't know. Has not religion taught us all these things? Every religion teaches them in a different way, and each one says, 'Believe me, I am the truth.'" We should pronounce this not only a safe catechism but a perfectly honest one.

"THE strength of the Mormon church," says the New York Times, is based, in the main, upon the ignorance of its members." We would be obliged to the Times if it would inform us what church is not so based, or how it would be possible for a church to stand upon any other foundation than ignorance. The only remedy, of course, for this condition of the Mormons is education; but the question is how much education. A little learning, a very little, which is said to be a dangerous thing, and the Mormons might be Catholics; a modicum more of sense and they would do for members of some Protestant denomination. But giv them the knowledge they need and they would be neither, but Rationalists. Is the Times in favor of this last degree of education for the Mormons?

THE queen's family is said to be much exasperated by her absurd conduct over the death of John Brown, a shrewd and mercenary gillie, as events hav proved, undeserving the esteem in which she held him. She is determined to be near his grave, and to visit it daily, and the royal family is beginning to feel that she is making herself ridiculous by the display of so much feeling over such a loss.—Chicago Times. John Brown seems to hav been the only male in the family, late years, whose character was above reproach, and whom she could be proud of, and it is no wonder she weeps for him.—Milwaukee Sun.

THE Rev. Dr. McLane, of Steubenville, Ohio, was some months ago adjudged a heretic, and was suspended by his presbytery from the exercise of ministerial functions. His case was taken to the General Assembly at Saratoga, where it came very near being tried. But on the understanding that Dr. McLane would retire from the Presbyterian denomination, the trial was indefinitly postponed. Dr. McLane has now become a Congregationalist, and notwithstanding the alleged heretical teachings of his book, "The Cross in the Light of To-day," he has been received by a Congregational Association. A large number of his former church-members go with him into the Congregational fold. Dr. McLane is a man of considerable power as a preacher, and of much personal magnetism.

THE citizens of Trenton, N. J., hav taken a firm stand against the noise-making practices of the Salvation Army. The mayor has forbidden the Army to parade the streets with musical manifestations. In Brooklyn certain invalid neighbors hav protested against the continued tambourine playing and other distressful noises carried on as adjuncts to worship at the "Barracks." Bridgeport, Conn., has declared the noise of its salvationists a nuisance, and ordered it to stop. The Army has certainly been unfortunate in the selection of its musicians, for they are, with few exceptions, so lacking in skill as to be more objectionable than ordinary organ-grinders. If the noises made by these people had not been so abominable, the public might hav endured their ranting and the issue of their extraordinary war literature.

IN a Methodist congregation on Staten Island, some years ago, a Dane was "converted." He had been a strictly honest man, but profane, and to some extent guilty of other unchristian conduct. The church took him in, and as he sat down a brother started a hymn with these words:

"The dying thief rejoiced to see
That fountain in his day;
And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away."

To the surprise of all, the new convert, in a towering rage, left the building. When asked to explain his behavior, he said that there was one thing he never did—he never stole, and for all hands to sing of him as a "dying thief" he regarded as a personal insult. He was convinced that they were all a lying set, if not hypocrits. It took a good deal of wool-pulling and a reconversion to get the brother into the fold again.

MR. BRADLAUGH has undoubtedly lived in advance of his time. The day may, and undoubtedly will, come when he or his successors will be admitted as honored members of the British legislativ councils; for the present he is compelled to pose as a political martyr, while the spirit of the House of Commons is dead against him. The great demonstration which took place in Trafalgar square afforded a certain proof that a large following of the people of England were with the distinguished infidel in his struggle for his seat in the House of Commons. It is not, of course, the first demonstration of similar character which has been made in favor of Mr. Bradlaugh, nor will it likely be the last. Public opinion must of course eventually break down the barriers of caste or prejudice, but it is not probable that the present Parliament will admit the persistent applicant from Northampton. It will hav its effect, however, in due season.

A METHODIST itinerant preacher, who was obliged to leave his pastorate in Newark because of some most unpleasant charges against his moral character, has sent a withering rebuke to the presiding elder of the conference, which throws a strong light upon the spiritual condition of both pastor and people. He charges the elder with uncharitable and unchristian conduct in allowing the brethren in his hearing to call their pastor a liar without administering a rebuke, and says he was led to resign because his contempt for some of the church officials was so strong that he "would hav fellowship with them no longer." As to his future, he says: "I shall not cease to serve God. My disgust is not with religion, but with some types of it." This is reassuring. The good man's fortitude in the presence of adversity recalls that of a pious vestryman in a New England church, who, in a heated controversy at a meeting of the vestry, thanked God fervently that he was "not such a liar as that other infernal old rascal over there."

"No, sir, a woman who throws a velocipede at a poor, homeless dog, and breaks its leg, may carry a car load of prayer books, and she may attend all the sociables, but, according to what I hav been told, if she goes sailing up to the gate of the New Jerusalem as though she owned the whole place, and expects to be ushered into a private box, she will get left. The man in the box office will tell her she is not on the list, and that there is a variety show down below, where the devil is a star, and falling angels are dancing the cancan with sheet-iron tights, on brimstone lakes, and she can probably crawl under the canvas, but she can't get in among the angelic hosts until she can satisfactorily explain that dog story that is told on her. Possibly I hav got a raw way of expressing myself, but I had rather take my chances, if I should apply for admission up there, with this lame dog under my arm, than to take hers with a pug that hain't got any legs broke. A lame dog and a clear conscience beats a pet dog when your conscience feels nervous."—From Peck's Bad Boy's latest Interview with the Groceryman.

A WESTERN paper says: "That is a sad story that relates to the fall of the Rev. W. H. Shields, who about eight years ago was a rather noted character in Rochester, but is now confined in jail at Detroit on the charge of wife poisoning. Shields is a graduate of Rochester Theological Seminary, and was for several years pastor of the Baptist church at Lima. A passion for strong drink caused his ruin, in spite of brilliant attainments. He had married a most estimable daughter of one of the best families of Rochester, but his habits made it impossible for her to continue to liv with him. After he left the ministry he served as an assistant to the overseer of the poor in Rochester. His wife had procured a divorce from him, and a litigation ensued over the possession of their only child, a little girl. Before the case was tried the child died, thus forever settling the question at issue. Afterward Shields went to Canada, where he met a woman with whom he fell in love. She had been deserted by her husband, and she removed to Detroit, where she entered a hotel as a domestic, meanwhile suing for a divorce. Shields was in the same city engaged as a drug clerk, and when the woman obtained the divorce he married her. Shields's habits do not seem to hav improved in Detroit. A short time since Mrs. Shields expired very suddenly, and her death was supposed to result from unnatural causes. Subsequently Shields's conduct excited suspicion, and he was arrested, and a careful investigation has been entered upon. When taken into custody the prisoner had the appearance of having been on a prolonged spree, and maintained that he was ignorant of the facts relating to his wife's death. Shields was educated by a wealthy and benevolent resident of Roundout, and was in his better days a graceful and eloquent young preacher."

News of the Week.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR is out in Wyoming.

REPORTS say that Cetywayo, the Zulu king, is still alive, though reported dead.

THE Nile, in Egypt, is rising, and great damage to crops has resulted from the overflow.

THE Kimball House and other property at Atlanta, Ga., were burnt last Sunday. Loss, $1,000,000.

A CHICAGO gambler cut his professed wife's throat and then his own last Sunday. The man is dead, and the woman cannot liv.

THERE is no sign of an adjustment between the telegraph companies and their striking operativs. A few men are going back to work.

THERE is scarcely any abatement in the cholera epidemic which has spread throughout Egypt. The list of dead up to the 10th s 16,448.

D. O. MILLS has presented the state of California with a piece of statuary representing Columbus at the court of Queen Elizabeth. The work cost $35,000.

MANY wires of the Western Union Telegraph Company hav been cut during the past week. The striking telegraphers deny all knowledge of the matter.

OVER thirty dwellings and the entire business part of Vineyard Haven, Martha's Vineyard, were destroyed by fire on Saturday night last. Many poor people are left homeless.

THERE is insurrection in Spain. Bands of insurgents hav been formed, and a collision between them and the Spanish troops took place last Sunday. Four rebel sergeants were killed.

HOP LEE, a Chinese laundryman of this city, went to church last Sunday. While engaged in his devotions, some one entered his laundry and carried off $350. Hop Lee does not feel encouraged to go to church again.

FORTY-TWO workmen who took part in an attempted demonstration at Vienna over the suppression of a workingman's newspaper, were arrested last Saturday. The police fired on the crowd, wounding fourteen persons.

AN ambitious swimmer is to try to swim the Niagara whirlpool and rapids where Capt. Webb lost his life. His object is to win the $50,000 prize which the government has offered for the best life-preserving apparatus.

A ST. PETERSBURG dispatch to the London Times says the coronation decree granting liberty of worship to dissenters only affects a million of so-called registered dissenters. There are 14,000,000 still unrelieved of their religious disabilities.

THE heavy-weights, Sullivan and Slade (not the medium), had a collision at Madison Square Garden, in this city, one evening last week. Slade was knocked out in three rounds. Boston has now added to the glory of being the home of the Index the still greater honor of producing the champion slugger of the world. Boston is indeed the Hub.

THE clergy of the late Archbishop Purcell's diocese are to meet and devise some method for paying that individual's debts. These are not to be paid in full or as the discharge of a legal obligation, but as an act of benevolence. It was not enough to rob the archbishop's otherwise impecunious creditors; they now suffer the humiliation of being objects of charity.

REMARKABLE biblical discovery is the order of the day. A Jew in Egypt claims to hav discovered the original "copy" of the book of Deuteronomy (which he is willing to sell to the British Museum for the modest sum of $1,000,000), and some enterprising traveler has come across the ruins of Noah's ark on the summit of Mount Ararat. These alleged finds hav not as yet been fully investigated. They will probably go down in history with the Cardiff giant.

Communications.

The Sonnets of Shakspere.

WHEN, TO WHOM, AND BY WHOM, WRITTEN.

"The shepherd Corydon loved the beautiful Alexis."

The first published poem of Shakspere, so far as known, was "Venus and Adonis," in 1593. It was dedicated to the Earl of Southampton, then about twenty years of age. Five editions were called for in nine years. The "Sonnets" did not appear till 1609. The latter poem has 154 stanzas of 14 lines each; the first 126 are addressed to a beautiful and ardently beloved youth; the remainder to the young man's betrothed.

As to the merits of the composition, the American Cyclopedia says:

"These 'Sonnets,' though deformed with occasional conceits, far surpass all other poems of their kind in our own language, or perhaps in any other."

The dedication is in these words:

"To the onlie begetter of | these insuing Sonnets | Mr. W. H. all happinesse | and that eternitie | promised by | our ever-living poet | wisheth | the well-wishing | adventurer in | setting forth | T. T."

Some hav believed that "Mr. W. H." was William Herbert; and a German critic supposes the initials to signify "William Himself." But the American Cyclopedia says:

"To whom they were written, and in whose person [T. T.], is among the most difficult of unsolved literary problems. . . . Who this 'onlie begetter' was no man has yet been able satisfactorily to show."

In regard to the hypothesis that "W. H." was William Herbert, the same authority says there is almost as much ground for the notion that the person addressed was Queen Elizabeth in doublet and hose.

In 1872 we first read Nathaniel Holmes's "Authorship of Shakspere;" since then we hav never entertained a reasonable doubt that Bacon was the author of the Plays. A year ago we reread them all in the light of that discovery; but until July 31, 1883, we had never read a page of the "Sonnets," nor when we began to read them on that day did we know who "W. H." was suspected to be. But, coming to the twenty-fifth stanza, we suspected that the poem was addressed to the Earl of Essex, and subsequent research confirmed that suspicion.

Herbert was sixteen years younger than Shakspere, and nineteen years younger than Bacon. If, therefore, the poem was written in 1590, which we propose to show, it is impossible for Herbert to hav been the "onlie begetter of these Sonnets," for he was then only ten years old.

Of course no one will date their composition as late as 1609, when Shakspere was forty-five and Bacon forty-eight. At that time the former had retired from the stage, and Bacon had been for six years king's counsel and three years a married man. And certainly one stanza (138) was composed as early as 1599, for it is repeated at the beginning of "The Passionate Pilgrim," which was first published in that year.

All the internal and external evidence points to the year 1590 as the date, Francis Bacon as the writer, and the Earl of Essex as the person addressed.

It is said that Bacon made the acquaintance of Essex about 1590, but it would be remarkable if he did not see him years before. In stanza 104 the poet says:

"Three winter's cold
Hav from the forests shook three summers' pride,
Three beauteous springs to yellow autumn turned
In process of the seasons hav I seen,
Three April perfumes in three hot Junes burned,
Since first I saw you fresh, which yet are green."

Let us suppose that Bacon began to cultivate the earl's friendship in 1590. He was then twenty-two years old; three years earlier, when Bacon first saw him, the earl was "fresh;" now he is "yet green."

Robert Devereux, the second earl of Essex, was born Nov. 10, 1567, and was beheaded for treason Feb. 25, 1601. He succeeded to the title at ten years of age. At twenty he was appointed master of the horse. At twenty-one the queen created him captain-general of the cavalry, and conferred on him the honor of the garter. At twenty-two, when an expedition was undertaken against Portugal, he secretly followed the armament. This was without the queen's permission, but he was quickly reconciled with her after his return, and at once assumed a superiority over Sir Walter Raleigh and Sir Thomas Blount, the rival competitors for royal favor. He was challenged by Blount and wounded in the knee, and the queen is said to hav expressed her gratification that some one had taken him in hand, as otherwise there would be no ruling him. In 1590, at the age of twenty-two, he married the widow of Sir Philip Sidney, and in the following year he commanded a fruitless expedition in Britanny. He was an accomplished scholar and patron of literature. He erected a monument to Spenser and gave an estate to Bacon (Amer. Cy.)

But we hav omitted one striking characteristic which has an important bearing on the question of his identity with "Mr. W. H." The young earl of Essex was a remarkably handsome man. Now the beauty of the person addressed in the "Sonnets" is a constantly recurring theme, and the burden of the poem is an appeal to the beloved and beautiful young man to marry. It begins thus:

"From fairest creatures we desire increase,
That thereby beauty's rose might never die."

The next stanza begins:

"When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
And dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
Thy youth's proud livery, so gazed on now,
Will be a tattered weed of small worth held."

Essex, as we hav said, was married in 1590. On the 10th of November in that year he would hav been twenty-three.

Out of the many allusions to his beauty and grace, we select the following:

"Look in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest
Now is the time that face should form another."

. . . . . .

"If I could write the beauty of your eyes,
And in fresh numbers number all your graces,
The age to come would say, 'This poet lies;
Such heavenly touches ne'er touched earthly faces.'"

. . . . . .

"Describe Adonis, and the counterfeit
Is poorly imitated after you;
On Helen's cheek all art of beauty set,
And you in Grecian 'tires are painted new."

Essex, having become the special favorit of the queen, of course became an object of envy and slander. He was challenged by Blount, and, as we hav already remarked, was wounded in the fight. Mark now what the poet says:

"Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won;
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed."

. . . . . .

"That thou art blamed shall not be thy defect,
For slander's mark was ever yet the fair;
The ornament of beauty is suspect,
A crow that flies in heaven's sweetest air.
So be thou good; slander doth but approve
Thy worth the greater, being wooed of time."

In 1590 Bacon had acquired a reputation as an orator in the House of Commons, but was without available means of livelihood in keeping with his wants and station. Up to this time his efforts for promotion were thwarted by the queen's minister, Lord Burleigh (Cecil), who regarded him as a dangerous rival for his son. With the rise of young Essex into royal favor Bacon turned to him as a friend at court. From 1590 to 1594 the earl tried in vain to advance Bacon, and at last, when the vacant office of attorney general was filled by another, Essex sought to soothe his poor disconsolate friend by presenting him with an estate worth nearly £2,000 a year (Cham. Enc.).

With these facts in mind, see how perfectly the following lines fit the persons and the time, 1590:

"Let those who are in favor with their stars,
Of public honor and proud titles boast,
Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
Unlooked for joy in that I honor most."

. . . . . .

"When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featured like him, like him with friends possessed,
Desiring this man's art and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee, and then my state,
Like to the lark at break of day arising,
From sullen earth sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings."

. . . . . .

"I may not evermore acknowledge thee,
Lest my bewailed guilt should do thee shame,
Nor thou with public kindness honor me,
Unless thou take that honor from thy name;
But do not so; I love thee in such sort
As, thou being mine, mine is thy good report.

"As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his activ child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth.
For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store.
So then I am not lame, poor, nor despised,
Whilst that this shadow doth such substance giv,
That I in thy abundance am sufficed,
And by a part of all thy glory liv."

In 1590 "Shakspere" had already acquired fame as a poet, and success as owner, or at least part owner, of a theater. In 1590 Bacon obtained his first show of favor from the court; he became queen's counsel extraordinary, but the office was without emolument. At this time plays for the theater were written and rewritten again and again to meet the demand. Young lawyers and poets produced them rapidly. Each theatrical company kept from one to four poets in its pay (Amer. Cyc.). Shakspere was ready to father anything that promised success, and there are at least six plays published under his name or initials of which he never wrote a line, nor hav they ever appeared in the genuin canon (Auth. of Shak., p. 50). In 1591 a poem by Spenser was published containing these lines:

"And he, the man whom Nature's self has made
To mock herself and truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under mimic shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah, is dead of late:
With whom all joy and jolly merriment
Is also deaded, and in dolour drent."

From 1590 until Shakspere retired from the stage, how could it be said that he was "poor," bewailing his "outcast state" and "cursing his fate?" But is it not certain that Bacon's condition answered precisely to that description up to 1594, when Essex gave him a valuable estate?

Mark now the modesty of the poet at this time:

"If thou survive my well contented day,
When that churl Death my bones with dust shall cover,
And shall by fortune once more resurvey
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time,
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve them for thy love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the hight of happier men."

. . . . . .

"My name be buried where my body is,
And liv no more to shame nor me nor you,
For I am shamed by that which I bring forth,
And so should you, to love things nothing worth."

We hav already quoted a verse from Spenser in praise of "Willy," first published in 1591; we now adduce a passage from one of "Willy" Bacon's poems first published in 1599 in praise of Spenser:

"Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit, needs no defense."

This verse is in "The Passionate Pilgrim," the first stanza of which is slightly varied from stanza 138 of the "Sonnets." John Dowland, a musician, was born in 1562 and died 1625. Spenser was eight years younger than Bacon.

But coupled with this modesty of the author of the "Sonnets," note how he praises his friend and how famous that friend appears at the time:

"Oh, how I faint when I of you do write,
Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
And in the praise thereof sounds all his might,
To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame.
But since your worth, wide as the ocean is,
The humble as the proudest sail doth bear,
My saucy bark, inferior far to his,
On your broad main doth wilfully appear;
Your shallowest help will hold me on afloat,
Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
Or being wrecked, I am a worthless boat,
He of tall building and of goodly pride;
Then if he thrive and I be cast away,
The worst was this: my love was my decay."

The other superior (?) poet referred to is undoubtedly Spenser, among whose "Sonnets, addressed by the author to his friends and patrons," is one "To the most honorable and excellent Lord the Earl of Essex, great master of the horse to her highness, and knight of the noble order of the garter, etc." Essex became master of the horse in 1587, and knight of the garter in 1588.

We proceed with the quotations from the Shaksperian sonnets:

"Or if I liv your epitaph to make,
Or you survive when I in earth am rotten,
From hence your memory death cannot take,
Although in me each part will be forgotten.
Your name from hence immortal life shall hav,
Though, I once gone, to all the world must die;
The earth can yield me but a common grave,
When you entombed in men's eyes shall lie.
Your monument shall be my gentle verse,
Which eyes not yet created shall o'er-read,
And tongues to be your being shall rehearse
When all the breathers of this world are dead;
You still shall liv—such virtue hath my pen—
Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men."

From stanza 42 it appears that the young Earl had won the heart of the widow Sidney:

"That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
And yet it may be said I loved her dearly;
That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
Loving offenders! thus I will excuse ye:
Thou dost love her, because thou know'st I love her,
And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
And losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
And both for my sake lay me on this cross:
But here's my joy: my friend and I are one;
Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

The second part of the "Sonnets," after stanza 126, is addressed to the earl's bethrothed; we quote stanza 134:

"So now I hav confessed that he is thine,
And I myself am mortgaged to thy will,
Myself I'll forfeit, so that other mine
Thou wilt restore, to be my comfort still;
But thou wilt not, nor he will not be free,
For thou art covetous and he is kind;
He learned but surety-like to write for me,
Under that bond that him as fast doth bind.
The statute of thy beauty thou wilt take,
Thou usurer that put'st forth all to use,
And sue a friend came debtor for my sake;
So him I lose through my unkind abuse.
Him hav I lost; thou hast both him and me,
He pays the whole, and yet I am not free."

The next stanza introduces the name of "Will," and puns upon it profusely:

"Whoever hath her wish thou hast thy 'Will,'
And 'Will' to boot, and 'Will' in overplus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,

To thy sweet will making addition thus.
Wilt thou whose will is large and spacious,
Not once vouchsafe to hide my will in thine?
Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my will no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain still,
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou being rich in 'Will' add to thy 'Will'
One will of mine, to make thy large 'Will' more.
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one 'Will.'"

How preposterous to believe that a common-place play actor, with a wife and children, addressed such sentiments to the bride of his dearest friend! At no time after 1589 do the sentiments or circumstances of the poem fit the person of the actor, of whom the dying and dissipated player, Greene, wrote in 1592:

"There is an upstart crow beautified with our feathers that with his Tygres heart, wrapt in player's hide, supposes hee is as well able to bombast out a blank verse as the best of you; and being an absolute Johannes factotum, is, in his owne conceyt, the only Shake-scene in a countrey."

But, on the other hand, frequent evidence appears that Bacon, up to the time he was made attorney general in 1613, was constantly engaged in secret literary work. But not so secret as to be unknown to a circle of friends and a few enemies; for, in 1599, when he interceded with the queen for his dear friend Essex, then under arrest on account of a treasonable pamphlet being dedicated to him, her majesty flung at Bacon "a matter which grew from him, but went after about in others' names," being in fact the play of "Richard II.," which, in that very year, had a great run on the stage, and had gone through two editions, but, for prudential reasons, with the scene containing the deposition of the king left out (Auth. of Shak., p. 96).

Bacon having begun to produce plays for Shakspere's theater before 1590, the authorship of which was assumed by the actor and proprietor, it became necessary also to avoid being publicly known as a writer of sonnets. Therefore, in view of the circulation and ultimate publication of this poem, he facetiously disguised the identity of the writer by calling himself "Will." Three years later he dedicated a published poem to his young friend Southhampton under the name of "William Shakspere," and again another in 1594. But the "Sonnets" were not published till 1609, when Essex had been dead eight years, and his widow was doubtless married a third time. It would never do for the attorney general to be known as the author of such a poem; so when it came out in print it was dedicated to "Mr. W. H." by "T. T.," and no one until a few years ago ever seems to hav suspected that Bacon wrote the poem, nor, so far as we are aware, has any one ever suspected until July 31, 1883, that "W. H." was the accomplished and famous Earl of Essex.

"Self-love is the instrument of our preservation; it resembles the provision for the perpetuation of mankind; it is necessary, it is dear to us; it givs us pleasure, and we must conceal it."

Thus wrote the great Voltaire in exile. In a great part of his literary work he had to conceal his identity or his meaning, while he wiped falsehood out of history and laughed superstition out of religion. If the wisest of Frenchmen, fortified by wealth, found it necessary to hide his identity, how much more necessary was it for "the greatest and wisest of mankind," who lived a hundred and fifty years earlier and was struggling for promotion at court as a means of subsistence, to conceal himself from the public as a writer of plays and sonnets! ANTIQUARY.

Reason and Religion.

The case of Chillingworth is another proof of the assertion that those who use their reason must abandon the Christian religion. He was about the sharpest logician, the most observant and closest reasoner, who ever had a controversy on the subject of theology. He was put forth as the leader in the great debates between Catholics and Protestants of his day, about 1640. The study of his "Religion of Protestants" is about the best exercise for the reasoning faculties that one can get hold of. It is delightful to see how he literally destroys his antagonist, after making him utter absurdities and self-contradictions. The Freethinker will wonder how such a one can believe any "revealed religion." And the fact is, Chillingworth did really become an unbeliever in spite of the influences of education. Let us examin how he disposes of the question of the church's infallibility, his opponent being supposed to assert that the church is infallible only on points fundamental, but may err on other points (just as is claimed by Catholics for the pope, and by Protestants for their Bible).

"Why do you believe the divinity of Christ?"

Answer. "Because the church (or pope, or Bible), which is infallible, has taught it."

"What! Infallible in all things?"

"No; only on fundamental points."

"Then on other points it may err?"

"It may."

"And do you know which points are fundamental and which are not so?"

"No." (What need of an interpreter if he did?)

"How know you then whether this question of Christ's divinity" (or any other) "is a fundamental point?" (and therefore true).

"I know not."

"For all you know, then, it may not be a fundamental point?"

"Yes, it may be so."

"And in such points it may err?"

"Yes; I said so."

"Then it may err in this?"

"Yes, it may do so, so far as I can know."

"Then what certainty hav you that it does not err in this?"

"None, save as I told you—on the supposition it is fundamental."

"And of this supposition you are uncertain?"

"So I told you before."

"And therefore you can hav no certainty of that which depends on this uncertainty save a supposition—if it be a fundamental point. In plain English, this is to say, you are sure it is true if it be true and necessary."

Chillingworth was too logical to accept the Bible as true in part and false in any one statement. He saw that if he were forced to admit one verse of it as false, its authority would be forever destroyed; for that would put its credibility on the same level with that of other books. He says: Seeing they ground their belief that such and such things are true only because the scriptures say so, and go about to prove their assertion only by the scriptures, then they must suppose the scriptures true, absolutely, in all things, or else they could not be a sufficient warrant to them to believe anything; for who would not laugh at them if they argued thus: The scriptures are true in some things; the scriptures say these points only are fundamental; therefore this is true that these only are so. For every freshman in logic knows that from mere particulars nothing can be certainly concluded. Here is the true method. The scriptures are absolutely true in all things. They say these points only are fundamentals; therefore it is true these only are so. But behold the logic of our modern priestcraft. Here it is; read and wonder:

I hav a witness who is true in some things and not true in others.

My witness testifies to some ordinary and credible matters which we know are not true as stated.

My witness also testifies to some most amazing and incredible things, and also states things that are impos ible.

Therefore these incredible things are true.

Again: My witness declares that Jesus Christ, the only begotten son of God, was conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, in the days of Herod the king. My witness also declares he was born after one Cyrenius was governor of Syria, which was long after Herod, the king, had died, and after his son Archelaus had reigned and been banished. My witness says Christ was the son of God, born of a virgin, because an old gentleman who had married his mother, the virgin, dreamt that such was the case. Therefore he was the son of God and savior of the world.

And on this foundation rests the faith of the Christian world! C. I.

Oregon, Mo.

An Optimistic Cheer from the Friend of Humanity.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I see in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 28th "C. O." seems to be looking on the dark side of things, and views all from his own standpoint. Of course it is from this point we are compelled to see and judge as a general thing. But we must take circumstances in consideration also. He coincides with Liberals in condemning the hell-idea as well as a heaven of eternal bliss, but would he not soon see our own beautiful earth a hell if all lived as he advises?

If man lived "for his own personal gratifications" and left "future generations to take care of themselvs," would he, as a father who had brought a family of children into the world, be justified in giving them no physical, moral, or intellectual training? Would he do right in letting them grow up as they might and thus become a terror to society and a disgrace to civilization? Does he believe in having no laws of protection? No moral inducement toward making men and women cultured, gentle, kind, pure and good? Shall we barely care that we liv, eat, and enjoy? Could he sit at a bountiful meal and eat it happily, knowing there was at his door a starving woman or a child pleading for bread? Could he even see a dog starve for want of a crust? If he could do these things he is indeed fitter to die than to liv.

But I do not blame or condemn him for his opinions. "A gnawing throat-cancer" is enough to darken every picture of life's lovely panorama. Still we ought never, if we can avoid it, cast the shadows of our sorrows over others' paths. If life is all gloom to us, let us try and keep that gloom shut up in our own hearts.

The world has so much of sadness and sorrow, want and woe, suffering and sin, that every one of us ought to try and do a little to improve it, and make it better and happier. I think even "C. O." might find a little balm of sweetness by giving joy to some sad heart, by feeding some hungry child, or smiling on some lonely waif. I do not deny that we are all selfish, that we seek our own happiness first, but it is not the purest of joys. I know you so often hav it in your power to lift the burden from another's shoulders.

If we were traveling a long road with some wayfarer who was carrying a heavy load and was almost tired out, would we feel no thrill of satisfaction in relieving him for a while by carrying it for him?

We must not think because "200 suicides occur in one year in the precincts of New York city," that all are unhappy and miserable who throng that busy, cheerful place. Remember there are only a scattering few picked out from the great swarming hoards who fill this immense and crowded capital of the northeast. And even these paltry 200 hav probably lived comparativly happy lives, hav probably enjoyed the major part of the days, weeks, and years as they passed along; but at last, in an hour of sickness, despair, and recklessness, yielded to a "pessimistic wail" of the heart, and clipped life's silver thread. I'll engage to find 100 who enjoy and prize their lives to every one that "C. O." will find who loaths and despises it. The healthy outnumber the sickly, the good outnumber the bad, the cheerful outnumber the sad, the peaceful outnumber the warring, and the benevolent outnumber the churlish. Let a file of a thousand men and women pass a drowning or starving child, and though no one was in sight to see the deed, to praise or condemn the act, or ever bring it to light, it is doubtful if one of all the number would go on and leave the child to die, if by a moment's pause they could save it. Cruel, hard, selfish, and horrible deeds fill the land, but take any area of acreage and you will find the good, the beautiful, and the true will overwhelm the evil, the ugly, and the false.

We hav clouds, tempests, cyclones, floods, fires, pestilence, and drouth, but the sunshine, the calm, the joy, and the sweetness predominate in overwhelming majority.

The fittest will survive, and the good, the true, and the joyous is the fittest. Will not "C. O." try and find a little of the silver that lines the cloud that encompasses him? Elmina would be more than glad if she could help him do this. She is well, happy, and joyous now, but her life has had its sorrows, its sicknesses and shadows, as well as other lives hav. Even death has laid its cold, remorseless hand on her near and dear ones. A loved father, dear sister, and a darling babe sleep the long last sleep, and each time the torn and lacerated heart-strings hav quivered with the saddest sorrow of life save one. Thus far that one has been spared her. This is the sorrow of crime committed by our cherished and beloved. But should ever this blow fall, its shadow would not be long permitted to darken life's pathway. To submit to the inevitable is the motto of the philosopher, and the better substitute for the old formula, "Thy will be done."

The true life is that which works for the highest and best, strives for elevation, improvement, and general happiness, accepting what must be of evil as calmly as possible, and while making the best of what is, by laying plans to render the future more productiv of good than the past has ever been. We hav all the experience and knowledge of the by-gone to build upon, and, hence, the world must be always improving and increasing in its amount of the blessings in store for future generations.

"Oh! the world it is beautiful, pleasant indeed;
There are valleys so sweet where the violets grow,
And mountains whose summits are capped with snow,
And dales breathing fragrance wide-spreading below;
A sun which by day givs the world of its light,
And the moon whose soft beams are cast gently by night."

July 30, 283. ELMINA.

Christianity in Arkansas.

From the New York Sun.

Sunday is a day of sensations in some parts of Arkansas. Recently a body of men forced a preacher to suspend his discourse and read a paper warning several of his congregation. The most suggestiv feature of this interruption of worship was that the intruders took the precaution to arm themselvs to the teeth before entering into the sanctuary. Recent developments of the fighting strength of Arkansas parsons probably caused them to prepare against the risk of his producing a six-shooter from the sacred desk, to say nothing of the chance that his flock would open fire with their Winchesters from the pews.

A WISCONSIN believer in hades has attempted to giv his cellar a faint appearance of the rude original by painting its walls in representation of flames, snakes, etc., and furnishing it with wooden demons. Here he takes his children when he has made up his mind to whip them, and the latter cannot find language to describe how hot it sometimes is in that cellar. Should a tornado happen to steer that way, the religious paterfamilias might be able to save himself by a descent into hell.—Siftings.

Christian Lamentations.

AN HONEST RESPONSE TO THE APPEAL OF HONEST-HEARTED CHRISTIANS.

"Oh, how terrible!—to meet the judgment and suffer the dreadful penalty of sin, without a hope in Jesus! No loving savior to plead for, to intercede and save you!"

Many honest hearts are really mourning and weeping sad tears over friends whom the light of truth having illumed hav shaken off the shackles of superstition and become truth seekers.

Instead of lamenting, why not candidly investigate and learn if there is any occasion for regret? Beyond the foul aspersions and wilful misrepresentations heaped upon them by orthodox believers, what evil will befall men and women who dare to think for themselvs?

Dear Christian friends, what but good can possibly result to you from careful examination of the Bible, without bias or prejudice, with an honest desire to learn the truth, just as you would examin the Koran, Shaster, Book of Mormon, or any other claimed revelation? Why not, as honest truth seekers, fairly and dispassionately weigh the evidence, reject the errors and evil, and accept only what is true and good?

Why are you horrified at the theories of Freethinkers? What is there so demoralizing and prejudicial to humanity in Liberals' belief?

Freethinker's believe in the equality of man, and in the equality of woman with man. Their religion consists in "doing justice, loving mercy, and earnestly endeavoring to make their fellow-creatures happy." Their creed, "Put yourself in his place and do as you would others should do to you"—a golden rule taught by Confucius, Pittacus, Socrates, and Sextus centuries before the birth of Christ.

Freethinkers desire to educate into knowledge of self; they regard inward character, not outward seeming; they believe a real basis of morality should be sought in the cultivation of mind and heart, which will render actual present returns for every effort made—not metaphysical, but practical questions; that we should learn what is right, what is present duty, and do it.

All that is good or of love in the Bible, Freethinkers heartily indorse and accept; all that is evil or of hate they denounce and reject. For instance, did God, the merciful, loving, heavenly father command Christians to drive out the Indians from their happy hunting-grounds, to wantonly butcher their wives, their innocent children, even to the infants in their mothers' arms? Did God positivly command Christians should show them no mercy, nor allow their eyes to pity them, but exterminate them utterly and take possession of their land? Did God giv as a good and sufficient reason for this that white men professed to be Christians, while Indians are heathen? You say the Bible says nothing of the kind; no person ever believed, much less taught, any such thing, least of all, Christians; but your Bible positivly declares he did.

The children of Israel were commanded to exterminate the peeple of Canaan. "Thine eye shall hav no pity upon them" (Deut. vii, 16), but smite them, destroy them, nor show mercy unto them. Get your Bible and read for yourself Deut. vii, 1, 2.

"When the Lord thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou; and when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee thou shalt smite them and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them."

Freethinkers do not believe any God ever gave such infamous commands, ever sanctioned such villainous murder and robbery. Do you?

The abolition of slavery was first advocated by Freethinkers, and was bitterly opposed by the churches, for slavery is taught, commanded, and approved of in the Bible. You say, "Christians are opposed to slavery, and labored zealously for abolition." Yes, for centuries priests and ministers hav stood, Bible in hand, fighting back each wave of the rising tide of liberty, science, and human progress. With weary toil, through suffering, torture, and death, hav the martyrs for the cause of humanity wrung from the reluctant hands of Bible worshipers every concession to truth and science, only to hav each victory gained claimed as a trophy of the church. Darwin was most bitterly opposed, ridiculed, denounced by all the churches. The stubborn, startling facts he presented could not be overthrown; the best and brightest minds gave credence to his teachings and indorsed his theories, and now the church steps up and claims "the Bible teaches evolution," and givs Mr. Darwin a tomb in Westminster Abbey among her saints, and tries to insinuate "he too was a Christian."

So Christians of to-day indorse and claim credit as the champions of abolition, despite the fierce opposition they at first raised against it. But the Bible, alike Old and New Testaments, defends, teaches, and upholds slavery, in all its worst and most repulsiv features.

The Bible, in so many words, declares the slave is his owner's money. And God's word tells the slaveholder he may beat his slave almost to death, if he only stops short of murdering him; if he only can manage so the slave shall liv a day or two after the whipping and torturing, the slave-owner shall not be punished.

"And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand, he shall be surely punished. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money" (Exodus xxi, 21).

Freethinkers do not believe God ever sanctioned, much less taught, men to strike and whip women—almost to kill them. Christian friend, why mourn over truth seekers because they reject that part of the Bible that teaches such infamous cruelty?

But your minister and all the learned doctors of divinity say, "The New Testament did away with slavery and all that old law. Now we are under the new—the gospel, the Christian dispensation."

Test them by your Bible. Read only a few of the many like texts in the New Testament on this subject:

"Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free" (Ephesians vi, 5-8).

"Let as many servants as are under the yoke count their own masters worthy of all honor" (1 Tim. vi, 1).

"Exhort servants to be obedient unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things, not answering again" (Titus ii, 9).

And Paul, in accordance with his teachings, enforced the return of the poor runaway slave Onesimus to his master.

Peter, the special apostle to the gentiles, admonishes slaves, no matter how unreasonable, fierce, cruel, or despicable their master prove, although their master cruelly lash or maim them for no fault or wrong doing, yet they must honor him, and never resist or seek to oppose or release themselvs from such cruel tyranny; for to submit patiently is pleasing to God.

"Servants, be subject to your masters with all fear; not only to the good and gentle, but also to the froward.

"For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

"For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God" (1 Peter ii, 18-20).

Honest hearts! Is it not more terrible to accept as a gospel institution such debasing servility than to reject a Bible that teaches slavery in its most revolting phases "is acceptable to God?"

Freethinkers are Liberals, and cannot accept or honor a God who is opposed to human freedom, nor a Bible that denounces man's endeavor to secure freedom and self-government, and insists on slavish homage and reverence to kings and tyrants.

The Bible commands:

"Honor the king" (1 Peter ii, 17).

"Submit yourself to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake; whether it be to the kings as supreme, or unto governors, or unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well" (1 Peter ii, 13, 14).

Had Washington, Jefferson, Paine, Lafayette, and all the other noble heroes of the Revolution, really believed and obeyed the Bible, they would hav submitted to the tyranny of King George, hav surrendered and obeyed the governors he sent to the colonies, and our present glorious republic would hav never existed.

Was it so fatal to human happiness that the leaders and founders of the republic dared to think for themselvs, and as a consequence of rejecting the plain teaching of the Bible, risk life, liberty, and honor in the battle for human rights?

While it must be accepted as evidence of tenderness of heart, does it not indicate softness of brain to mourn because truth seekers reject and refuse to accept as God's holy word that part of the Bible that records how a God of purity, love, justice, and mercy indorsed and approved of a father turning his two innocent virgin daughters out of his house into the midst of a wild, half-drunken rabble, and offering the mob full permission to ravish and abuse them at their pleasure? (read Genesis xix, 4). Nor is this the only instance of such practice recorded in the holy Bible (see Judges xix, 22-24).

Again, Freethinkers denounce the publication as filthy and indecent, and disbelieve the record of this same Lot's drunkenness and incest (Gen. xix, 20-28). Mark! in all the Bible there is not one word of censure or disapproval of this bestiality.

You claim this all as God's word. It is holy Bible. And you mourn and weep because truth seekers reject it.

Your ministers and learned doctors of divinity say these things occurred in olden times, under the old dispensation; but the New Testament condemns them and teaches otherwise. It does not. The New Testament indorses Lot, and declares he was a just and righteous man.

"And delivered just Lot, vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked.

"For that righteous man dwelling among them in seeing and hearing vexed his righteous soul from day to day with their unlawful deeds" (2 Peter ii, 7, 8).

Dear Christian friends, is there occasion for horror, sorrow, tears, and lamentations that Freethinkers decline to pattern after such a just and righteous man?

The pioneers of the temperance cause were Freethinkers, and truth seekers, who dared to reject Bible teaching. The Bible plainly teaches the use of wine and strong drink; knowing this, the churches at first opposed the advocates of temperance, ridiculing and denouncing them; although to-day Christians claim to be par excellence—the very apostles of temperance.

The Bible positivly teaches and enjoins indulgence in intoxicating liquors at seasons of rejoicing. Bible says, God commanded the children of Israel every third year to repair to the place he had chosen and set his name, and to there bring their tithing of all their corn, wine, oil, flocks, and herds. But if the place was too far off, they were to turn their tithings into money, purchase what they pleased, and they and their household come and rejoice.

"And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth; and thou shalt eat there before the Lord thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou and thine household" (Deut. xiv, 26).

But the New Testament? Well, Christ's first recorded miracle was changing water into wine; that, too, at the close of a marriage feast, when it would appear already a full sufficiency had been imbibed. The silly twaddle that the wine Christ made was not intoxicating, but simple unfermented grape juice, is on a par with all the sophisms of modern D.D's., and as usual is flatly contradicted by the record (John, ii, 7, 10).

Paul instructed Timothy to use wine for his stomach's sake. "Drink no longer water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities" (1 Tim., v, 23).

This could hardly hav been sour grape juice, or it would hav given poor Timothy stomach ache instead of comfort.

But the plain declarations of Christ, the son of God, is that the redeemed saints, when they all get to heaven, shall sit on thrones and take a drink with Jesus.

"But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my father's kingdom" (Math. 26-29). "That ye may eat and drink at my table, in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke, xxii, 30).

If we accept the Bible as the word of God, we must believe heaven itself is opposed to temperance, or at least to prohibition, for Jesus says he will himself drink wine with his disciples in heaven.

Space forbids further enumeration; we hav but glanced at few of the very many declarations of the Bible truth seekers cannot believe. Is it really terrible to reject such Bible? Are not these teachings referred to repulsiv, opposed to right, reason, morality, and the best interests of humanity? If such things were found in any other book, would they not be most severely denounced even by Christians? "But to lose eternal life, no hope of heaven through Christ." Truth is not made error, nor error truth, by our acceptance or rejection. Truth is always truth; falsehood is always falsehood, whether found in the Bible or any other book. Freethinkers indorse all that is good, all that is of love in the Bible. Christ's so-called new commandment "To love one another" (John, xiii, 33). The great truth that all law is fulfilled by perfect love, "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." (Math. vii, 12). The declaration of Paul, that any amount of piety, spiritual gifts, performance of miracles, prophesying, or sanctity, or all combined, count less than nothing compared to living a life of love: "Though I speak with the tongue of men and angels, and hav not charity (Greek—Agapee—love) I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal" (1 Cor. viii, 1). And "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law" (Rom. viii, 10).

These truths, precepts, and admonitions are not original or first given in the Bible. Pagans and heathen philosophers both taught and practiced them centuries before the birth of Christ or Paul. The Zend-Avesta, Vedas, Shaster, Bhagavad-Gita, and Koran, inculcate these great truths fully as earnestly as either Old or New Testament, and some of them did so thousands of years before the Bible ever had existence.

Would not mankind be much happier if all were governed by these principles of love and integrity? Doing good from love of humanity instead of professing goodness from fear of divinity; practicing benevolence because we realize this to be the object of our existence, and that promotion of others' happiness best promotes our own. If the Bible is true, if Christ's own declarations are reliable, then, dear Christian friends, you must turn your tears to laughter and your lamentations to rejoicings, for the honest truth seeker and liberal Freethinkers shall die with the glad assurance of not having lived in vain, and, in addition, hav all the comfort attainable from the promis of Christ that they shall hav eternal life and a glad welcome into heaven. For mark! the test of a right to eternal life in heaven is not, Did you believe the Bible? Did you keep feast, saints, and fast days? Did you eat meat on Friday? Did you eschew pork on all days? Did you accept the doctrin of the trinity? Were you sprinkled, poured, or baptized? Did you believe in total depravity and the immaculate conception? in apostolic succession and the six-day theory of creation? Did you believe in purgatory and eternal burning in hell-fire for all, however good, true, pure, and loving lives they led, who differed with you on any of these solemn points and doctrins? No. Strange, but true, Christ says not one word of what did you believe, but "What did you do?" Did you feed the hungry? giv drink to the thirsty? help the needy? clothe the naked? minister to the sick? visit the prisoners?

"When the son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory.

"And before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats.

"And he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left.

"Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my fathers, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

"For I was hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in;

"Naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

"Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee a-hungered, and fed thee? or thirsty, and gave thee drink?

"When saw we thee a stranger, and took thee in? or naked, and clothed thee?

"Or when saw we thee sick, or in prison, and came unto thee? And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye hav done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye hav done it unto me" (Math. xxv, 31-40).

The desire to inspire men with the love of right, truth, and each other, with a spirit of fidelity to duty, should be the first desire of every friend of humanity. Then weep no more, dear Christian friends, but let us mutually realize our duty to study those questions which most nearly concern ourselvs, our race, this present world; let us make secondary metaphysical disputations in regard to an ideal world beyond the realms of time and space; in which, perhaps, in some possible condition, we may liv, and devote our best intelligence to practical questions pertaining to this present world in which we do now liv. Learn what is right and do it. Giv liberally of our means to diffuse the light of science and positiv knowledge, and thus help dispel the dark mists of error, ignorance, and superstition. Realize our duty is here and now, all the time, to do all we can to make all around us gleesome and happy; to soothe the sorrows of the afflicted, help the needy, and afford means of employment for the body and cultivation of the mind.

Liv lives of love, instead of making professions of faith. Practice justice and mercy, in lieu of forms and ceremonies. Ourselvs constantly endeavor to promote the happiness and welfare of those around us, in preference to constantly praying to a God to do it for us. And so shall we remove all cause of lamentations, attain to unity of purpose as honest truth seekers, and become in spirit and in truth liberal Freethinkers. CHAS. B. REYNOLDS.

Rochester, N. Y.

Two Reverends Roiled.

From the Mason City (Iowa) Times.

At a public meeting called at Bethany Tent last Monday by the officers of the Clear Lake Camp-Meeting Association, Mrs. Hartsoff, wife of one of the presiding elders, introduced a resolution to stop the traffic in the booth and huckster stands on the Sabbath day on the camp-grounds. Rev. Lozier spoke in favor of the resolution, when Rev. Sherrin, in a violent and abusiv manner, told him that the grounds were run in a great deal better manner than when he had charge of matters, that he had better go and pay his debts, that everybody held his notes, and that he was no good anyway; and also that he kept an indecent house on the grounds when he was president. The lie was frequently exchanged, and other filthy epithets which would put to the blush a couple of old fish women. All this in the presence of ladies. The affair would hav been a disgrace to a couple of cowboys, and for a pair of Methodist clergymen was an ignominious and disreputable affair.

The fact of the matter is that every management of the ground so far has been for the benefit of their own pockets, and the present management is no exception to the rule; in fact, it is the old way enlarged upon. Complaints come to us every day of extortionate charges made by the management, which we shall probably hav more to say about hereafter.

In fact, things are becoming so notoriously discreditable that one presiding elder there and then threatened that his conference would withdraw if matters were not changed. If some way was arranged that the officers could not participate in profits, prices might become reasonable, and officers' and ministers' sons would not be found on the Sabbath day clerking in peanut and huckster stands, which would put to shame a circus lemonade stand for prices.

The Amsterdam Convention.

The General Council of the International Federation of Freethought Societies announces that the Federation will hold its Fourth Annual Congress at Amsterdam from August 31 to September 2, 1883 (during the International Colonial Exhibition), in the Maison Trascati; entrance, O. Z. Voorburgival, No. 304. Freethinkers of all nationalities are invited to attend. The General Council invites all Freethinkers throughout the world to make this known.

The questions to be dealt with at the Congress are as follows: 1. Religious mania in the founders of religions. 2. Influence of Christianity on the world. 3. The scientific and historical explanation of the origin of Christianity. 4. The oath question in different countries. 5. Separation of church and state. 6. Religious wars, etc. 7. The best methods of propagandism. 8. Causes of the persecution of the Jews in different countries of Europe.

The order of the day for the congress is fixed as follows: Thursday, August 30, at 2:30 P.M., social gathering of the Netherland National Society of Freethinkers, De Dageraad. 1. Opening address by M. A. S. Morin, of Paris, vice-president of the Democratic and Anti-Clerical Union, ex-Municipal Councillor of Paris, etc. 2. Address by M. S. E. W. Reordo van Eijsinga, of Clarens, on the historical confirmation of the thesis of Comte: "It is only a true doctrin which leads to true conduct." At 8 P.M.—1. Address by Prof. Dr. L. Buchner, of Darmstadt, president of the German Union of Freethinkers, etc.; "On Progress According to the Darwinian Theory." 2. Address by Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, of London, president of the National Secular Society, etc., on "The Right and Duty of Thought and Speech—How Struggled For, How Far Won."

Friday, August 31st. At 11 A.M. Official opening of the congress, verification of delegations, etc.; annual report of the Federation; election of officers. At 3 P.M. Address by Dr. E. Schlœger, of Berlin, vice-president of the German Freethought Union, etc., on "The Life and Works of Bruno Bauer." At 8 P.M. Discussion on the subjects announced on the orders of the day.

Saturday, Sept. 1st. At 10 A.M. Meeting of delegates. At 9 P.M. Continuation of the discussion on the subjects announced on the orders of the day.

Sunday, Sept. 2d. At 10 A.M. Meeting of delegates. At 8 P.M. Continuation of the discussion on the subjects announced on the orders of the day. Concluding meeting.

The General Council announces that besides the persons already named, many well-known foreign Freethinkers hav expressed their sympathy for the coming congress, and the following will most probably be present at the meetings: Mrs. Annie Besant, of London; Prof. Dr. Ernst Haeckel, of Jena; Dr. Aug. Specht, of Gotha; Dr. G. von Gizycki, of Berlin; Prof. Dr. Felix Dahn, of Konigsberg; M. Victor Schoelcher, of Paris; Dr. C. de Paepe, M. A. van Cauberg, M. N. Goffin, of Brussels; M. Arthur Cornette, of Anvers; Dr. Hubert Boens, of Charleroi; Prof. Dr. Carl Vogt, of Geneva; Prof. Dr. E. Brusa, of Turvin; M. P. Ferretti, of Florence; M. C, Hermann Boppe and Max Grossman, of Milwaukee; M. F. Schutz, of Carver (Minnesota), etc.

Communications for the congress should be addressed to Dr. H. C. Muller, Secretary, Brouwersgracht 122, Amsterdam.

Lectures and Meetings.

MR. GREEN writes that Judge Krekel, of the U. S. Circuit Court, and his talented wife, will be present at the Rochester Convention.

T. B. WAKEMAN will lecture at Merrick, Long Island, at Elisha Hyatt's grove, on Sunday, the 19th. Subject, "The New Salvation." The Liberals on Long Island will find themselvs well repaid for going a few miles to hear him.

THE Lackawanna and Pittsburgh Railroad has put on sale round trip tickets to Rochester at the following named stations at the prices mentioned: Westons, $4.70; Ceres, $4.40; Little Geneva, $4.20; Boliver, $4.10; Richburg, $4.00; Friendship, $3.60; Belvidere, $3.40; Angelica, $3.20; Birdsall, $3.00.

THE debate between J. E. Remsburg and Rev. W. F. B. Treat closed at Carbon, August 10th. The attendance was very large, and the result is said to hav been a complete victory for Freethought. At the close Mr. Remsburg received seven magnificent bouquets, and was presented by the Liberals of Carbon with a handsome edition of Macaulay's works.

THE Central New York Association of Spiritualists will hold their semi-annual, and the Georgetown annual, meetings in Timothy Brown's hall, Georgetown, N. Y., on Saturday and Sunday, September 22d and 23d, commencing at 1 o'clock. Mrs. Amelia H. Colby and J. Frank Baxter are engaged to speak. A free platform and free speech is their motto. Hotel accommodations at reduced prices. All are invited to attend, and bring their baskets of lunch, and enjoy a social feast. Mrs. B. A. Hall, of Lee Center, N. Y., is secretary.

CHARLES WATTS will arrive in this country August 29th, and will be at the Rochester Convention. Mr. Watts will remain with us but four months, and it is desirable that Liberals make the best use of his invaluable abilities. Let his time be fully occupied at all possible points. Wherever there is a squad of Liberals let them send word at once and make arrangements. Address all communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER office. The most liberal terms will be made, and no one need hesitate on account of funds. Send word what you can do and when a lecture is wanted.

W. F. JAMIESON will commence his lecture season Sept. 1st, and will deliver week-evening and Sunday lectures the entire fall and winter. In his announcements he says that "while courtesy toward persons always distinguishes his utterances, he abates nothing from his uncompromising attitude in regard to the pious fictions of the past or present. He does not attack those of the dead past and preserve a polite silence about these of the living present. 'Let the truth be spoken, though every ism fall,' he believes ought to be the motto of every Freethought lecturer, and leave policy to priests. He cannot contract to please orthodox believers by saying nothing to offend their prejudices!" His terms are: Two lectures, $30; three, $45; four, $60; five, $75. He also furnishes advertising free of charge. He makes no engagements for less than two lectures. Mr. Jamieson is acknowledged to be very able in debate, and entertaining as a speaker, and should be kept busy. Address him, W. F. Jamieson, Lake City, Minn.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisment of George Chainey's lecture to be given on the evening of the 26th. It is hoped that as good an audience will listen as his great talents deserve. He is in the lecture field for the winter, making this city his starting-point, whence he will go west. He would like to be kept busy. His terms are $35 for one lecture, and $50 for two, he to furnish advertising matter. The principal aim in his lectures, he says, will be to "emphasize the ethical, humanitarian, and constructiv side of our work. One of the principal benefits of such lectures is that they create a kindlier feeling between believers and unbelievers by revealing to them the more earnest and moral side of our cause. They also always stir the stagnant pools or thought and giv something fresh to think and talk about for weeks. They also bring the Liberals together, make them acquainted with each other, and so frequently open the way to sociability and co-operation. If you do not see your way clear just at present to open the way for a lecture will you not open a correspondence with me on the subject, in the hope that before long we may be able to achieve it?" Those wishing his services should address, George Chainey, 51 Fort Avenue, Roxbury, Boston, Mass.

THE call for the seventh annual congress of the National Liberal League is as follows: All citizens of the United States who believe in the fundamental principles of our republic; separation of church and state, equality of all citizens before the law without distinction of creed, or race, or sex; justice for all and privileges and monopolies for none; the need of universal secular education, free speech, and a free press, as the basis of universal suffrage, are invited to join the National Liberal League, and to appear or to be represented in its seventh annual congress, to be held in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 21st, 22d, and 22d, 283 (1883). The League has for its objects, and has sought to carry out the principles above stated by securing:

1. The total separation of church and state; this is the first and chief object of the league, and includes, among other things, the taxation of church property and the suppression of sectarian appropriations; and, as necessary to that general object, the League insists upon. 2. The protection of all citizens in their equal religious, civil, and political rights, without regard to religious belief or want of such belief. 3. The universal, secular, and scientific education of the people, so as to emancipate them from the prevalent superstitious "religions." 4. The impartial, secular administration and enforcement of the laws by secular authorities only, who shall be directly to the people. 5. The inviolability of the mails and their impartial administration for postal purposes only. 6. A free press and no censorship by churches through amateur societies under state laws, nor through postal officials under United States laws.

Year by year we find that the above principles and measures are openly or covertly violated more and more in every state and by the general government, and chiefly through church influences. Any set, church, or "religion" that militates against these principles, openly or covertly, directly or indirectly, is the enemy of American liberty and the American people. The League is opposed to churches and "religions" only as they are opposed to liberty and to the rights of man. All American citizens, therefore, to whom these principles and objects commend themselvs, should rally to the National Liberal League, and make it the nurse and defender of freedom in every town and state as well as in the nation. In no other way can "the blessings of liberty," the birthright of American freemen, be so effectivly maintained. Hence, there is not a man or a woman on this continent whose worth, usefulness, and dignity would not be enhanced by giving attendance or aid to the congresses of the League. Never since the original League congress of 1876 has an assembly met having more important principles and measures before it than the present congress. It meets to accomplish the fundamental purposes of the patriots of 1776. They will hav failed, unless the objects of the League are attained. To aid in this noble work it is only necessary to join, or to organize, an Auxiliary Liberal League in your neighborhood. For terms and mode of organization address the secretary without delay. All charter and life members of the League, and all delegates from local auxiliary Leagues, will hav votes in the congress. Each auxiliary is entitled to send five delegates to the congress. Annual members are entitled to seats and to votes by permission of the congress. Combine then, for the common defense, for general secular education, and for the firm support of the essentials of free institutions. Let it not be your fault if in the growth and prosperity of our people, their liberties and yours, are frittered away and lost! T. B. Wakeman, president, N. L. L.; Elizur Wright, first vice-president; T. C. Leland, secretary, 744 Broadway, New York city.

Communications.

Infidel Philosophy.

The Christian will tell you that he has obtained wisdom from on high, that he is guided by the holy spirit, that he has received the light, while you are walking in darkness.

Only the other day a pious snob said to me: "Oh, you see things with the natural eye; but it won't always be so—the scales will drop from your eyes some day."

Such ideas hav been taught in the Sabbath-school to the young and plastic mind. "O God, giv us wisdom from on high," is heard in every prayer. "Trust in God, and he will be a light to your pathway," is heard in every exhortation. Many passages of scripture inculcate the same idea; and I hav no doubt that thousands become so filled with holy egotism that they really believe they are possessed of certain knowledge not bestowed upon ordinary mortals. This leads them to believe that unregenerate wretches are enemies to God, and in order to be on God's side they turn enemies too. And they regard an Infidel as a sort of mouth-piece of the devil, through which he spews out all the curses which afflict mankind.

This supposed inspiration or immediate light or illumination of God's spirit has filled the world with bigots and tyrants. Whenever a man is led to believe that he has received a certain influence from God, he is ready to persecute all who he thinks displease God, and is on the high road to tyranny.

Under this idea of immediate inspiration, Martin Luther rants like a madman: "It is I, Martin Luther, evangelist, who says it. Let no one therefore attempt to infringe it; neither the emperor of the Romans, neither the pope, nor the king, nor all the devils in hell. If they attempt it may the infernal flames be their recompense. What I say here must be taken for an inspiration of the Holy Ghost." This inspiration from "on high" filled Martin Luther with all the elements of a tyrant. No despot could take a step beyond.

From the time that Constantine saw the big cross in the heavens until the present, the idea that God is partial to a portion of mankind, and that they receive from him a certain spiritual influence, has run them into all manner of excesses and caused them to rob and roast each other.

The sect of Anabaptists professed to hold immediate communication with God. They said they were commanded by him to "despoil and kill all the wicked and establish a kingdom of the just."

John Bockhold, a tailor of Leyden, proclaimed himself king of Zion. He committed the greatest imaginable excesses, marrying eleven wives and putting them and numerous others to death, prompted, as he said, "by an inward spirit which came from God." He declared that God had made him a present of Amsterdam and other cities, which he sent parties of his disciples to take possession of. These ran naked through the streets, howling, "Woe to Babylon! woe to the wicked!" And when they were on the scaffold for their seditions and murders, they sang and danced, and exulted in the "light of the inner spirit."

A man by the name of Herman, an Anabaptist, was moved by the spirit to declare himself the messiah, and thus to evangelize all the people. "Kill all the priests," cried he; "kill all the magistrates in the world. Repent; your redemption is at hand."

David George persuaded a numerous sect that the doctrins, both of the Old and the New Testament, were imperfect and that he was the true son of God. One of his followers went to England with a supposed commission from God. He taught the people to "continue in sin that grace might abound."

One Hacket, in the latter part of the sixteenth century, became deeply impressed that the spirit of the messiah had decended upon him, and having made many proselytes known as the "family of love," he sent two of them, Arthington and Coppinger, to proclaim through the streets of London that "Christ was come thither with his fare in his hand." Hacket was executed in Cheapside, and, like Guiteau, he shouted on the scaffold, "Jehovah! Jehovah! Don't you see the heavens open and Jesus coming to deliver me?"

James Naylor fancied himself to be the messiah, and in this character rode into Bristol, his disciples spreading their garments before him shouting, "Holy! holy! holy! Hosannah in the highest." He was scourged by order of Parliament, and the fascinated women kissed his feet and his wounds, and hailed him the prince of peace, the rose of Sharon, the fairest of ten thousand, etc.

Years ago, a minister with an over-stock of wisdom from "on high," whipped his little boy to death in a cellar.

Recently, in the state of Pennsylvania, a woman has been trying to impress upon the minds of her two little boys the idea that a hot cooking stove is the throne of grace. At different times she held their palms down on the hot stove to remind them of eternal torments which awaited them if they were not good. While holding their hands on the hot stove she would kneel and pray and try to induce them to join with her in prayer.

All are acquainted with the story of Guiteau and Freeman, and "poor little Bennie," whose deluded and inhuman father plunged a butcher knife to his heart.

These are only a tithe part of the outrages and excesses and absurdities of those who hav been led by the holy spirit and received their light from "on high;" only a few instances out of hundreds which might be given, of how men and women hav run wild, and of the erratic courses they hav pursued, guided by the heavenly jack-o'-lantern of inspiration.

My pious friend, you hav heard and read of hundreds of Infidels, and you hav been taught to believe that they are very bad; but did you ever hear of one guilty of such enormities? And yet you believe that all of these erratic Christians will go to heaven and that all Infidels will be damned.

Now, here is a connundrum or two. Do you believe that God will take the knaves and fools to himself, and damn all men of common sense? Do you believe that God ever talks with one person more than another, or influences one person differently from another? Did God ever talk with you? He never said a word to me, and it would seem as though he would as soon talk with decent men as anybody.

Your minister will tell you that God called him to preach. Don't you believe a word of it; God never called a man to preach any more then he called me to write this article.

I never knew of but one instance in which there was ever a chance to believe that God talked with a minister, and then he commanded the minister to castrate himself, and "straightway" he went and did it. I don't know but I should hav more confidence in this heavenly comunication business if God had said to numerous other ministers, "Go thou and do likewise." I think it would hav saved many families a deal of trouble.

When I was a boy I used to attend protracted and camp meetings. In those days it was common for men and women (especially the latter) to be "struck with the power," as it was called. I hav seen them, one after another, tumble over like sick chickens from the roost, until there would be a flooring of a dozen or more rolling in the dirt. The minister said it was the work of God, and that God was in the midst. A few more conundrums. How did the minister know it was the work of God, and how did he know that God was there? God don't throw people down in that way any more. Has he changed? Or were those enthusiasts deceived? or were they trying to deceive others? Perhaps it may be that God is like some of the rest of us, getting old and can't take the "crotch-lock" in a wrestle as when young; and this may be given as a reason why he don't fall the young converts any more.

Now, my pious friend, in view of all this, don't you think it would be just about as well to trust more to reason and common sense and less to this supposed "influence from on high," which has deceived so many and led them astray? And don't you think that Infidels are about as acute and far-seeing as Christians are who hav received so much "heavenly light?" Come out to the Rochester Convention. Compare your ministers with our speakers, and your Christian congregations with the Liberals who will congregate there, and see if plain, uninspired men are not about equal to those who hav received the "Holy Ghost" finish.

But the pious friend will say, "You must admit that the holy prophets and sacred writers were inspired." Not a bit of it. According to the definition of "prophet," there never was one in existence. He is no prophet who foretells an eclipse, or when Venus or Mercury will transit the sun's disk, nor was Yong Gauss a prophet because he pointed out the place of the asteroid in the heavens after its place had been lost. The discovery of the planet Neptune by Leverrier, based entirely upon scientific calculation (hope friend Craig won't think I'm "up a tree"), was a grander triumph than was ever achieved by prophet, oracle, or seer; but he was no prophet.

It is said that the prophets died out at the birth of Christ, but it is known that they were in some repute even in the fourth and fifth centuries. There were plenty of prophets as long as they were tolerated by the people. They passed away only when their tricks were discovered. In other words, the people outgrew them. There is reason to believe that some of the prophets were honest. They consulted the entrails of animals, interpreted dreams, studied the rising smoke and the clouds, and if certain signs were so and so then certain events would turn out so and so, and it was taught as a regular theory by one to another. Josephus tells of schools wherein men were taught to prophesy. The rain makers and medicin men among savages ply their hocus-pocus charms very much after the fashion of the ancient prophets. But all this is not prophesying. To prophecy one must be able to look into the future and foretell the order of coming events—a power which was never given to mortal man nor ever will be. In ancient times the rank of a man could be determined by his retinue of fancy women, eunuchs, and prophets. Josephus tells of one who kept four hundred prophets. And it would seem as if there were different systems or methods of prophesying, for the same author tells us that they not unfrequently met in bands and fought terrible battles over the merits of their respectiv systems. Prophets were as plenty as blackberries in those days. As for the sacred writers, they were inspired just as much as Confucius and Mohammed or Jo Smith were, and no more. No doubt they wrote the best they knew, and so did all the rest, but as for being inspired or receiving help from any supernatural source, it is a delusion and a snare. There are plenty of modern writers who beat them in style, beat them in thought, beat them in morality, beat them in everything. And the modern writers and thinkers hav only to take another advance step and the telephone business between earth and heaven will be entirely broken up, and the stock can't be sold on the market for a cent on the dollar.

This belief in inspiration has done more to brutalize human kind than anything else. Under the hallucination of private "inspiration" or secret influence from God, men hav inhumanly tormented and butchered each other. It has led to the very refinement of cruelty. In the days of the Inquisition there was an instrument of torture which consisted of a small iron rod about the size of a pipe stem, at the end of which was a small bulb or ball about the size of a robin's egg. This was made hot and pressed upon the eye of the heretic until it would fry and bubble in the socket. And the inspired fiend would tell the suffering victim that he had the secret evidence that God would forgiv him and make his eye whole if he would repent. Think of a poor, helpless woman stretched upon the rack until her joints are dislocated, and all the while a pious old scapegrace praying that God would enlighten her mind and save her soul from hell. Servetus was roasted in a slow green-wood fire in order that he might be the longer dying, so that he would hav more time to repent, and all the time these pious murderers had the fullest assurance from "on high" that they were doing the will of God. And yet there are hundreds of believing Christians who would rather take the chances of these pious murderers in another world than those of decent Infidels. "Vell, der bays dare money and dakes der choice."

When a man gets down like a spaniel in the dust, and prays to be filled with the Holy Ghost, he barters away his manhood for asshood. Men will cease to pray when they outgrow the childhood of superstition. The nearer they try to keep to God the less they will know about the real claims of humanity. The more they learn of the laws of nature the more they will see that their prayers cannot be answered. When men cease to pray they will lose this "inner influence" which has so long befooled and befuddled the minds of men.

There was a man who fancied that he was filled with the holy spirit, and he began to pray. The more he prayed the more he felt the influence, and he continued to pray until he became completely prostrated in mind and body. Praying for the "divine spirit" operated like the old Indian's tobacco and cider. He said the more tobacco he smoked the better he liked his cider, and the more cider he drank the better he liked his tobacco. So when they begin to pray to be filled with the holy spirit—the more they pray the fuller they get, and the fuller they get the more they pray, until reason givs place to credulity, until they are ready to believe anything and become the dupes of designing men.

When men so far lose sight of reason that they believe they are filled with a certain heavenly influence, they are prepared to believe in charms and spells, and gulp down the sacred scriptures, Elijah, Samson, Jonah, and all, as easily as carrion slips down the throat of a crow. The fact that thousands of men who pride themselvs on their intelligence can believe that the bloody wars and immoralities recorded in the Bible could be perpetrated by men acceptable to God, and that the big stories and all the nastiness there recorded were written by inspired men, is in itself astounding, and shows how the minds of men can be warped and perverted.

What inspiration glows in every line!
"Aby got Ikey," isn't that divine?

The Bible is the sublime in nastiness; it records the greatest cruelties I ever read of, and has no equal for absurdities. Is it any wonder that a man must get filled with the Holy Ghost (or holy wind) to believe it? Giv me the man who rejects all of these holy influences, and applies the test of reason to every statement before giving it credence.

My pious Christian friend, did you ever think of that encounter which young David had with the lion? Wasn't it quite a feat for him to take a lion by the beard and trounce him on the ground as a boy would a kitten against a stone wall? But Josephus says that David took the lion by the tail. Now, my Christian friend, in matters of such awful moment you ought to be very particular as to statements. For if it should turn out that David did take the lion by the tail, and not by the beard—great gewhillikens!

who would dare to become responsible for the consequences? And you ought to remember that there is the difference of a whole lion between the two statements. Josephus says that David also took a bear and served him in the same way. Well, if the bears in those days had as short tails as they hav at the present time, young David must hav been A No. 1 on a tail hold; that's all I've got to say.

But, my Christian friend, no matter if David did get the bear where he was short, come out to the Rochester Convention. Let's shake and get acquainted, and compare notes. But I want it distinctly understood that you can't get me to throw up my hat and hurrah for your God on that particular occasion. Not much. JOHN PECK.

The Bond of Union.

The bond of union among scientific Liberals is the supremacy of this world, its interests and its welfare. We will hav nothing to do with "other worldliness." Against that we wage undying warfare. It is a barbaric and selfish sentimentalism. It is utterly unworthy of modern civilization. It is the deadly foe of progress. Therefore the true Liberal will hate it with all his mind. He realizes the glory of this world and its wonderful possibilities. He sees humanity struggling against a thousand odds and winning resplendent triumphs. With this vision his heart and mind are enraptured. This is to him the dawn and the advancing day. His thoughts may flash beyond the "flaming bounds of space and time," but still do they center here. Here is the fountain of all his motiv. Here is the source of all his morality and the compelling impulse of every obligation. This is the heart of the universe. The stars in their farthest courses minister to him as a human being—as the inhabitant of this planet, wherein his career must begin and end. In the vast and deep relations of this life, in its hopes and aspirations, in its struggles and toils, in its intermingling forces of good and evil, he finds the grandest exercise of his capacities. He thinks of nothing beyond, nothing higher. Here must be his heaven, his romance, his glory, and his love. Beneath these blue skies his mighty destiny is fixed; and on this green sod his heroic qualities appear. And what a world this is when we giv ourselvs absolutely to its sway; how beautiful, how marvelous, how manfold, how munificent, and beneficent in all its action!

Whoever consecrates himself to this world, whoever admits its sovereign sway, and labors for it as for the mistress of his heart, belongs to the Liberal ranks, no matter what other opinions he may hav. If to make this world better is his master passion, because in this world's progress he witnesses the most splendid ideal, then he is of us and nothing can put him from us; the bond of union is perfect.

But if one regards himself as a pilgrim and a stranger here; if he is journeying to a far country; if he yearns to be on the other side of Jordan and play a golden harp; if the shadow is here and the reality somewhere else; if he is wrapt up in a "God" and "Christ" and can't take any interest in railroads, and electric telegraphs, and mowing machines; if he exhausts himself in prayer, and so becomes unfit for work, why, he may be a very nice sort of man—but he isn't a Liberal and that's the end of it. He's not going our way, nor we his. His purpose and our purpose are entirely opposit. We can't strike hands without pulling our arms out, for he is going to "God," while we, according to his notion, are going fast to the devil. There can be no union between us, and it's worse than useless to try to patch up any. The best way is to let each other severely alone and do our work in our own way without any compromise. If we stick to this world, then we must let the other world go by the board. We can't combine the two any more then we can combine heat and cold.

Now there are Spiritualists and Spiritualists, and some are Liberals, and some are not; some are of this world and make right good fellow-workers, with plenty of virile brain and blood to help along; while others are of the "life to come" and do no more service to the Liberal cause than so many flitting skeletons.

There are Spiritualists who think only of the "summer-land," whose meat and whose drink is the tipping of tables, who are always on the lookout for some startling phenomena, who are immersed in "seances," and are continually seeing blue spirits, and gray spirits, and every imaginable sort of ghost; who would giv more for a bit of "Materialization" than for a square meal or a ride in a palace car; who delight in being humbugged by every passing "medium"—the faint suspicion of being humbugged giving a keener zest to their spiritual enjoyment. Everlastingly they are looking into the shades of night trying to disclose some marvelous appearance.

Now, such Spiritualists will never work with the Liberals. They belong to the "lean kine," and can't go the "fat kine" of Materialism. Fling we the gates ever so wide open, they won't come in. They don't want our "substantials," they want the "phenomenal." They want the flitting and the shadowy, the intangible and the invisible. We are too earthly altogether, too much of the beefsteak, and not enough of the beatific. Call we ever so loudly, these enraptured saints of the higher life will never join in our struggle for something better here below.

But, again, there are Spiritualists, noble-minded men and women, broad-minded men and women, deep thinkers and earnest scholars, who, while believing through some tempermental fancy in a future life, make that life entirely subsidiary to this. They are flesh-and-blood Spiritualists, and quite different from their ghostly counterparts. They are philosophical and not "phenomenal." They are scientific and materialistic and common sense. Their Spiritualism is a dessert, but not the main feast—it's a little by-play and not the chief current of their thought. They are wholly of this world, nevertheless. They are supremely interested in its welfare, and they are bound that the spirits shall submit to them and not they to the spirits. They will teach the spirits and set them to work for the realization of human hopes, and not wait in dumb expectation to be translated to the "summer-land." Now this kind of Spiritualists are worth having. They giv a smack and glory to Liberalism that we constantly need. We cannot do without their poetic and visionary characteristics so long as all their glowing dreams flow into the channel of this world's advancement. They belong to us and we to them—for to them as to us this eartly life and struggle is the all-important thing.

We can draw no dividing lines on these minor points of doctrin. Belief to a large extent is and ever will be dependent on organization. As long as the world stands there will be Spiritualists, and Transcendentalists, and Universologists, and it's all right so long as back of these temperamental phases of faith there is an overwhelming devotion to this world, and a determination to make its interests the all-absorbing aim.

Let a man think what he will—if he glorifies this world, puts himself heart and soul into its glowing currents, if he worships its tremendous forces and exults in the power and splendor, with which they clothe our living humanity, then I am with him—for he and I respond to the same magnificent impulse; but if one is constantly peering through the veil of this life into another; if he is hollow-eyed with looking for the ghosts of the dead; if he turns a deaf ear to humanity and cultivates the acquaintance of spirits; if he is anxious to shuffle off this mortal coil, and even without skin and bones sit in the cool shades of the summer-land; if he is forever submitting his own brains to be flooded by the namby-pambyism of the invisible limbo, I must frankly say that I can't go any such a man. I may admire him, but "distance lends enchantment to the view." The farther off we get, the better satisfied we shall be with each other. We are not laboring for the same end. He wants to be a spirit. I don't. I want to be just what I am, only more so. I havn't any faith in death. I want this mortal life, with its quiver of flesh and blood. I want to revel in the hights and depths and grandeurs of this earthly scene. I hav no higher aim. I hav not the slightest interest in the "spiritual" world. In the place of that I put the grand ideal world of our advancing humanity. He who welcomes that as the star of his life strikes for me the deepest chords of sympathy and devotion. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Col. Ingersoll Defends Mr. Holyoake.

From the Boston Investigator.

MR. EDITOR: Two articles hav appeared lately in the Investigator attacking the motivs of George Jacob Holyoake. He is spoken of as a man governed by a desire to please the rich and powerful, as one afraid of public opinion, and who in the perilous hour denies or conceals his convictions.

In these attacks there is not one word of truth. They are based upon mistakes and misconceptions.

There is not in this world a nobler, braver man. In England he has done as much for the great cause of intellectual liberty as any other man of this generation. He has done as much for the poor, for the children of toil, for the homeless and wretched, as any other living man. He has attacked all abuses, all tyranny, and all forms of hypocrisy. His weapons hav been reason, logic, facts, kindness, and, above all, example. He has lived his creed. He has won the admiration and respect of his bitterest antagonists. He has the simplicity of childhood, the enthusiasm of youth, and the wisdom of age. He is not abusiv, but he is clear and conclusiv. He is intense without violence—firm without anger. He has the strength of perfect kindness. He does not hate—he pities. He does not attack men and women, but dogmas and creeds. And he does not attack them to get the better of people, but to enable people to get the better of them. He givs the light he has. He shares his intellectual wealth with the orthodox poor. He assists without insulting, guides without arrogance, and enlightens without outrage. Besides, he is eminent for the exercise of plain common sense. He knows that there are wrongs besides those born of superstition—that people are not necessarily happy because they hav renounced the Thirty-nine Articles—and that the priest is not the only enemy of mankind.

He has for forty years been preaching and practicing industry, economy, self-reliance, and kindness. He has done all within his power to giv the workingman a better home, better food, better wages, and better opportunities for the education of his children. He has demonstrated the success of co-operation—of intelligent combination for the common good. As a rule, his methods hav been perfectly legal. In some instances he has knowingly violated the law, and did so with the intention to take the consequences. He would neither ask nor accept a pardon, because to receive a pardon carries with it the implied promis to keep the law, and an admission that you were in the wrong. He would not agree to desist from doing what he believed ought to be done, neither would he stain his past to brighten his future, nor imprison his soul to free his body. He has that happy mingling of gentleness and firmness found only in the highest type of moral heroes. He is an absolutely just man, and will never do an act that he would condemn in another. He admits that the most bigoted churchman has a perfect right to express his opinions not only, but that he must be met with argument couched in kind and candid terms. Mr. Holyoake is not only the enemy of a theological hierarchy, but he is also opposed to mental mobs. He will not use the bludgeon of epithet.

Perfect fairness is regarded by many as weakness. Some people hav altogether more confidence in their beliefs than in their own arguments. They resort to assertion. If what they assert be denied, the "debate" becomes a question of veracity. On both sides of most questions there are plenty of persons who imagin that logic dwells only in adjectivs, and that to speak kindly of an opponent is a virtual surrender.

Mr. Holyoake attacks the church because it has been, is, and ever will be, the enemy of mental freedom, but he does not wish to deprive the church even of its freedom to express its opinion against freedom. He is true to his own creed, knowing that when we hav freedom we can take care of all its enemies.

In one of the articles to which I hav referred, it is charged that Mr. Holyoake refused to sign a petition for the pardon of persons convicted of blasphemy. If this is true, he undoubtedly had a reason satisfactory to himself. You will find that his action, or his refusal to act, rests upon a principle that he would not violate in his own behalf.

Why should we suspect the motivs of this man who has given his life for the good of others? I know of no one who is his mental or moral superior. He is the most disinterested of men. His name is a synonym of candor. He is a natural logician—an intellectual marksman. Like an unerring arrow his thought flies to the heart and center. He is governed by principle, and makes no exception in his own favor. He is intellectually honest. He shows you the cracks and flaws in his own wares. He calls attention to the open joints and to the weakest links. He does not want a victory for himself, but for truth. He wishes to expose and oppose, not men, but error. He is blessed with that cloudless mental vision that appearances cannot deceive, that interest cannot darken, and that even ingratitude cannot blur. Friends cannot induce, and enemies cannot drive this man to do an act that his heart and brain would not applaud. That such a character was formed without the aid of the church, without the hope of harp or fear of flame, is a demonstration against the necessity of superstition.

Whoever is opposed to mental bondage, to the shackles wrought by cruelty and worn by fear, should be the friend of this heroic and unselfish man.

I know something of his life—something of what he has suffered—of what he has accomplished for his fellow-men. He has been maligned, imprisoned, and impoverished. "He bore the heat and burden of the unregarded day," and "remembered the misery of the many." For years his only recompense was ingratitude. At last he was understood. He was recognized as an earnest, honest, gifted, generous, sterling man, loving his country, sympathizing with the poor, honoring the useful, and holding in supreme abhorrence tyranny and falsehood in all their forms.

The idea that this man could for a moment be controled by any selfish motiv, by the hope of preferment, by the fear of losing a supposed annuity, is simply absurd. The authors of these attacks are not acquainted with Mr. Holyoake. Whoever dislikes him does not know him.

Read his "Trial of Theism"—his history of "Co-operation in England"—if you wish to know his heart—to discover the motivs of his life—the depth and tenderness of his sympathy—the nobleness of his nature—the subtlety of his thought—the beauty of his spirit—the force and volume of his brain—the extent of his information—his candor, his kindness, his genius, and the perfect integrity of his stainless soul.

There is no man for whom I hav greater respect, greater reverence, greater love, than George Jacob Holyoake. Truly yours, ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

THE day may come, and may come soon, when those who are now loudest in raising that clamor may again be, as they hav formerly been, supplicants for justice.—Macaulay's Speech on Dissenters' Bill.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - - - Editor.
M. W. BENNETT, - - - - - - Publisher.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

All Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders should be made payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - AUGUST 18, 1883.

A Rival of Joe Cook.

For bold, unblushing falsehood, the New York correspondent of the Pittsburgh Daily Post wins the medal. As an ignoramus he is without a peer. His ability to glibly write about that of which he knows absolutely nothing is unquestionably immense. He is a great acquisition to any paper which cares nothing for facts. His reference library is his imagination, and he draws on it without stint. This, from the issue of the Post of August 4th, illustrates:

INFIDELITY IN GREENWOOD CEMETERY.

"I predict that the Infidels will soon hav a grievance, real or fancied, just as one chooses to regard it, but one which even the eloquent Ingersoll will think it worth while to talk about. D. M. Bennett called himself a Freethinker, while others deemed him a crank. He did not stop with plain disbelief of Christianity, but made wild hobbies of Socialism, even to the dirty lengths of Freelove. He edited a paper called THE TRUTH SEEKER, was a favorit speaker at wild people's meetings, and at length became in their eyes a martyr by serving a term in the penitentiary for publishing an obscene book. On his liberation he appeared on the platform of Cooper Institute Hall in the dress of a convict and was greeted by four thousand followers with tremendous enthusiasm. His journal, which had been comparativly unknown, now gained circulation by means of this incidental advertising. Its editor came into demand as a lecturer, and his assaults upon religion seemed at last to hav struck renumeration when sudden death shut him off from that reward. Bennett's followers were asked to contribute to a monument fund, and I learn from his widow that they hav given over a thousand dollars. She says that he is buried in Greenwood Cemetery in a lot owned by her brother. The ground all graded and railed has thus been provided, leaving only the monument to be erected by subscriptions, and she depends on these reaching a total of fourteen hundred dollars. She has made a contract with an old friend and warm supporter of Bennett's and who therefore has conceded a low price for the work, so that about a two thousand dollar granit pile is contemplated. The design comprises a massiv base surmounted by a column, altogether reaching a hight of about fifteen feet. Near the top of the front face will be a bronze medallion portrait of Bennett two feet in circumference, and under it a record of his name, birth, and death. It is on the remaining three sides, however, that the trouble which I anticipate will be lettered. 'Here will be engraved,' says Mrs. Bennett, 'extracts from my husband's works—glowing truth's uttered by himself, and which are the best monument he could hav. They will tell to coming generations what manner of man he was, and long after the shaft shall hav crumbled they will liv in the memories of those who learned them from its face.'

"Such is the fond expectation of the widow, and it may possibly be realized, but I think not in Greenwood Cemetery. The quotations selected to be inscribed are violently denunciatory of Christianity, and Greenwood is a Christian burial ground, whose authorities will not permit the diversion of sacred ground to such a use. Then the Infidels will make an uproar, see if they don't."

The falsehoods begin with the first sentence. There is no prospect of any grievance in connection with the placing of the monument. The lot in which Mr. Bennett lies is owned by Mr. Wicks and Mrs. Bennett. The cemetery authorities cannot place any obstacles in the way of the erection of the stone.

Mr. Bennett was a Freethinker, but no crank. We never knew of his ever even attending a Socialistic meeting, although he was fully in sympathy with the laboring and downtrodden, but he did not regard the Socialism of such men as Justus Schwab as the true remedy for their ills. Saying he descended to the "dirty lengths of Freelove" is a polecat method of attacking an enemy unworthy of notice further than to brush the animal off. The few public meetings Mr. Bennett addressed were composed of people whom it is a gross insult to call wild. He was not a public speaker in any sense.

He was not charged with publishing an obscene book. He admitted selling a book which was pronounced by the attorney-general of the United States to be not obscene. In this the attorney-general was sustained by thousands of the best men and women of the country, including Elizur Wright, James Parton, Col. Ingersoll, O. B. Frothingham, and others equally eminent. Col. Ingersoll labored for several weeks to procure the annulment of the sentence from Mr. Hayes, at that time president, which he would not hav done had the pamphlet been what the Christians charged. Mr. Hayes himself said the work was not illegitimate, promised to grant the petition which was signed by over 200,000 people, and ordered Judge Gray, the pardon clerk, to prepare the pardon, which was done. He then refused to sign it, as Mrs. Hayes interfered and exhorted him not to, because Mr. Bennett was an Infidel. She is a bigoted Christian and Mr. Bennett's enemies had addressed petions to her asking that the sentence be enforced, which was done. It is well known now that she was the real president. The gray mare was by far the better horse.

On his release Mr. Bennett did not stand on the platform of Cooper Institute. To the everlasting shame of the trustees of that building, they refused the use of the hall, although the regular payment was tendered. Chickering hall was procured, but even there Mr. Bennett donned no convict's garb. There were only about three thousand people in the hall—the other thousand and more were on the sidewalk, unable to squeeze in.

Mr. Bennett never "struck remuneration" in his labors, except that which comes from a knowledge of good work done. His death can never shut him off from that reward. He is and will be held in the highest esteem by thousands while life lasts to them.

This correspondent never learned one word from Mr. Bennett's widow. She never saw him and never wants to. There is a man in the office, however, who would like to interview him for about five minutes, just to put a little knowledge into his addled Christian brain. The description of the monument, taken from a recent TRUTH SEEKER, approaches as near the truth as this fellow can probably get. The monument will be worth two thousand dollars, for Mr. Sheehan informs us he would not duplicate it for less than that sum.

"The quotations selected to be inscribed are violently denunciatory of Christianity, and Greenwood is a Christian burial ground, whose authorities will not permit the diversion of sacred ground to such a use."

What does this Christian know about the "quotations selected?" As a matter of fact, at the time he wrote this they were not selected, and certainly if they had been he would hav no access to them. There is nothing in any of Mr. Bennett's utterances that the Greenwood authorities need object to, unless they are very bigoted, which we trust is not the case. There is no interference to be apprehended from them.

Had this fellow endeavored to see how many untruths he could crowd into his letter to his paper, he would hav said exactly what he did. It could hardly be improved upon. We show him up not with any expectation that he will do justice to the man he has so maliciously libeled—he is sunk too deep in Christian ethics for that—but because some people, ignorant of the labors or life work of Mr. Bennett, seeing it go uncontradicted, might think it was founded on fact. But if the Pittsburgh Post has any regard for its reputation we shall expect to see its disavowal of responsibility for this slander in an early issue.

The Mormon Problem Again.

The last Man delvs into the Mormon question again, quoting Mr. Munn's article that appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER in the latter part of July. This is well, but Man, in his comments on the Mormon hierarchy, has seen fit to question the soundness of the position taken by THE TRUTH SEEKER itself. Man says that "having heretofore failed to grasp the real political issue involved," we "now begin to see the light," quoting us, that "if their church defies the United States government, demolish the church. But do not put war measures in force against them until war has been declared!" Man says, "No one advocates war measures now, but only preventiv measures, as against the Chinese and slave trade. Why must we wait till war is necessary? Why not prevent the immigration and the growth of this political evil by proper legislation now? The admission and nursing of these alien enemies as voters, citizens, and land-owners, means civil war hereafter, far more certainly than the admission of slavery meant the rebellion. Is war so desirable that it must be nursed and provided for? But why not tackle the Catholics? we are asked. Yes, if the Jesuits were organizing a similar hostil political government in fact, they should be treated in the same way. Liberals must not confound measures of necessary defense of our government and republicanism with religious or Christian persecution with which we hav no lot nor part whatever."

Man lays down what Liberals should do with a great deal of assurance, but in this Man is sadly mistaken. The whole matter is in a nutshell. The United States government cannot constitutionally take cognizance of the Mormon church until that church has committed an overt act against it. That it has yet done so, even Man is not prejudiced enough to claim. Because the church will do wrong when it gets strong enough is no reason why it should be interfered with. The advocacy of restraining Mormon immigration is very little like Liberal logic. No discrimination against a man's religion can be permitted. To do so would pull down every safeguard and barrier against persecution erected by the Infidel founders of our government. Shall the custom house officers stop every immigrant that lands on our shore, and ask him as to his religion, and when he is found to be a Mormon hav him sent back? Such a procedure would be resisted to the utmost, and rightly. Man's position is that the end justifies the means, a doctrin renounced years ago by all liberty lovers, and now only held by the Jesuits. Comstock contends that the ends he has in view justify his infamous laws, under which a Freethought editor was imprisoned; but Man has always denied that.

The arguments used by Mr. Wakeman against the constitutionality of these laws apply with even greater force against the constitutionality of asking every immigrant as to his religion. With moral and religious questions the United States government has nothing whatever to do. The Constitution prohibits it from establishing a religion and from interfering with perfect freedom of worship. Any cognizance of the people of Utah must be as citizens or criminals, and not as Mormons. It can enact laws for the protection of citizens of territories, and it can punish criminals. The Mormon is not a whit more an alien enemy than the Catholic. Both place their allegiance to their church above that to the government, with this in favor of the Mormon: his church head is here in America, while the Catholic's is in Italy. There is no argument on this question that applies to the Mormons that does not apply to the Catholics, and more forcibly because the latter are more numerous, better organized, and, from their past history, a thousand times more dangerous to a nation's political integrity and a people's liberty. The main offense charged against the Saints is that they band together and put none but Mormons in office. But that is what the Catholics do. This city is run by them, and a well-known antagonist of the Romish church stands no chance of election to office here. The polygamists of Utah hav been disfranchised by the Edmunds bill, yet at their election week before last every official elected was a Mormon. Persecution only causes them to band closer together. Persecution has always been one of the chief infamies of the church. It is no less an infamy when used against the "Saints" of the nineteenth century than against the scientists of the sixteenth. The end to be attained does not by any means justify its use. The Mormons hav a right to become citizens, to vote, and to hold land. As well might the United States hav proceeded to root out the Oneida Community as the Mormons. The intentions of a religious body cannot be taken into account, but only their acts. If the Mormons hav committed an overt act, they can and should be punished. But if it is only surmised that they intend to, they must be let alone. From a close perusal of the history of the Catholic church, a good many surmise that she intends to at some time run this government as she has run those of nearly all the countries of Europe. Yet Man cannot see this huge body, while the Mormons loom up before him bigger than the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

The law against the Chinese is not a good illustration for Man to use. That law is clearly in opposition to the spirit of our institutions. It was a political expedient to tide over a temporary difficulty. That it was not regarded as a definit settlement of the question is admitted in its ten-year clause. Because a man is not six feet high, or is yellow-skinned, or works for fifty cents a day, is no reason why he should be debarred from coming to our shores. According to that law we should keep out the Irish because they work cheaper than Americans; and, according to Man, we should shut them out because they are Catholics and put their allegiance to the church above their oath of citizenship.

The true remedy for the evils of Mormonism is a prompt punishment of its criminals, then a weaning of the deluded slaves of churchcraft from the church. This can best be done by Liberals, and ought to be undertaken by them in the circulation of books and papers that show the falseness of all theology. Their immigration cannot constitutionally be prevented, neither can the government assume the intention of the church and proceed against it.

What the United States courts should do is to afford protection to the victims of Mormonism, by punishing the individuals as individuals, who rob ignorant dupes in the manner told in the following by the Salt Lake Daily Tribune of July 28th:

"A number of years ago Mrs. Mary R. Defresne lived with her husband, James P. Defresne, in the Isle of Jersey. She owned the property, and in an evil day some Mormon elders who were looking for just such as she, found her out, persuaded her to be baptized into the Mormon church, and afterward to sell her property at a great sacrifice to 'gather to the kingdom.' Besides plenty of household goods and an unusually good supply of clothing, she had nine hundred sovereigns in gold. This the elders borrowed from her in Brigham Young's name, promising to pay it at New Orleans. Her husband had been 'converted' in the meanwhile, and consented for her to go on to Utah, and he would follow the next season. She started, and on getting to New Orleans applied for her money. It was not at hand, but would be paid at St. Louis. But when she got to St. Louis there was no money; she would get it at Salt Lake. On arriving here Brigham was found out of funds, and told her she would hav to take a piece of land on Cottonwood for her pay. She could do no better and took the deed. But she had no money after getting settled on the farm, and needing some wood, a good brother in the Lord hauled her a cord, and finding she had not the cash to pay, took her yoke of oxen. Rendered desperate, the woman waited on Brigham Young and told him that she could do nothing on the land; her children were not able to help her, and her oxen had been taken for a trifle. She begged him to take back the land and pay her some of the money. He turned on her in a fury, and told her to get out of his office or he would kick her out. She denounced him as a rascal and a robber, but had to go without her money. Soon after she was waited on by a good brother, who told her that she was in danger; that she had insulted the president, and there was a plot to take her life. Thoroughly alarmed, she asked his advice as to what she ought to do. He advised her to leave the country at once, and she did so, passing her husband on the plains, she going back to Jersey, and he coming out here, neither knowing of the other's proximity.

"One Elder Edward Stevenson loaned a small sum of money to James P. Defresne, the husband of the lady above referred to, helped him a little otherwise, and married one of the daughters of the James P. and Mary R. Defresne referred to. He afterward, through unexpected interest and rents claims, by means of a false translation of an agreement between the two, set up a claim on the farm owned by the wife, in which the husband (who had gone into polygamy in the meantime) had no sort of title or interest, and Stephenson has been for some years in actual possession of the farm. He has recently actually undertaken to sell it, and convey title to another, though having no title to it himself. The deeds to the farm Mrs. Defresne took back to Jersey with her, and Mr. Wm. S. Goodbe brought them to Salt Lake some time ago for her heirs, she being now dead. Stephenson's wife is one of the heirs, but another daughter and a son claim equally, and hav set on foot measures to enforce their rights and prevent Stephenson from consummating his robbery of them.

"This is the story told us by one of the heirs. It seems to be the same tale of brigandage of which the history of Utah furnishes so many, wherein good brethren of the church, from the president down, remorselessly hav robbed their victims whenever they were weak and unprotected, and had enough property to make it worth while."

This is a legitimate cause for interference on the part of the government. The United States prosecuting attorney for the district in which this offense occurred should investigate this case, and if he finds the story true, compel the heirs of Brigham Young to disgorge. Thorough, impartial, and honest prosecution for its offenses will do more to break down the power of Mormonism than any unconstitutional interference with immigration.

Liberal Political Movements.

An Associated Press dispatch from Milwaukee dated the 11th, says:

"The Liberals held a meeting last night, and appointed Alderman Fritz and City Comptroller Smith a Committee of Arrangements for the entertainment of the National Liberal Congress delegates, who convene here September 21st, 22d, and 23d. The speakers claimed that the Milwaukee Liberals numbered 3,200, and that 1,800 were voters. It was announced that the Knights of Labor and the Turn Societies would join in a grand movement against monopoly at the next mass meeting of the Liberals."

The antimonopolists will find their best friends among the Liberals. W. H. Vanderbilt's sentiment, "the public be damned," finds an echo in the hearts of the monopolists of salvation as well as the monopolists of wealth. Liberals who understand our Constitution and are real patriots grieve at the inroads made upon the popular and ignorant masses by capitalists who keep the sentiment of society upon their side by feeing the clergy to preach "servants submit to your masters" and "render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." The question likely to be asked ere long is, "Who is Cæsar?" If he should turn out to be the workingman, the disintegration of orthodox society will be as marked and rapid as the decay of the orthodox church.

The Monument Fund.

Since the last acknowledgment we hav received the following sums toward erecting the monument:

Previously acknowledged,	$1,040 82	Robert Dygert,	1 00
R. H. Cressingham,	1 00	Clark Burchard,	1 00
Zenas Kent,	1 00	John Gibson,	2 45
Seth H. Leap,	1 00	H. Wescott,	1 00
Martin Bare,	1 00	C. J. Wescott,	1 00
Virginia E. Vance,	1 00	O. F. Clark,	1 00
I. W. Archibald,	1 00	John T. Williams,	50
Mrs. Mary Kremer,	1 00	Walter Simonds,	1 00
Dr. J. A. Walters,	2 00	J. E. Laskey,	1 00
John S. Pollock,	1 00	John D. Powers,	1 00
Mrs. J. G. Collins,	1 00	Hope C. Parsons,	1 35
Joseph A. Perley,	1 00	G. W. Smith,	1 00
Thomas Beale,	1 00	E. H. Belcher,	50
A. H. Frank,	2 50	C. D. Wallace,	1 00
J. C. Wimberly,	44	Otis White,	1 00
W. Archibald,	1 00	George Phillips,	1 00
Charles Lownd,	1 00	Mrs. M. D. Colt,	1 00
T. W. Hahn,	2 25	Alex. Doerle,	50
James Body,	1 00	Mrs. E. Fisher,	1 00
Beichling Henry,	1 00	S. J. Fenton,	5 00
J. H. Lydiard,	50	B. F. Gipple,	1 00
L. West,	1 00	Fred Folster,	1 00
		Theodore Folster,	1 00
		Total,	$1,091 81

The contract for the medallion is in the hands of Wilson Macdonald, who has the reputation of producing as fine sculpture work as any artist in the country. All the work on the monument is well under way, and the committee hope the small deficiency now existing will be speedily made up. The monument will be put in position about October first.

Notes.

MR. BUCKLEY, editor of the Methodist organ, says that "perhaps the most dreadful calamity that can befall a church is to hav its pastor accused of crime under circumstances that make it probable that he is guilty." Correct! Yet what dreadful calamities are constantly happening to the church. Nearly every day we read of "another minister fallen," and if there was not such a mass of them eating the bread of idleness in this country, the church would soon hav to look at the bottom of a muck heap to find its "beloved shepherds."

"I do not want anyone to die for me," said Peter Cooper. "I know nothing about the atonement, and don't believe a word of it. It is not what a man believes, but what he does, that determins his future." "He that believeth not the son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth upon him," says God, through John the Baptist. "He that believeth not is damned already," and so forth. Either the great philanthropist was an Infidel or the word of God is wrong. And yet Peter Cooper is claimed by the advocates of Christianity to hav lived and died a Christian!

IN contradiction of the statement made by "Antichrist" in THE TRUTH SEEKER (widely copied by the dailies) that only one of the U. S. Supreme Court judges is a Christian, the Christian at Work, says:

"Chief Justice Waite is an Episcopolian, Justice Field is a true blue Presbyterian, Justice Bradley is an elder in the Reformed church, Justice Gray is a Channing Unitarian, and Justice Blatchford is a through-and-through Episcopalian. We are not advised as to the remaining five, but we believe there isn't an Infidel on the United States Supreme bench."

"Antichrist" is a man unusually careful in his statements, and we do not now recall an instance where he has misstated a fact. He informed us that he made the claim on the best authority. It is in order for him to speak.

IT appears that the debate between the "Champion of Christianity" and Liberalism will be the chief thing at the Rochester convention, and afford Liberals a chance to place before the world the true meaning of their organization. This being the case, there is no one who can do this so adequately and eloquently as Mr. Wakeman, and we hav no doubt that he is the unanimous choice of Liberals throughout the whole country. On all the higher aspects of Liberalism, in its constructiv and integral tendencies, and especially in its political significance as pointing to the ideal republic of mankind, Mr. Wakeman is one of our foremost thinkers, as well as actors, in the great struggle of humanity, and as we hav now an opportunity to place our movement in contrast with Christianity and show all that it means, both morally and intellectually, we regard it as Mr. Wakeman's bounden duty to be our spokesman on this occasion and present our case, not only with the ability of the scholar, but with the insight of the prophet.

A RELIGIOUS paper gives the case of a Christian brother who has left the church in disgust because she does nothing to reform the world. About one-fourth of the voters of the country, he says, being communicants—which statement, by the way, is not true—the church should unite to pass laws prohibiting liquor selling, Sabbath breaking, and kindred alleged evils that vex his soul. That she does not do this he considers sufficient ground for withdrawing his membership, and in the going eases his mind with this bit of malicious verse:

"Poor slumbering church. How Pilate-like she stands!
Her craven cry, 'Behold I wash my hands!'
Her ministers are mammon-bound and dumb,
Crouched low before the juggernaut of rum;
While widows mourn and hopeless drunkards die,
And orphans starve and murders multiply;
And still upon each holy Sabbath day
You gather here and for the drunkard pray;
While e'en the very fiends satanic gloat,
To see you scorn the PROHIBITION VOTE.
I hate the prayers of him who duty shirks;
I loathe the faith which is not joined to works!
Faith is the one, and works the other oar;
Both must we ply to reach the shining shore.
Loud shouts in glee the demon Rum to-day;
'I've naught to fear from men who only pray!
My fires shall brightly burn, my stream shall swell
In waves of anguish, like a seething hell,
While Christian's vote to make the laws to sell!'"

The man is evidently a fanatic who would look with glee upon the revival of the Inquisition, and that the church has sat down upon him is another sign that evolution works upon even an inert mass of matter. The church cannot remain stationary any more than nations.

THE depths of superstition are fathomed in the following document, which is alleged to hav been found in the grave of Christ so late as the year 1803. As Christ is presumably in heaven, it is difficult to see why his grave is mentioned in connection with the prayer, but it is, and the penalties attached prevent us from laughing at the absurdity of a dead man preparing a prayer. The following directions for taking it go with the prayer: "They who shall repeat it or hear it repeated, or keep it about them, shall never die a sudden death, nor be drowned in water, nor shall they fall into the hands of their enemies in battle; and it being read over by any woman in labor, she shall be delivered safe and be a glad mother; and when the child is born let this prayer be read over it, and he or she shall not be troubled with any misfortunes; and if you see any one in fits, read it over him or her, and he or she shall stand up and bless God; and they who shall repeat it in any house shall be blessed by the Lord, and he that will laugh at it will suffer. Believe this to be certain. It is as true, as the holy evangelist had written it, and whoever shall repeat it daily shall hav three days' warning before their death." This is the prayer:

"O adorable Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, dying on the Cross for our lives. O Holy Cross of Christ, ward off from me all weapons of danger. O Holy Cross of Christ, protect me from my enemies. O Holy Cross of Christ, protect me in the right way of happiness. O Holy Cross of Christ, ward off from me all dangerous deaths and giv me life always. O Crucified Jesus of Nazareth, hav mercy on me now and forever. In honor of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in honor of his sacred passion, and in honor of holy resurrection and God-like ascensions to which he lived to bring me to the right way to Heaven, true as Jesus Christ was born on Christmas day in a stable, true as Jesus Christ was crucified on Good Friday, true as three wise Kings brought their offering to Jesus on the Thirteenth Day, true as he ascended into Heaven, so the honor of Jesus will shield me from my enemies, visible and invisible, now and forever. O Lord Jesus Christ, hav mercy on me. Mary and Joseph save me through Nicodemus and Joseph, who took our Lord down from the Cross and buried him. Oh, Lord Jesus, through Thy sufferings on the cross, for truly your soul was fitting out of this world, giv me grace that I may carry my Cross patiently, with dread of fear when I suffer, and that without complaint, and through Thy sufferings may be saved. AMEN."

The Rochester Convention—Its Proceedings.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: There are many persons throughout the country who can not attend our convention who would like to get the daily report of its proceedings. To such the following letter will be interesting:

OFFICE OF THE Democrat and Chronicle,
ROCHESTER, N. Y., August 10, 1883.

H. L. GREEN, ESQ., Dear Sir: In reply to yours of yesterday, we hav to say that it is our intention to publish pretty full reports of the Freethinkers' Convention to be held in this city, and that the price of the Democrat and Chronicle will be two cents per copy. Respectfully,

ROCHESTER PRINTING COMPANY,
N. P. POND, Secretary.

[Mr. Green also informs us that the New York Herald has made arrangements to fully report the congress. Last year this paper gave us the best reports of any of the daily papers. It is unnecessary to say that THE TRUTH SEEKER will giv the report, as we shall be on the grounds and make it ourselvs. We shall also hav the usual supply of books on hand, and hope to dispose of a goodly number.—ED. T. S.]

To Canada Freethinkers.

There has been some error in previous announcements. The only arrangements for our Canada friends are the following: The steamer Norseman will bring over and return passengers attending the Freethinkers' Convention for $3.50. The Cobourg, Peterboro and Marmora Railroad will return over their road to Coburg all who hav cards from me for sixty cents. The Grand Trunk Railway will sell excursion tickets for one and one-third first-class fare to those presenting a certificate from me, to Port Hope. The card can be obtained at the convention; the certificate must be ordered before purchasing tickets.

H. L. GREEN.

Miscellaneous.

Spiritualists and Liberalists.

WHAT THEY THINK, WHAT THEY BELIEVE, WHAT THEY TEACH, AND WHAT THEY ARE UP TO GENERALLY.

From the Genesee, Mich., Democrat.

Announcement has been made of the annual camp-meeting of the State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists, to be held on the fair ground in this city, August 17th to 27th. S. B. McCracken, the secretary of the association, is giving his special attention to the arrangements for the meeting, and being in the Democrat office a day or two ago, our man of the ready pencil thought it a good opportunity to gain some information, and assuming the role of the interviewer, proceeded to business.

"There is a good deal of inquiry, Mr. McCracken," said the scribe, "about your kind of folks—what they think, what they believe, what they teach, and what they are up to generally. Tell us something about it, will you—about the Spiritualists especially?"

"The Spiritualists," said the gentleman interrogated, "are greatly misunderstood by the world at large, although it must be confessed," said he, "that this misunderstanding is due in no small degree to the acts and declarations of some of the Spiritualists themselvs. Now, a Spiritualist may be described in brief as one who believes that there is a spiritual life existing after the death of the body, and that the persons or spirits thus existing can, under certain conditions, manifest themselvs to persons still in the body. A person believing these two facts is a Spiritualist, and so far any good Catholic may be a Spiritualist, because I understand that most Catholics believe these two facts. But at this point the two classes of Spiritualists—I mean the Christian Spiritualists on the one hand, and the adherents of what is called modern Spiritualism on the other—will divide. The latter will deny, at once and for all, the whole theological system of the church. On this head most of them are as thoroughly 'Infidel,' as that term is understood, as Ingersoll, for instance. They believe that the condition of persons in the spiritual world will, as here, be determined very much by their environment and their own desires and efforts, and not by any act of special grace. I presume that their theories or their philosophy in this particular are well understood in a general way—of course, I cannot enlarge upon them now."

"But there seems to be a prevalent opinion that the Spiritualists are a peculiar people with peculiar notions; how about that?"

"Anything is peculiar that differs from what we regard as accepted or settled, either conventionally or in matters of opinion. But as I said before, the Spiritualists as a class hav been misunderstood quite largely from the acts and sayings of some of their own number. For instance, in the early days of Spiritualism, many looked upon it as a kind of new religion—a sort of second growth on Christianity—an ultra manifestation of what had been but imperfectly manifested before. Some were inclined to go back eighteen hundred years or so, and look for a model for their imitation. They sought to be meek, and lowly, and non-combatant, but they soon found that in this modern world of thought and action they made but poor headway in being (as they had often heard the preachers urge their hearers to be) "like Christ," or "like the early Christians." Some, instead of locusts and wild honey, took to a diet of bran bread, acorns, or raw potatoes, and some, I believe, reached the point of living upon spiritual food entirely; but these generally met with the fate of the man's horse that was taught to liv on sawdust—as soon as he got him learned the critter up and died. Another class took the opposit extreme. As Spiritualism contradicted the old theology—as it was the antithesis of one religious system—so many of its adherents seemed to think that it involved an inversion of everything they had been accustomed to liv by. Hence it raised up a pretty large crop of long-haired men and short-haired women, and a good many took it into their heads that under the new dispensation there should be no marrying or giving in marriage, though it would hardly be safe to affirm that they were in all cases like the angels in heaven. But these irregular and fantastic excrescences hav largely disappeared as the lesson has come to be impressed that the conventionalities of life are determined mainly by convenience and by the necessities of social order, and that they do not depend upon any system of religious belief or non-belief. I think, in fact, that most of the Spiritualists of this day will say that Spiritualism is not a religion at all, but is simply a fact, if it be a fact. With much that has been justly said to the discredit of Spiritualism, and much more that has been unjustly said to its discredit, I believe that Spiritualists will generally be found to be about as level-headed, square-toed, up-and-dressed a class as you will find most anywhere."

"Hav you read the work entitled 'Bottom Facts,' by John W. Truesdell?"

"I hav read some notices of it and extracts from it, and think I comprehend its general drift, which is, to show that the whole range of the alleged phenomena of which it treats is fraudulent."

"What will be the effect of this work on the public mind?"

"A certain class of Spiritualists will declare that the work itself is a fraud and a lie, and refuse to giv it any credence whatever. Others will say that whether the conclusions of the book are true or not, it cannot affect the essential fact. The less informed among the church people will hail it as a godsend for their side. Many candid inquirers will accept its conclusions as final. But the trouble with 'Bottom Facts' is, it does not touch bottom facts. Though it may claim to prove that the whole range of physical phenomena, slate-writings, etc., as represented by Slade and others, is fraudulent, and though it may show how frauds may be concocted under the name of clairvoyance, it does not and cannot disprove the gift or quality known by that term. That clairvoyance and the associate mental phases of the phenomena exist and are proven absolutely to the comprehension of men of all classes—scientific men, doctors, clergymen, and representativ men of all professions—is indisputable. These phases of the phenomena furnish the strongest evidences of Spiritaulism that I hav seen. And while I do affirm most positivly that these phases of the phenomena are observed as certainly as any fact in science, I do not say that they of necessity prove the further fact of Spiritualism, but that they furnish evidences tending to prove it. Whether they do prove it or not must be judged by every person for himself. With me they make a prima facie case. However, I hav never been an enthusiast on that subject. My work in that connection has been rather on the Liberal line with which Spiritualism is so intimately associated."

"Right there, now—hold on; enlighten us a little on this Liberal line, if you please."

"That's just what I was getting at. Liberalism, in the first place, joins issue with theology, and contradicts it at every turn. Next, it demands the elimination of all religious practices from the civil government and the withdrawal of all state support of religion, as religious exercises in schools, legislatures, congress, and the exemption of church property from taxation. And, preposterous as it may seem, they hav of late years come to open political conventions with prayers—it's all wrong."

"Well, what harm does it do, anyhow?"

"Anything does harm that is mal-joined or malformed. A social monstrosity is akin to a physical monstrosity. Admit that religious exercises may be good for those who desire them, in civil affairs they are entirely out of place. Now, in theory, our government has no connection with religion—in practice, it has; and this practice is being added to, until in time it may come to be claimed as a practical establishment of a state religion. Besides, probably not one-half of the people of the country believe in or practice any religion at all, and it is wrong and unjust to thrust upon them in civil proceedings, in which both religious and non-religious people are equal co-partners, that which is special with a portion of the people only."

"Your organization is called Spiritualists and Liberalists?"

"Yes. While all Spiritualists are supposed to be Liberalists, there are those working with us on the Liberal line who are not Spiritualists—hence the two terms bring the two classes together."

"What are the special objects to be gained by your camp-meetings?"

"On the part of the Spiritualists, observation and experiment in and discussion of the spiritual phenomena and philosophy. On the part of all, social interchange and recreation, and agitation on the lines in which we agree in common."

"Well, now, why do you folks try to disturb the established order of things?"

"There was never a step in progress yet that did not disturb some established order. The owls and bats would very likely prefer that the established order of things be not disturbed by the ax of the woodman. The mole has his grievance when his burrow is opened by the plow, as it disturbs the established order. Burns's mousie was entitled to damages for having its established order disturbed, but it got no recompense, though mankind is bettered by reason of the sweet pathos of the bard poured out in verse on the occasion."

"Do you collect a gate fee at your meetings?"

"That has been the custom. Our speakers, most of them, hav to be paid, as we are not like the churches, that hav a local clergy who can afford to giv a few days oftime. Altogether it involves an expense of $400 to $500 to get up and carry on one of these meetings, and those who attend are quite willing to pay ten cents. In fact, the small fee is generally preferred, as it has a tendency to keep away many who would come from mere idle curiosity, and who would be a disturbing element, without any benefit to themselvs."

"Do you hav dancing at your meetings?"

"We hav had sometimes. Our people believe in whatever contributes legitimately to human happiness, and dancing certainly does so from the way in which it is enjoyed. But there are objections to a dance at a public gathering. It draws around it a rabble, and partakes of nothing that is genteel. So you see there are some strong arguments against it, and no very strong ones that I know of in favor of it. The local sentiment among our friends is adverse to it for the reasons given, and hence it will be left out in making out the program."

"Do you look for a large gathering?"

"If the weather is good—yes."

"What will be the order of exercises generally?"

"The program will be announced before long."

Illinois State League Convention.

The second annual convention of the State League of Illinois will be held in the Union Park Hall, formerly the Grand Opera House, No. 517 West Madison street, Chicago, Illinois, on Saturday and Sunday, September 15th and 16th, 1883. The Madison street horse cars pass and repass every five minutes and will land passengers at the entrance to the hall. Ample accommodation at reasonable rates can be had at the Park Hotel and Sheldon House, in the same block with the hall. Rooms without board at from 50 cents to $1; with board at from $1.25 to $1.50 per day. John E. Remsburg, of Atchison, Kas., the Freethought orator of the northwest, of whom the Boston Investigator says: "We hav many speakers and writers who are brilliant but not logical; and some who are logical but not brilliant; but Remsburg is both brilliant and logical," has promised to be on hand to address us on this occasion, and many may now enjoy the pleasure of hearing this noted orator at this convention for the first time. We hav several excellent speakers who are members of the State League, whom we shall expect to be present to address the meetings. It is desirable that all of the members of the League who can do so will attend this convention. And a cordial invitation is extended to all classes of Freethinkers and Christians also to attend this meeting. We seek to learn and know the truth, for we are told that the truth shall make us free. Those who may be on their way to the National Liberal League Congress in Milwaukee, September 21st, 22d, and 23d, will find this a good opportunity to see Chicago and attend the exposition, which will most likely be open at the time. And those coming to the convention will do well by taking advantage of excursion rates, which are usually offered at this season of year to persons wishing to come to Chicago to see the exposition. An earnest effort is being made by the officers of the National Liberal League this season to bring together and unite the Liberal elements of this country, and we need the earnest co-operation of every lover of mental liberty in this effort.

If there be any who cannot come to the state convention, who, at the same time, wish to see the work go on in this state, I shall be glad to hear from them. One dollar makes any man or woman a life member of the State Liberal League of Illinois. Send me your names and I will send you a certificate of membership. I hav exhausted my own resources and given my entire time and services to the cause in this state for the past three years. And if I continue in the work I shall need a little help from the friends of the Liberal cause in this state. My post-office address until further notice will be, as heretofore, at Bloomington, Ill.

F. F. FOLLET,
Secretary of the State Liberal League of Illinois.

Pratt, Ill., July 28, 283.

P. S.—Since my last report in THE TRUTH SEEKER, of April 14th, at Decatur, I hav visited a large portion of central and eastern Illinois. I hav had to keep busy in order to keep up hotel and railroad expenses, and hav had little or no time to write for the press. Now if the Liberal friends will only extend me a little aid so as to enable me to pay the expenses for printing and postage, I will get out a pamphlet containing a list of the names and post-office addresses of all the members of the State League of Illinois. Also a synopsis of its organization and of the three state League conventions I hav held during my three years' travels, including the coming convention at Chicago. Also a condensed account of my work and its results to the Liberal League. I wish to send such a pamphlet to every life member of the State Liberal League of Illinois. My object in doing this is to make the activ Liberal workers in this state acquainted with each other and bring them closer together for activ work in the Liberal cause. Also to place the State League in a position that others who hav the prosperity of our cause at heart may be able to take hold and carry on the work when I am gone. I begin to feel that my sixty years of life are hastening me toward a close of my toil here. The constant mental and physical exertion I am compelled to undergo is making itself felt, and I am anxious to feel assured that the work I hav been doing in this state will go on whether I am at the helm or not. Now, friends, please to let me hear from you.

F. F. FOLLET.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent three months to trial subscribers for 50 cents. Get up clubs!

Letters from Friends.

CEDAR RAPIDS, July 30, 283.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: I had the pleasure of a good hearty shake of the hand with your husband on his return trip, and stayed with him until he left at 12 o'clock the next day. He looked somewhat tired, though hale and hearty for the trip he had taken. When I bade him farewell I did not think it was the last time in this life; but it has so happened. His works will liv when most of us hav passed away and will be remembered no more. All honor to the brave dead.

I herewith send you $5, and will send you another yet this fall. Can't keep house without THE TRUTH SEEKER, so don't fail to send it along. I had a square shake of hands with friend Bell. I told him how I was fixed. I am very outspoken in my belief, and hav converted a dozen or two to the true faith.

E. C. BARKLEY.

CANTON, Aug. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $2.50 to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER another year. I hav taken your paper for two years, and find that I cannot possibly do without it. I was pleased to see that the Liberals of Ohio are about to hold a state convention, and, as Mr. Leland says, Canton would certainly be a favorable place at which to hold said convention, as it not only contains a large hall owned by a prominent Liberal, but many of its best citizens are Liberals. I am confident that if the convention is held at Canton it will not only be largely attended, but much good work could be accomplished. I hope that you will continue your crusade against the National Reform Association, for of all organizations that are to be dreaded it is certainly the most conspicuous, and the public should be on its guard in order to ward off its encroachments. M. E. AUGUST.

BENTON CITY, August 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In response to your call for names of Liberal-minded persons, I herewith hand you a number. I remember well how I came to be one of your subscribers. It is thus: I found a number among old papers and rags brought to me while in the mercantil business. In looking over it I found an article by our beloved D. M. Bennett, entitled "Ancient Gods." I read it, and forthwith subscribed for the paper. I hav been a reader of it ever since, and am glad to say it has freed my mind from old and unreasonable superstitious ideas. I hope some or all of the persons whose names I send you herewith will read the copies sent to them and at least become trial subscribers. I regret that my time while a youth was not devoted to studying useful lessons instead of committing whole chapters of the Bible lessons and hymns for the sake of a blue ticket or some other trifling reward. I now look upon that time as worse than lost. I hope the Rochester Convention will be a success. J. R. ROEBUCK.

YOUNGSTOWN, August 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My somewhat uncertain letter of inquiry must hav reached you, for the first copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER has just come to hand. In looking over its columns one is struck with the evidence there met with of the widespread discontent with the Christian view of human destiny which we hav inherited from our immediate forefathers. If the tone of its utterances is a fair guide to the feelings of the non-professing public, it would seem that the whole scheme of Christian doctrin is being searched to its beginnings, and that the regenerated instead of the natural man is being put on the defensiv.

There are several pamphlets mentioned in the book advertisments which I would like to hav, viz.: "Sepher Toldoth Jeshu," "Pyramid of Gizeh," and "Old Greek Life," by J. P. Mahaffey. Inclosed please find $2 to pay for the three pamphlets (which please send at once), and the remainder to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as that amount will suffice. There are many other books in your list which I shall undoubtedly want soon. G. D. HERSEY.

DRESDEN, July 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Your much valued paper, which I subscribed for a few days ago, is to hand, and will be used as a missionary. It will, I trust, be instrumental in cooling the enthusiasm of some of my Christian friends. In fact, I hav been acting the part of a missionary in my way for the last twenty years, in upholding the principles of Deism as taught by Thomas Paine, a name which is fast being exhumed from the slough of Christian spite, and will be placed as a beacon-light for the intellectual mariner upon the sea of time. Being born and raised in the hot-beds of Christianity, I naturally became, as I grew to manhood, one of its nominal believers. I, like nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand, knew nothing of the name of Thomas Paine with the exception of hearing it maligned from the pulpits of Christians, whose knowledge of him was as limited as my own. But about twenty years ago I chanced to hav his "Age of Reason" placed in my hands for perusal, and if I had only kept an account of the day I should ever feel like keeping it as a day of thanksgiving. That book was to my mind what an antidote is to a man bitten by a serpent. Since then I hav purchased several copies of it, which hav either got lost or worn out by lending. And the result has been, I am happy to say, the changing of a Christian bigot to a reasonable being. I shall continue my subscription for your paper, and will do all I can to help enlarge its circulation. J. W. GRECE.

HAMBURG, July 30, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, "Crimes of Preachers," and "Self-Contradictions of the Bible." I should hav written sooner, but was so busy that I put it off, too long, I know, but better late than never. I am amused at T. Winter. He is the most obstinate compound I ever saw. In his estimation nearly everybody but himself is a fool, and every Spiritualist is either a fraud, knave, swindler, or humbug. The thousands of Spiritualists who like myself, subscribe for and read THE TRUTH SEEKER are certainly a charitable and forbearing people, if not so, they would long since hav sat down on him. It is folly to attempt to reach him with arguments; he is utterly incapable of reasoning in a comprehensiv manner. If his obtuse brain could be reached at all, Mr. Editor, just and proper rebuke and reminder of the grand possibilities in the vast domain of nature would hav settled him. But he keeps on floundering about in his intensely egotistical and self-lauding style as if he was the cosmos of all the knowledge in the universe. Well, I suppose we will still endure the infliction from week to week, though I think the valuable space of THE TRUTH SEEKER, with his constant rehash of assertions, without a single attempt of proving them by sound logic and solid argument, might be better utilized. You will hear from me soon again by way of an order. CHAS. YEAKEL.

ST. THOMAS, July 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Having learned that the management of the good old TRUTH SEEKER paper had fallen into your hands, I drop you this to say that I hav gone out to Dakota, and wish to hav my paper sent to me. I hav not seen the dear old paper since I came to Dakota, and I can't stand it any longer without it. We hav a village here of about 700 inhabitants. Of that number there are but six of us that dare avow our Freethought principles, and I want THE TRUTH SEEKER to do some missionary work with in this locality. I am a blacksmith by trade, hav started business in the village, and am doing very well, notwithstanding I prepared a lecture upon the Bible and delivered to the people in our schoolhouse the third Sunday in June. We had forty-six people out to listen. I intend to follow up with a few lectures, and try and get a League organized if I can. As an ancient writer once said, "My soul is vexed every day" because of the lukewarmness of a great number of Freethought people who are afraid of the church; but let me say to such, Speak out! The sting of that old arch-enemy, the church, is taken from her; she is powerless to-day so far as doing you any injury, and the majority of people in the church to-day will honor you as an honest man. I would like to say that if there are any persons taking THE TRUTH SEEKER in this county or Walsh county who are good hearty Freethinkers, I would like to hear from them. Address me at St. Thomas post-office, Dakota. S. E. HAIGHT.

CHESANING, MICH, July 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $3 to help you to liv and pay your way. I am very glad you don't stop the paper. I am more than glad that you trust to providence a little sometimes. In this town or village of Chesaning there are many Liberal minded people, and we ought to hav a lecturer sometimes. I think I can send you quite a list of names of those who will gladly read THE TRUTH SEEKER and may be may add some few subscribers. I wish we had a place here to meet in, and hav a lecturer, for our minds are hungry and we need some good truthful food—something that we could drink in, as it were, soul stirring, mingled with beautiful singing. We hav a Methodist and Baptist church here (they are building a Congregational one) and two German churches. A paper is before me printed at Bay city, by Brother Smart, you know, called the Lamp of Light. The piece of which I wish to speak is headed "Christian Love Sweetens All the Relations of Life." It goes on to say that there is much that the world calls love that is scarcely worthy of the name. There is love of an animal nature, which in itself is not unholy but which must be carefully kept under law and is otherwise very dangerous; and adds, "Almost all false religions giv reign to this passion, such as Spiritualism and others." The above is a specimen of the lignt this lamp sheds. Poor light that, Brother Smart. Try it again. I will try it by sending some names for THE TRUTH SEEKER to send us some of its lamps out here. JOHN SHEPHERD.

ALTOONA, PA.

MR. EDITOR: Being a subscriber for your valuable paper in conjunction with a friend, I take the liberty to say to the friends of the cause (if you see fit to allow me space) that we hav organized a Liberal League here, and hav had just one meeting. We are about to try to do something in the way of starting people to think a little for themselvs. Our officers are; Louis Plack, President; Jacob Kuhn, Vice-President; John R. Kemp, Secretary; and D. R. Christian, Treasurer.

Ignorance prevails, superstition is rampant, and hypocrisy carries the sway and runs 20 or 22 churches in this city of 25 000 inhabitants. The leaven of Freethought is working its way, however, and some impression is being made on the minds of those who are disposed to think; but preachers cannot afford to giv up large salaries, and so they "stick." It is a fact worthy of consideration that the so-called divines cannot satisfactorily answer questions propounded to them on religion, for the old methed of "believe or be damned" is now at a fearful discount. "Laymen discuss theology with ministers and smile."

I procured a copy of Miss Susan H. Wixon's "Apples of Gold" and presented it to my daughter. She is much pleased, and the book is eagerly perused by all who hav an opportunity to look into it, the stories for the young contained in it being interesting and instructiv as well as spicy; and, best of all, there are some good hits at the superstitious ideas that still pervade the minds of so many, even in this age of enlightenment. It is a book that should be read and re-read, not by the young only, but by everybody. A. H. MAHAFFY.

NEW YORK, Aug 2 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In speaking to a friend to-day respecting the character of Jesus Christ, I told him that Jesus was a good man for his day, but very ignorant when classed with the ordinary man of the present; he believed in devils, ghosts, etc. When he spoke of having given another commandment to his disciples—that they should love one another—he said something that even Liberals would do well to copy. Selfishness is the great curse of the day. Are the Freethinkers going to Rochester to ventilate their ideas as Materialists, Spiritualists, etc., split fine hairs, discover the constitution of a bedbug, dispute about table rappings, etc., or will their business be to remember that Foote, Ramsay, and others are in an English prison because they claimed the right of private judgment; that Bennett was thirteen months in jail; that Bradlaugh has been three times elected for Northampton and escaped prison by the skin of his teeth; Mrs. Besant treated worse than a harlot: the God-in-the-Constitution party activ, and their plans likely to succeed, thus disfranchising myself and thousands of others? Let the prominent men who shall be at the convention blow a blast that shall not be mistaken by the dullest man or woman in the land. Let's hav plain language—no soft soap. Oil and water can't mix; the Jew God must go, and make room for the young, sprightly god, Humanity. That's the material we want—not ghosts.

What is Col. Ingersoll going to do? Will he and Felix Adler allow the noble English Freethinker, Charles Watts, to go to Rochester without their support there? But Mr. Watts will giv no uncertain sound on his instrument.

Mr. Editor, it amuses to hear some of the kid-glove, aristocratic gentry talk about destructiv and constructiv Liberalism. Giv me the destructiv kind. I claim that when theology is destroyed, human nature has sufficient common sense left to construct itself. A READER.

WALTON, July 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and hav been ever since it had an existence, and I see no reason why I should desert it. It is up to the standard, notwithstanding Mr. Winter's dictum. Upon the whole, havn't we had about enough of his ipse dixit? His phrases, I am sure, are not so very instructiv; "it's" not argument. His language is more like that of a bigot, rather than a gentleman. When he comes to speak of Mr. Noe's article on Spiritualism and its publication in THE TRUTH SEEKER, hear what he says, "No lady of decent or modest mind could demoralize herself by reading such indelicate slush. It's unfit for publication, and no genuin moralist would be guilty of such an issue." Don't he seem wonderfully and remarkably refined? Had he not better join the consensus of the competent—the "cultured?" There are two classes of people, I find, that need watching. First, the remarkably honest man who can find nobody in his neighborhood honest but bimself, and cries, Thief, thief! And second, the weary-faced virtuous homo, who is so sensitiv that it almost throws him into spasms so much as to hear the name Comstock. It makes him wince even to think of some certain laws of nature, "it's" so obscene, so full of "slush."

I am not quite so old a man as Mr. Winter; but that is no reason that he should not receive a spanking. Older ones sometimes stand in need of such things, as well as the younger. I am a Materialist, so far as I know myself. But I do not wish to be so dogmatic that I could not call a jackass anything else but a mule. Some people get so smart that they know everything but one, old ones included. It is right that the aged should be respected. But the aged should also respect the youth. Now and then there has been a smart one of large "caliber" that has called on Mr. Winter for some more of his dogmatism. As a general thing, the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, in my opinion, hav had about enough of his articles and don't want to hear any more from him.

May THE TRUTH SEEKER increase in subscription and usefulness. E. VAN BUSKIRK.

HATBORO, July 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.50 for a yearly ticket on your fast line against Christian bigots. THE TRUTH SEEKER gets better. While we lost a great leader in the death of Mr. Bennett, it is a consolation to know THE TRUTH SEEKER livs and prospers.

I am glad to see there was one reverend gentleman of the orthodox church who had sand enough in him to accept Mr. Green's invitation to meet the Freethinkers at Rochester. He will not be likely to make as many converts as Paul did at one blow, but he will likely find game worth shooting at all the same. A. J. READING.

MERIDIAN, August 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I believe in natural law. Matter and force, cause and effect, and everything spiritual or supernatural thus far seems to be nothing. Having been taught the Christian dogmas in childhood, I was thirty years in outgrowing their creeds in full. Many Christians dare not talk or read on the question whether there is or is not a god. At first it scares them, so handle the subject in mild, firm language. I am glad you giv us Beecher's new departures from the confession he once subscribed to. Please giv us more Beecher lectures in the future and more of Ingersoll. Giv them in full, if you hav to leave out some Spiritualism and some Universology and Andrewsism. Spirits Christian and spirits unchristian are not yet demonstrated.

Your truly, A. M. T.

FISHERVILLE, August 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I send inclosed $3.00—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER and 50 cents for a life-size picture of our dear departed and much esteemed friend and brother, D. M. Bennett. I hav his photograph, small size, but I want something that can be framed and hung up in my room and be kept in daily remembrance of the dear old hero who was the means of freeing my mind from superstitious darkness which was a source of continual torture to me, as I presume it is to any one who really believes in that hellish doctrin of a future world of fire and brimstone. Now, Brother Macdonald in compliance with your request in a recent issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I send you a few names of persons of my acquaintance who, I think, will read THE TRUTH SEEKER, and am in hopes there will be a few out of the list who will subscribe for the same. I do this small favor, Mr. Editor, if you consider it a favor, as a duty I owe to the cause, consequently without money and without price. But if you think it proper you can forward me a few Truth Seeker tracts or leaflets and I will distribute them where I think they will do the most good to advance the cause of mental liberty.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, allow me to express my entire satisfaction for the able manner in which you discharge the duties of the office of editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER. T. M. GUNN.

MEDFORD, Aug. 1, 293.

THOUGHTS.

Thoughts for the millions, the millions that be,
Also for the trillions that ever may be!

MR. EDITOR: Permit, if you please, the following thoughts a place in your valuable paper. First, then, there is no going back of power, the alpha and omega of all that is—of all there is in space and time. A trinity that is sublime; hence all visible matter is only congealed atomic power as manifested by steam, powder, etc. This fact constitutes much in little, or truth in a nutshell, to solve the mystery of the ages, of what, where, and how is God, as well as the origin of matter.

How plain and simple, understood,
The mystery of the ages.
The puzzle of the greatest minds,
Among the ancient sages!

MYSTERY.

There is no mystery in nature;
It dwells in finite mind,
As may be plainly ever seen
By reference to the blind
Of undeveloped mind.

And now in regard to the Jesus Christ testified of in the New Testament. I believe if such a person ever existed he was as much, and no more, the son of God (God meaning the good, atomic power of the universe) as any other individual being, as

All things are one thing, the universal whole,
Controled by science-law, the great immortal soul.
All things are one thing, the universe broad,
Composed of atom-power, the body of our God.

In and whereof all things liv, move, and hav their being according to unchangeable sequence law, inherent in all that is. As said the noble Humboldt, "The universe is governed by law."

ELIHU W. ALLEN.

GENOA, MINN., Aug. 2, 283.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed herewith you will find fifty cents in stamps, for which please send THE TRUTH SEEKER to the trial subscriber named. My business takes me through several counties of this state, and whenever I am in a place over Sunday I invariably deliver a lecture, and believing THE TRUTH SEEKER one of the very best mediums for the dissemination of knowledge, I improve any and every opportunity to talk TRUTH SEEKER. Perhaps you will remember that about six weeks ago I ordered your paper sent to W. W. Button, of this place. Well, Mrs. Button takes particular pains that all of their neighbors shall get the benefit of the paper. This subscription is one of the results. I trust the seed thus scattered may fall in good soil, and in time bear good fruit. I hav lectured here several times. The first time my hearers were scarcely a baker's dozen. The last time, four weeks ago, the schoolhouse would not hold the audience. I speak here again next Sunday. As a result of four lectures in this school district, at the present time there are not to exceed four Christian families. I shall lose no opportunity to speak a good word for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I see by your issue of July 21st that Mrs. S. J. Lenont, of Northfield, mentions my lecture at that place. Mrs. Lenont is one of nature's noble women. There are but few like her in this land of bigotry and superstition—a soul overflowing with charity and benevolence. Her whole heart is in the noble work.

I trust that every one who has any interest in the education of the masses will leave no stone unturned which will assist in circulating THE TRUTH SEEKER.

W. D. COLE, M.D.

FABIUS, August 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Although I reside in the township of Pompey, N. Y., my address is Fabius, N. Y., a village of some four or five hundred inhabitants. Said village contains four God houses, with steeples pointing skywards, showing that Christianity has a strong, strong hold on the minds of a majority of the inhabitants.

Methodists, Baptists, Universalists, and Roman Catholics meet at their accustomed houses of worship and inform their unknown and imaginary divine being of their desires, also telling the impertinent sinner and ungodly Infidel what they must do in order to escape Pluto's dominion and gain an entrance to the cubic city of the New Jerusalem; to take lessons in the harp business, adapted to the songs of Moses, etc., forgetting, of course, that the former was an adulterer and the latter a murderer —"for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Lovely picture! No obscenity there; no Infidel there; no honest doubter there; all is peace and joy. The wicked cease from troubling, although there was once war in heaven.

"Who would not be an angel,
If things are thus and so?
Better discard all common sense,
Than to perdition go."

Rev. Alonzo Shurtleff, of the M. E. church at Fabius, N. Y., is more than an average speaker in his denomination. I hav conversed with him and listened to his remarks. He is courteous, genial, and sociable, and, I must say, I rather like the man for his apparent good qualities. But Brother Shurtleff is in trouble. First, his wife is an invalid, and has been so for months, with no prospect of recovery Secondly, Miss Della Clark, a young lady in her teens, acted as nurse and waiter to the pastor's wife for several weeks last winter and during a revival in the M. E. church. Miss Clark is rather a prepossessing young lady, and, withal, a beautiful singer, and has heretofore borne a good character, so far as I hav heard. Thirdly, an action is now pending in the Supreme Court on charge that Brother Shurtleff has been attempting improper familiarities with Miss Clark. Where rests the blame the deponent saith not. That, as yet, remaineth a secret with Rev. A. Shurtleff and Miss Della Clark. In M. E. Billings' "Crimes of Preachers" is the case of Rev. Lewis vs. Rev. Shurtleff slander case in 1881. I intend going West soon on a visiting trip, and may call on many of the Liberals in other states, and, if so, will write you "as the spirit moveth." HOMER A. BILLINGS.

PIOUS CLERGYMAN'S CHILDREN.

WOODHULL, August 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The character and disposition of each child born are more or less shaped and governed under the power and influence of circumstances arising under the law of heredity as well as the surrounding circumstances of each day during life.

Thus each generation is more or less responsible for the moral and civil condition of the next. A child born of Hindoo parents has the disposition of a Hindoo, molded and stamped in its nature, as can be seen in an Indian; though raised from an infant by a Christian family, the Indian nature will remain. This can also be seen in children born of parents of different religious beliefs. There is no better recommendation for a man or woman as to their moral standing in society than to be born of Quaker parents; all such are, as a general thing, noted for their honest integrity and moral deportment. I will name Mrs. Slenker; notwithstanding her surroundings hav led her out of the idea of a future life, yet her moral and honest disposition, stamped in her nature by her parents, remains; while being born of orthodox parents is no recommendation as to morality or honesty, especially the children of a strictly orthodox clergyman, when he and his wife are strong believers in total depravity. Children born of such parents, as a general thing, are noted for their depraved dispositions, and it is not to be wondered at under the laws of reproduction.

In this can been seen the evil produced and stamped by one generation into another. A firm belief in total depravity and its sister-mate, that mankind cannot merit anything by doing that which is right that will benefit them in the next life, but he has to depend wholly upon the merits of Christ. Under the idea mankind comes into the world a depraved being, and cannot do anything meritorious. "What has he to encourage him to do right under such teaching?" No wonder we are so slow in the developing of moral goodness.

The orthodox teaching of total depravity, man merits nothing by doing morally right, and that the merits of Christ will save him on the gallows—should he abandon it it is hurtful to society and a great cause of wickedness. And it's a wonder that more do not reach the gallows than do, as it is under Christian orthodox teaching a sure and safer road to eternal bliss than the gospel, as about nine out of ten swing into Christ's open arms. This speaks well for the gallows.

The question has been often asked, Why are the children of pious clergymen so apt to be lawless renegades? It arises from the fact a depraved disposition is drawn from the firm belief of their parents and stamped in their nature under the law of reproduction.

Why should this be denied by our Christian friends, when they themselvs believe this depraved condition of man is drawn from grandfather Adam? Yet on this they are blind in claiming it had its origin in the first man God made, which would implicate their God as the original author of depravity. Here we leave the question; yet we deny the truth of the doctrin of total depravity, but are obliged to acknowledge the ruinous and mischievous results arising from a belief in it as well as from all other false ideas. ISAAC PADEN.

RICHFORD, July 28 283.

MR. EDITOR: We see in our beloved TRUTH SEEKER very many learned discussions of points on which we differ, and they are very amusing; some are very instructiv. Oh, happy day, when mankind generally will entertain sober thought and willing minds, and admit that every one has a sacred right to do his own thinking, and tell his thoughts to impart or obtain information. What we say and do is mainly the means by which we make known our thoughts, and every one who is unwilling that all shall form their own honest opinion, and express it, is a curse to mankind. As a foundation of this gigantic evil is the assumption that we hav knowledge and consciousness after we are dead. The falsehood is old and widespread as history, and villainous, lying priests call the people out every returning Sunday to retail the human damning lie for a salary of $20,000 a year, and not one solitary item of proof on earth to show it to be anything but assumption. Our natural desire for continued life is all we hav to rely upon. The living will die, as surely as they liv. Spiritualists think so, and are trying to demonstrate it as a fact that we liv and hav individual form, knowledge, and consciousness after we are dead. The story is that Jesus taught so, that we go to hell or heaven, just as we are here. We don't see what he wanted of his body at the right hand of God. We doubt that God knows his right hand from his left, according to the Bible. What an idiotic affair that Jesus gave the keys of the kingdom to Peter! He was Satan (Matt. xvi, 23), and every pope and Christian priest has been a satan ever since. Origen was a very pious satan; he castrated himself because he thought God did not know how to make a man. Then Constantine got the keys—a murderous curse as ever had superstition! They made a thing at the Council of Nice, that grew into our Bible, and forced it on to the ignorant world by endless hell and damnation scare, to call it the word of God, made by three hundred and eighteen quarreling, lying, drunken, murderous bishops—hypocritical satans. See Dr. Mosheim's "Ecclesiastical History." See Amberley's "Analysis of Religious Belief," that the whole thing stands upon assumption—nothing else (p. 646). See his introduction (p. 27). It has always seemed that Christians think that when a man dies only his body dies. So ministers hav constantly taught—that man leaves his body as a worn-out house, or as a chicken leaves its shell and goes into another place. Now if that place is not a real one it must be a priest fabrication, as the whole Bible proves itself to be. Heaven is beyond the bounds of time and space, says one. Hell is the grave, the heretic's place, says another. Bishop Marsh, Dr. A. Clarke, A. Barnes, and other learned men do not not know what the Bible means, but all say it is not to be understood as written. So pay the salary, $20,000 each, to millions of disputing, differing mystagogs, and hav it expounded scientifically. According to all the systems and sects, separately (except Universalists), all men will go to hell unless God gets the keys back. We think Judaism and Christianity are a fabrication of priests, and the falsest of all falsities. When we are dead individually we know nothing, says twenty texts of our bible. Truth wanted.

Our town generally is so under the influence of orthodox Christianity—six different sects—that more than twenty professed Freethinkers won't take our TRUTH SEEKER. I traveled all day, and got one three months' subscriber. JOSEPH NOYES.

A Dude's Conversion.

From the Elgin, Ill., Morning Frank.

The Bloomington Bulletin tells the story of the conversion of Tommy Harrison, the dude preacher, who tried to rend Elgin from center to circumference by the power of his burning eloquence and signally failed owing to the good sense of a majority of his audiences. We reproduce the article. It will be found entertaining, especially to those who are acquainted with the young man and his "eccentric" manner of making converts:

Mr. Harrison, the "boy preacher," had a narrow escape. He came within an instant of being lost at the time he was saved. He told the story of his narrow escape at the Jacksonville camp-meeting last Thursday, and a great many people believed him—believed every word he said.

One cold December night—year not mentioned—Mr. Harrison determined to attend services at a church, which was five minutes' walk from where he was when he arrived at this determination. He started, and when he had reached a lamp-post which was immediattly opposit the church house to which he was going, he heard a voice saying:

"Son, giv me thy heart."

"He did not immediately comply with the demand. He hesitated; not because he believed any injury was to be done him. He was undoubtedly aware of the fact, that if a human being had made a demand of him in the street in the night time, the demand would hav been for his purse, not for his heart. But he hesitated; and while he was doing so, the voice said to him:

"Now, or never."

Just at that moment the village clock commenced striking the last hour of the old year. Mr. Harrison makes this statement with much emphasis, and we hav no inclination to dispute his word. But he must permit us to remark that the last hour of the old year is twelve o'clock, and that is a late church hour. Few men go to church services at twelve o'clock at night, even on "watch night."

But this is neither here nor there; and we will therefore proceed with Mr. Harrison's story.

The village clock commenced to strike twelve. At the sixth stroke Mr. Harrison heard the voice that had addressed him before, say:

"Before the tongue of that bell shall cease to strike, you must be lost or saved forever."

This announcement, as the reader may surmise, somewhat startled Mr. Harrison, and he cried:

"What! before that clock ceases striking, must I be saved or lost forever? My God! what shall I do? Can't I giv thee my heart to-morrow or the next week, or after I go home?

The voice had been explicit, and it was evidently irritated by these unnecessary questions, because, louder than before, as it seemed to Mr. Harrison, that warning came from—in the language of Mr. Harrison—the depths of the infinit, resounded through every avenue of Mr. Harrison's deathless spirit, saying:

"Now or never."

At that instant, which was, according to Mr. Harrison, "just about the tenth stroke of the bell," God himself—we quote Mr. Harrison exactly—"from the depths of his unspeakable mercy stretched forth his almighty arm and interposed, and said:

"I will hold back the stroke of the bell while for one moment you look to me."

It seemed to Mr. Harrison a long time between the tenth and the eleventh stroke of that midnight bell, but before the eleventh stroke rang out on the air—as Mr. Harrison puts it—the pent-up feelings of what he calls his poor heart, broke out in a strong utterance, and he shouted:

"Now!"

There were two "nows," because as he cried "Now" God's spirit—this Mr. Harrison solemnly asserts—answered to his spirit and also cried:

"Now!"

Mr. Harrison says that in that instant he was saved—redeemed. "It was," he adds, "all done in the twinkling of an eye."

This story we may not dispute because this great soul-saver tells it over and over again, and in its recital seems to gain "converting power," but we must say that Mr. Harrison had a very narrow escape. If that village clock had not been a very slow striker, he would hav been lost—would hav been at this moment in the service of the devil—might hav been telling lies from the pulpit, charging an admission fee to the sanctuary, and, with pious words on his lips, might hav been making merchandise of the seamless garment of the Lord!

We rejoice that Mr. Harrison is sure he is not mistaken when he says he cried, "Now!" before he heard the last stroke of the village clock at the time he had that fateful midnight conversation with his savior.

Help Spread the Light.

It is acknowledged by all that the best way to spread Liberal principles is by papers, tracts, and books. Every issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER is a good missionary document, and every Freethought book sold is a silent pleader and propagator of the truth. There are thousands of Freethinkers all over the country whom we do not know and who do not know this paper. But our friends know them, and we ask such as are willing to spend a few moments for the good of Liberalism to send us their names and addresses, that we may mail them copies of the paper. We are willing to furnish the copies necessary for this purpose and mail them, as we hope a few extra subscribers may thereby be obtained, which will make the pecuniary outlay square. But the main object is to spread the knowledge of Liberalism, its aims and objects, what we think and why we think it. We would like every one to know that the Christian faith is a rope of sand, that the churches are taking the money of the people without giving any return. It is the duty of all Freethinkers to let their neighbors know that the fires of hell hav been quenched.

Many Liberals say they hav no time to devote to missionary work, and do not like to argue with their church acquaintances. Very well, send us the names and let THE TRUTH SEEKER argue the case. Where a man is Liberally inclined—and not dead to all sense and reason—we hope and think THE TRUTH SEEKER will bring him clear out of the fog.

To stimulate our friends in this work we make the following offer, only asking that when the sender has read the pamphlets he shall hand them around that others may be benefited.

To every one sending us the names and addresses of twenty-five independent men and women who do not take THE TRUTH SEEKER, and who do their own thinking, we will send one copy of either of the below-named twenty-five cent books:

"Influence of Christianity upon Civilization," by B. F. Underwood.

"Advancement of Science." The Inaugural Address of Prof. John Tyndall, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science.

"Chronicles of Simon Christianus." His manifold and wonderful adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. Fidel.

"Religion not History." An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F.W. Newman, of the London University.

"The Besant-Hatchard Debate." A two nights' debate between Mrs. Annie Besant and Rev. A. Hatchard on "Jesus of Nazareth a Historical Character, and the Influence of Christianity on the World."

"The Clergyman's Victims." A Radical story vividly portraying the wrongs committed by the professed men of God. By Mrs. J. E. Ball.

"Ecce Diabolus; or, The Worship of Yahweh or Jehovah," shown to be the worship of the Devil.

"Gottlieb: His Life." A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Beautifully written by S. P. Putnam.

"Jesus Christ." His Life, Miracles, Deity, Teachings, and Imperfections. By W. S. Bell.

"Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier," a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings.

"Sepher Toldoth Jeshu; or, The Book of the Generation of Jesus." First translation into English of a remarkable Hebrew document, giving the original from which the story of Jesus was made up.

To those who do not know twenty-five persons whom a perusal of THE TRUTH SEEKER would be likely to benefit, but who can send a list of ten names, we will send either of the following by D. M. Bennett:

"Matter, Motion, Life, and Mind."

"The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers."

"The Gods of Superstition."

"The Great Religions of the World."

"Jesus Christ." Considered as an Infidel.

"An Hour with the Devil."

"Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds."

"Honest Questions and Honest Answers."

Or either of the following by Underwood:

"What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity."

"Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."

"Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint."

"Paine the Political and Religious Reformer."

"Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs."

"Materialism and Crime."

"Will the Coming Man Worship God?

"Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity."

This is a chance to enlighten a large body of people, to help THE TRUTH SEEKER, and to get good books to circulate by only a few moments' work. We hope the responses will be many.

BIBLE SERVICE.

For Earnest Inquirers Only: "A Peculiar People Zealous of Good Works," "Communion of Saints." Notice. Sent by mail. Address, REWARD, 6t33 710 Broadway, New York city.

CHRISTIANITY VS. HUMANITY.

GEORGE CHAINEY
will lecture on this subject
AT GERMAN MASONIC TEMPLE,
220 EAST FIFTEENTH ST.,
(Rooms of the Liberal Club),
SUNDAY EVENING, AUGUST 26,
AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.
TICKETS, - FIFTY CENTS
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

STANDARD BOOKS.
Sold by D. M. Bennett, 21 Clinton Pl., N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By Prof. John Tyndall. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Esq. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
III. Food. By Edward Smith. Cloth, 1 75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain. 12mo. Cloth; 1 50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Prof. Josiah C. Cooke, Jr. of Harvard University. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Prof. Balfour Stewart. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 12mo. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1 75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M. D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
X. The Science of Law. By Prof. Sheldon Amos. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XI. Animal Mechanism. A Treatise on Terrestrial and Aerial Locomotion. By E. J. Marey. With 117 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By John William Draper. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XV. Fungi: their Nature and Uses. By M. C. Cooke. Edited by the Rev. M. J. Berkeley. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XVI. The Life and Growth of Language; an Outline of Linguistic Science. By Wm. Dwight Whitney. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XVII. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XVIII. The Nature of Light, with a General Account of Physical Optics. By Dr. Eugene Lommel. With 188 Illustrations, and a Plate of Spectra in Chromolithography. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XIX. Animal Parasites and Messmates. By P. J. Van Beneden. With 83 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XX. On Fermentation. By P. Schutzenberger. With 28 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Prof. Bernstein, of the University of Halle. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXII. The Theory of Sound its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. Norman Lockyer. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, 2 50
XXIV. A History of the Growth of the Steam-Engine. By Robert H. Thurston. With 193 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 50
XXV. Education as a Science. By Alexander Bain. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXVI. Modern Chromatics, with Applications to Art and Industry. By Ogden N. Rood. With 130 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXVII. The human Species. By A. de Quatrefages, Professor of Anthropology in the Museum of Natural History, Paris. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXVIII. The Crayfish: an Introduction to the Study of Zoology. By Prof. T. H. Huxley. With 82 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXIX. The Atomic Theory. By Ad. Wurtz, Membre de l'Institut, etc. Translated by E. Cleminshaw. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXX. Animal Life as Affected by the Natural Conditions of Existence. By Karl Semper, Professor of the University of Wurzburg. With 2 Maps and 106 Woodcuts. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXXI. Sight: An Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By Joseph Le Conte, author of "Elements of Geology," etc. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXII. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. By Dr. J. Rosenthal, Professor of Physiology at the University of Erlangen. With 75 Woodcuts. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXIII. Illusions. A Psychological Study. By James Sully. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXIV. The Sun. By C. A. Young, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Astronomy in the College of New Jersey. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00
XXXV. Volcanoes: What they Are and what they Teach. By J. W. Judd, Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines. With 96 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth. 2 00
XXXVI. Suicide: An Essay in Comparative Moral Statistics. By Henry Morselli, M.D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXXVII. The Formation of Vegetable Mould, through the Action of Worms. With Observations on their Habits. By Charles Darwin, LL.D., F.R.S. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XXXVIII. The Concepts and Theories of Modern Physics. By J. B. Stallo. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75
XXXIX. The Brain and its Functions. By J. Luys, Physician to the Hospice de la Salpetriere. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XL. Myth and Science: An Essay. By Tito Vignoli. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XLI. Diseases of the Memory: An Essay in the Positive Psychology. By T. H. Ribot, author of "Heredity." From the French, by William Huntington Smith. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50
XLII. Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., etc. 12mo. Cloth. 2 00

THE
"WILSONIA,"
INVENTED BY
WILLIAM WILSON,
MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.
80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N.Y.
63 Broadway, Brooklyn, E. D.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and have been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

MR. WILSON, Dear Sir: Please send me a few circulars in regard to your curativ garments. I hav been telling several parties about them. I hav some friends who hav used them with great and pleasing results, and I would like to promote their use.
Yours, THOMAS W. BREWER,
Manasquan, N. J.

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to
DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Poetry.

The Awakening.

From the Sentry.

The day comes sweeping onward,
Shaking out banners of light,
Her feet are upon the mountains,
The darkness and chill of night
Fly from her royal presence
From the light of her roseate face—
From the truth in her blue eyes shining,
Her genuin form of grace.
Her arms are bared to the morning,
They are full of wonders sweet,
She will scatter along her pathway
A waking world to greet.
The fire of wasting fever
Grows paler and paler now,
As her cool truth presses lightly
Upon the sick world's brow.

But unto this age of sleepers
She cries "Up, up, and put on
The garments befitting labor,
My weapons and armor don;
'Tis no time to lag or idle,
For each has his bread to win,
Whoso reaps another's labor
Eateth the bread of sin.
I come the earth to lighten
Of her weariness and care,
To smite and seal with lightning
The lips that falsely swear.
I will find the key of knowledge
That selfishness hid away,
And open the courts of wisdom
To the radiant light of day.
I come to destroy illusion,
The painted harlot of night
Shall lose by the day her glamour,
And shrink from the searching light.
So all garnished and hollow systems,
Built up for the thrall of man,
Shall show in glaring falseness
When by my light you scan
Their ugly and vast proportions
That hav grown the darkness through,
Ah, the day like chaff shall scatter,
Make way for the fabric new!
Nature and art their treasures,
And all things of beauty and worth,
I will bring from the hall and palace
Of the high-born ones of earth.
With themes of noble doing,
Shall the minds of men be fed,
For they of life know nothing
Who must always dig for bread.
They must learn the grander lesson,
That to dare, and do, and plan,
Not just for one, but many,
Is the best estate for man;
That every wave of influence
He stirs on the ocean wide,
Shall bring him a vessel freighted
On some incoming tide."

MRS. S. D. BINGHAM.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man. Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE RADICAL PULPIT.

Comprising discourses of advanced thought by O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER two of America's clearest thinkers.

Price. in cloth, $1

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 48 Clinton Place, New York

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid, FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.

12t24

LOVE AND CONJUGALITY.

Hints toward the true and felicitous in Love and Conjugality. Sexuality viewed from a higher ideal. New thoughts thereon, clearly presented, yet in unobjectionable shape. All in, or contemplating the conjugal relation should hav this essay. Sent on receipt of seven cents, postage, by S. G. LEWIS, GRASS VALLEY, CAL. 5t30

A REMARKABLE BOOK!

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address, JOHN W. TRUESDELL, Syracuse, N. Y.

30tf

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire. 200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY, 28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25

Including, 'Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" 'The Declaration of Independence,' "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

Interrogatories to Jehovah.

Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75cents.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

WETTSTEIN'S JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LIFE-SIZE LITHOGRAPH OF D. M. BENNETT.

Heavy Plate Paper,

SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.

Sent by Mail for Fifty cents

ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

TRUTH:

A Poem in Three Parts.

BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the

JEWISH JEHOVAH.

As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of control.

Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;

Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.

The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action:

Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.

Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.

Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles.

Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:

And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound, Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S SOCIOLOGY;

OR,

The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.

ILLUSTRATED.

Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 21 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1; Postage, three cent stamps.

Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.

Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Piece, 25 cents. For sale at this offic

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED. Jesus the Lord God Creator of Heaven and Earth. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

What Objections to Christianity? A discussion between D. M. BENNETT and G. M. MAIR, divided into the following theses: 1. Christianity is neither new nor original, being borrowed or copied from much older systems of religion.

2. Miracles and supernatural achievements hav been as fully and truly ascribed to other teachers and founders of religion as to Jesus.

3. The story of Jesus and his mission in the world is unhistorical; it is not corroborated by contemporaneous history.

BENNETT affirms; MAIR denies. This is an exhaustiv discussion. Price, $1.50.

Trial of D. M. Bennett in the United States Circuit Court upon the charge of depositing prohibited matter in the mail. This gives a full history of this celebrated case, and shows what monstrous injustice was perpetrated upon MR. BENNETT. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. 5 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Deacon Skidmore's Letters. First Deacon of Zion Hill Baptist Church, giving many church incidents and his evolution from Christianity to Liberalism. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Book of Chronicles of the Pilgrims in the Land of Yahweh: also the Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. Cloth, $1.00

The First Epistle of Bennett the Apostle to the Truth Seekers. 10 cents.

The Great Religions of the World. 10 cents.

Open Letter to Samuel Colgate. 10 cents.

Jesus Christ. Considered as an Infidel. 10 cents.

An Hour with the Devil. 10 cents.

Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds. 10 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

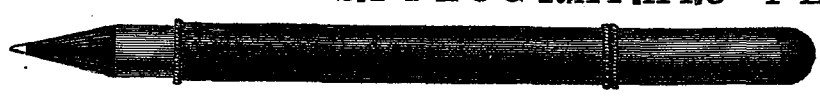
Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.



Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

THE KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN

ONLY $1.50.—The Best Pen for the Least Money.—$1.50 ONLY.

FROM ONE WHOM ALL KNOW.

The Kerner Stylographic Pen is the most convenient, handy, and ever-ready pen I have ever used. I've tried innumerable fountain pens, gold pens, and all sorts, from the old quill pen to the stylograph, and for utility, satisfaction, and general convenience this excels all the rest.

My son Oscar also prefers it for use in the woolen mill to any other he has tried.

It is pen, ink, and pencil all in one and can be carried in the vest pocket so as to be always ready.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

The KERNER STYLOGRAPHIC PEN is the best and the cheapest, and is the only good stylographic pen that sells for $1.50. The correspondents of THE TRUTH SEEKER who purchase a Kerner Stylographic Pen and use it will make the printers happy.

Observe the address: GEORGE MACDONALD,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

[If any one purchasing this pen is dissatisfied with his bargain the pen may be returned to this office and the price will be refunded. A sum of money has been deposited with the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER to meet this exigency should it arise.]

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
6m9 Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY —OF— RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

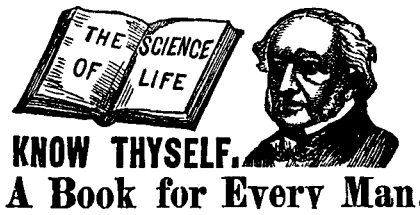
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,

Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now

Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.

Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.

30 cents per box.

Try us once, and find entire relief.

1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

THAT was indeed a villainous but cunning old snake to thus completely thwart the king of heaven, the eternal God, of all knowledge and power, and the maker and ruler of heaven and earth; and it was a most pernicious and deadly kind of fruit that could, by simply being masticated by our grandmother, thus inexorably damn to hopeless, perpetual, and excruciating torture countless quintillions of her offspring. Why did God ever make such a snake? Why did he ever make such an apple? Why did he ever make such a woman! Why should he hav created the possibilities for such a terrible catastrophe? How could he hav made such an egregious blunder? Who is able to answer these momentous questions? It is a painful subject to dwell upon, and let us leave it at once.—D. M. Bennett.

THE old argument that if Christianity is a human fabrication, its authors must hav been either good men or bad men, takes it for granted that there are but two classes of persons—the good and the bad. There is at least one other class—the mistaken, and both of the other classes may belong to this. Thousands of the most excellent people hav been deceived, and the history of the world is filled with instances where men hav honestly supposed that they had received communications from angels and gods. Ingersoll.

IT has been thought by some persons that if the evidence of revelation appears doubtful, this itself turns into a positiv argument against it, because it cannot be supposed that if it were true, it would be left to subsist upon doubtful evidence. And the objection against revelation from its not being universal is often insisted upon as of great weight.—Butler's Analogy.

REVELATION when applied to religion means something communicated immediately from God to man. No man will deny or dispute the power of the almighty to make such a communication, if he pleases. But admitting, for the sake of a case [i. e., for argument's sake], that something has been revealed to a certain person, and not revealed to any other person, it is a revelation to that person only. When he tells it to a second person, a second to a third, a third to a fourth, and so on, it ceases to be a revelation to all these persons. It is revelation to the first person only, and hearsay to every other; and consequently they are not obliged to believe it.—Paine.

DOES the song of the herald-angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," express the exhaltation and the yearning of a human soul, or does it describe an optical and acoustic fact—a visible host and an audible song? If the former, the exhaltation and the yearning are man's imperishable possession—a ferment [sic] long confined to individuals, but which may by and by become the ieaven of the race. If the latter, then belief in the entire transaction is wrecked by nonfulfilment. Look to the East, at the present moment [1877], as a comment on the promis of peace on earth and good will toward men. That promis is a dream dissolved by the experience of eighteen centuries. But though the mechanical theory of a vocal heavenly multitude proves untenable, the immortal song and the feelings it expressess are still ours, to be incorporated, let us hope, in purer and less shadowy forms in the poetry, philosophy, and practice of the future.—Tyndall on Man's Soul.

WHEN such music sweet
Their heart and ears did greet,
As never was by mortal finger struck;
Divinely-warbled voice
Answering the stringed noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took;
The air, such pleasure loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heavenly close. —Milton's Hymn to the Nativity.

A MAN'S first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censures of the world. If the last interferes with the former, it ought to be entirely neglected; but otherwise there cannot be a greater satisfaction to an honest mind than to see those approbations which it givs itself, seconded by the applauses of the public. A man is more sure of his conduct when the verdict which he passes upon his own behavior is warranted and confirmed by the opinion of all that know him. —Addison's Sir Richard De Coverley.

IN place [i. e., high station or office] there is license to do good or evil, whereof the latter is a curse, for in evil the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can. But power to do good is the true and lawful end of aspiring, for good thoughts (though God accept them), yet toward men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power and place, as the vantage and commanding ground.—Bacon's Essays.

IT is the current belief that Adam was made out of the earth somewhere in Asia, about six thousand years ago, that Eve was molded from one of Adam's ribs, and that the progeny of these two, having been reduced to eight persons, were landed on the summit of Mount Ararat, after a universal deluge. All the nations of the earth hav proceeded from these last, hav migrated to their present localities, and hav become negroes, Australians, Mongolians, etc., within that time. Five-sixths of the public are taught the Adamic doctrin, as if it were an established truth, and they believe it. I do not, and I am not acquainted with any man of science, or duly instructed person, who does.—Huxley.

WE think that religious warmth is only to be valued when it springs naturally from an improved character, when it comes unforced, when it is the recompense of obedience, when it is the warmth of a mind which understands God by being like him, and when, instead of disordering, it exalts the eye of understanding, invigorates conscience, givs a pleasure to common duties, and is seen to exist in connection with cheerfulness, judiciousness, and a reasonable frame of mind. When we observe a fervor, called religion, in men whose general character expresses little refinement and elevation, and whose piety seems at war with reason, we pay it little respect. We honor religion too much to giv its sacred name to a feverish, forced, fluctuating zeal which has little power over this life.—Dr. Channing.

Odds and Ends.

A TRAMP calls his shoes "corporations," because they hav no souls.

IT sounds very fishy to allude to a pair of freckled sisters as a brace of speckled beauties.

"WHY should we celebrate Washington's birthday more than mine?" asked a teacher. "Because he never told a lie!" shouted a little boy.

A WESTERN journal heads an article, "A lunatic escapes and marries a widow." Escaped, eh? We should say he got caught.—Binghamton Republican.

NOTHING so takes the conceit out of the average man as to order his paper discontinued and then see the editor going along and getting rich without him.

AN editor who has discontinued his paper because it was losing money too rapidly, is now prepared to deliver his able lecture entitled "Success in Journalism."

WHEN somebody told Mr. Whistler that a friend of his had received a legacy of £10,000. "By Jove!" cried the witty spendthrift, "that's £20,000 a year for six months."

"IF Jones undertakes to pull my ears," said a loud-mouthed fellow on a street corner, "he'll just hav his hands full." The crowd looked at the man's ears and smiled.

IT was terribly confusing to the small Chicago boy, during the Knights Templars' conclave, to see sixty brass bands going in different directions and hav to decide instantly which one to follow.

"HOW old is that dog?" was asked of a colored man. "If he livs to see the fifth of next June, sah, he will be de oldest dog on de plantation." "And if he don't liv till then——" "He'll be dead, sah."

A COLORED girl in Atlanta, Ga., was knocked over by an engin, and in a few minutes got up as if nothing unusual had happened, and, looking after the engin, said, "You's got a heap ob politeness to serve a lady dat way."

A WESTERN coroner's jury sat on a body of a horse thief found hanging to a tree, and brought in a verdict of "Hanged by parties unknown to the public." It will be observed that the usual wording, "unknown to the jury," was not used on this occasion.

A FISHERMAN fished in the lake,
Who tried a big sucker to take;
But just as he got 'm
Was yanked to the bottom—
And there's where the fish took the cake.

POSSIBLY love laughs at locksmiths, but yet when the young man gets home from a courting-set-to about three o'clock in the morning, and can't work the night-latch, his remarks about the lock and the locksmith are not accompanied by any considerable hilarity.

THE Prince of Wales wants the waters of England stocked with fish, after the American plan. If he succeeds, the church congregations will be very small on Sundays. It is the lack of an opportunity to catch fish on Sundays that makes the average church attendance so large in England.

"MY son graduated at a theological college with honors," proudly said an Arkansaw gentleman. "He took the gold medal, and the professors all declared that he would make his mark." "What is he doing now?" asked an acquaintance. "He's in the penitentiary at present; but, sir, he graduated with honors."

AMERICAN JOURNALISM: The following is a sample of the headliness with which the Cincinnati Times and Star enlivened its telegraphic columns during the Egyptian campaign. Each capitalized word represents the beginning of a separate line: "Woeful war. It lifts aloft its horrid front in Egypt's desert land, And Wolseley's soldiers groan and grunt Across the scorching sand. The turbaned Turk and gory Greek In enmity lock horns, And all the Powers, so to speak, Tread on each other's corns."—St. James Gazette.

LITTLE Sammy Peterby went to church last Sunday and did not behave himself as decorously as he he should hav done. His father, who is an Austin editor, rebuked him for his levity, but the little fellow insisted that he listened to everything the preacher said. "Then, Sammy, I suppose you remember the text." "Of course I remember the text. I don't remember the words, pa, but I know pretty near what it was." "What was it then?" "If a man smites you on the right cheek, smite him on the left, and of such is the kingdom of heaven."

AT a Thursday evening prayer-meeting held in an interior town a week or two since, a brother arose and said he had a confession to make. Much against his will he had been beguiled into buying railroad stocks as a speculation. "Poor sinner! Lost man!" groaned the circle. "Yes, I put up for stocks. I was tempted by Satan, and I yielded," continued the repentant. "How much?" asked a cautious brother. "Well, I had about $2,000 invested." "And you lost it all, and there's no hope for you?" "Lost! No, Brother Smith; I cleared fifteen hundred dollars." "Ah! you did? That somewhat alters the case. I believe if Brother Jones bought a $400 bell for our church and paid the expense of revarnishing the pews, the Lord would let him off this time on suspended sentence!"

ALTHOUGH he was only five years old, Dickey was rather spoiled. Some children are spoiled at a very early age. He objected to eating the fatty portions of his meat, but his father encouraged him to eat the meat by promising him a nice warm whipping with a strap, and also by telling him that his brothers eat the fat. "Do they like it?" asked Dickey. "Do you mean the strap?" "No; the fat." "Yes; they like the fat." "Then giv them mine." With regard to the negroes and the Indians, the people of Texas, and of the west generally, are very much like Dickey and his antipathy to fat. Some of the cranky philanthropists say they really love the darkey and the Indian. We do not like them, but if the distant cranks really do, then we magnanimously allow them to hav our share, too.—Ex.

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING

CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,

324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

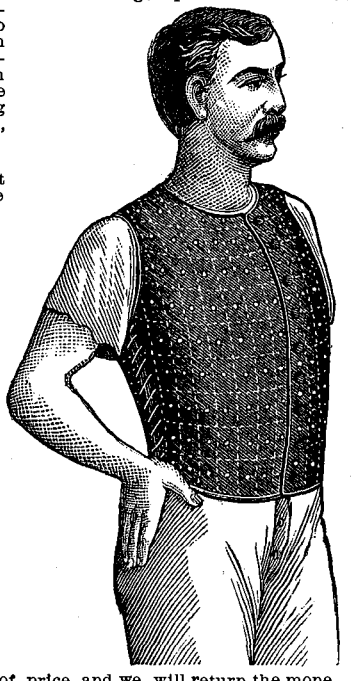
Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.



DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the mone, if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED

Address for further information,
Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 34. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, August 25, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Parnell testimonial fund has reached the total sum of £20,054. The money had better been spent in relieving the chronic distress of Ireland.

DETROIT Free Press: People whose conscientious scruples wouldn't allow them to go to the circus can now go to camp-meeting and hav just as much fun.

A COLORED preacher in Alabama offers to take a call at $8 per year. A Western editor asserts that all he seems to care for is to hav his dog comfortably fixed.

UNDER the head of "Sunday Services," a St. Louis paper recently had the following notice: "The Immaculate Conception Sodality nine will cross bats with the Christian Brothers' second nine, Sunday, at 2 P.M."

IT is said that in a northern town in Litchfield county, Conn., the Sunday morning church service is postponed until 12:30 o'clock, to enable the deacon and other members of the church to take their milk to the depot.

THEODORE PARKER, the Liberal theologian, is to hav a statue in Boston. The late Nathaniel Nash left $5,000 for that purpose, and a like sum will be raised by the Parker Memorial Association, a committe of which is now examining models.

A LITTLE girl at Palmer, Mass., who had been naughty and was punished by her mother, made the following prayer when she went to bed at night: "O God, please make me good; not real good, but just good enough so I won't hav to be whipped."

THE Rev. Dr. Muldahon, of Boston, says the Garden of Eden is now under the waters of the Indian ocean, while the Rev. Dr. Warren, of the Boston University, stoutly maintains that it is anchored to the North Pole. Wouldn't it be well to offer a reward for it?

A PREACHERS' convention was recently held at Creston, Iowa, at which each attendant was presented with a brood of five chickens. This shows foresight on the part of the donors. When every minister keeps hens their neighbors' roosts will show more indications of thrift.

REGARDING the reported finding of an ancient copy of a portion of Deuteronomy, the Independent says: "Let our readers put no trust whatever in a reported very ancient copy of the Ten Commandments, and part of Deuteronomy, differing from the Hebrew text, found in Arabia. It is exploited by a well-known dealer in frauds, and is on the face of it a forgery."

A BOSTON dispatch says that as the Essey Savings Bank has foreclosed a mortgage of $70,000 on St. Mary's Church, Lawrence, on account of the inability of the priests to raise sufficient funds to pay the interest, the property will be sold at auction on Sep. 6th. This is a portion of the property owned by the Augustinian Society. The structure originally cost over $200,000.

AT the annual convention at Pittsburgh, Pa., of the anti-organ faction of the Presbyterian church, the Rev. Dr. Wm. Wishart, of Hayesville, O., said he was conscientiously opposed to instrumental music, and rather than giv up his views of duty would giv up affiliation with brethren in the church and go where organs are not used. Said he: "The organs will put us out of the church, or we will put them out."

AN interesting religious item comes from Texas. On the 14th, Lawrence Denman met the Rev. R. G. Sewell on the street, and, drawing a 44-caliber navy revolver, fired at the clergyman four times, and he died a short time afterward. The causes leading to the shooting are of a domestic nature, and can only be published on the trial of the case. No one blames Denman; and yet the Rev. Mr. Sewell is regarded as the victim of a conspiracy, as he asserted in an ante-mortem statement. Both parties were highly connected. Mr. Sewell was a Methodist clergyman and the local agent of the American Bible Society.

AN evangelist mounted the platform in a Kentucky meeting-house, and, looking about the room for a moment, he suddenly exclaimed, "Are you prepared to die?" It was well that he was a very spry man, and it was well also that the pulpit was double thickness. The evangelist says a Kentucky congregation is very responsiv, but you must be very careful what kind of language you use when in its presence.

DAN MCNEILL, of the Chico Record, is the same man of whom the story is told that he died, went to heaven and became an angel, and on being greeted by an old chum on earth, who said, "Well, Dan, we've struck it at last," replied: "Yes, the music is fair, the wings may work better when they get oiled up a little, the harp is in fair shape, the seraphim and cherubim may improve on acquaintance, but this d—d halo don't fit."

A PEDLER tried to coax a Michigan farmer's wife into buying some of his wares by patting her under the chin and saying that she was a nice little woman. Her husband soon returned, and she told him. With a friend he overtook the pedler, whipped him, threw his pack over a fence, took him back to the house, whipped him again, then tried him before a mock court, and fined him three dollars, which he paid. His retaliation is a suit for damages.

THE bishop of Monaco harangued his flock the other day upon the doings at Monte Carlo and delivered himself of this pregnant remark: "We liv in a pagan locality which it is frightful to contemplate; our pontiffs are croupiers, our gods gold and silver, our vestal virgins the cocottes from all the slums of Europe, our visitors the scrapings of the world's tripots." The bishop of Monaco has his opinions, and is not afraid to express them.

THE Sabbatarians of Pennsylvania, on undertaking to stop work and recreation on Sundays in several towns, are met by a threat to enforce the Sunday law to the uttermost, in order to make it odious. The statute was passed nearly a century ago, and has never been revised. Nor has it for a long time been regarded. It forbids almost everything on Sunday except going to church. Travel for any other than a religious or necessitous purpose is punishable. All efforts to make amendments hav failed on account of the divergent views of legislators.

A VINEYARD HAVEN man furnishes a New Hampshire paper with the following copy of a curious old bill, which for detail is a model, found in the ruins of Wentworth Abbey. It bears date, Nov. 1st, 1605, and was copied from the original:

Earl Fitzwilliam and Rev. J. Maguire

To John Jones.

For repairs to Roman Catholic Church	s.	d.
To soldering and repairing St. Joseph	0	4
To cleaning and ornamenting the Holy Ghost	0	6
To repairing the Virgin Mary, and making her a new child	5	6
To making a new nose for the devil, putting a horn on his head, and gluing a piece on his tail	6	6
	£12	10.

THE following item illustrates the beneficent effects of holy writ. If Freethought were responsible for such deeds, what a cry would go up from the churches to down with Freethought! The observation has been made that it is a poor rule that won't work both ways! It is from the Muscatine, Iowa, Evening Journal of the 6th: "Mr. Carl Busch was before the commissioners of insanity today, who reported in favor of sending him to Mt. Pleasant. Mr. Busch is a mason, and has been a resident of Muscatine for over thirty years. He laid the foundation stone of the court house. He labors under a religious hallucination, claiming that he is called upon by a divine voice to sacrifice his wife. He arrives at his conviction or judgments in a peculiar way. He has several little paper cards, some of which are blank, others are marked. Turning them all face downward, he makes a prayer and then draws a card; if blank, no victim is called for; if marked, a sacrifice has to be made. He will probably be taken to the asylum this evening."

J. H. HUDSON, pastor of the Baptist church in Holton, Kan., against whom the Joseph Herald, recently, charged that he had been on a carousal in that city, visiting a house of ill fame, and drunkenness, was to-day arraigned before a tribunal on these charges, based on the publication mentioned, and other conduct since he has been in that place. The accused pleaded guilty to part of the charges. His proposition to the church to resign as pastor, provided the matter was dropped, was accepted, and the engagement between them was cancelled. Public opinion, outside the church, is against Hudson. He will probably hie away to new pastures.

A BRITISH newspaper prints a letter from an exceptionally innocent correspondent, who, having read the latest yarn about Noah's ark, goes on to say: "In these days of skepticism and rank Infidelity, when men scoff at the truthfulness of the word of God, yea, there are those among us even professing Christianity who doubt the authenticity of the Pentateuch. Many there are also who disbelieve in the Old Testament altogether and look upon it as an obsolete book. In these days, therefore, it is refreshing to hear from what may be considered a reliable source that Noah's ark has been discovered." This excellent gentleman, remarks the Times, has been very badly taken in. He should be put into the ark.

WILLIAM HICKS, his wife, and five children became wildly insane at Charleston, Ill., and were committed to an asylum. The oldest daughter had gone home sick. Her mother refused any medicin, claiming that she had a revelation from heaven that she could wash all sins and ills away with salt and water. Hicks got the idea that the family were a band of angels under the especial care of God. The children took to repeating passages of scripture and speaking of themselvs as angels. Mrs. Hicks had been losing sleep while waiting upon her sick daughter, and during all this time she was laboring under such intense religious excitement that her nervous system became overstrained, and as she had a powerful influence over the other members of the family they also became insane.

SEVERAL serious charges are made by his parishioners against the Rev. Florence McCarthy, Catholic priest of Williamsburgh, L. I. He has just been acquitted by the courts of charges of gross immorality, made by two women, but still a portion apparently of his flock do not regard him innocent. In addition, a committee has been formed from the members of his church to ask the archbishop to appoint another shepherd. At the meeting held for this purpose one of the speakers said that he, the speaker, "defied any one either to show him just how a dollar of their money had been expended, tell him how much the church was now in debt, or what disposition had been made of the money Father McCarthy had collected in the parish." Afterward others said: "During the ten years that Father McCarthy has been in charge of the parish he has been treasurer, and apparently he has been responsible to no one. Thousands of dollars hav been gathered to build him a house. There are no signs that he ever will build one. The church is comparativly new, and requires little money for repairs. There are no schools nor any institution to require our money. Two or three times statements hav been asked from Father McCarthy, but the man who asked once did not ask again." This shows a rather bad state of things in that particular corner of the Lord's vinyard, and the faithful are perhaps justified in asking for another keeper. The multiplicity of these church scandals is leading a great many to think that the world would be as well off without any of these unfaithful priests. In the language of the Sun, slightly changed, the church must go.

News of the Week.

ANTI-JEWISH outbreaks are still frequent in Russia.

THE deaths from cholera in Egypt last Saturday numbered 310.

A NUMBER of heavy leather dealers in Boston hav failed and suspended.

GEORGIA is to hav a new capitol at a cost of $1,000,000 and six years' work.

GOV. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, has gone off on a vacation in his yacht America.

THE British Parliament has set apart $250,000 for the building of horse-car lines or tramways in Ireland.

THE strike of the telegraphers is ended, and the men are now looking for work. The demonstration is pronounced a failure.

A BANK in Warren, Ohio, has been obliged to close its doors on account of the peculations of its cashier, which amount to some $80,000.

TWENTY-TWO young men who were students in the university at St. Petersburg, and who were connected with a Nihilist journal, hav been sent to Siberia.

THE remarkably cool and comfortable summer has produced an exceedingly dull season for the hotels and restaurants at the watering places about New York.

MILLIONAIRE FLOOD, of San Francisco, is to erect in that city a residence, at a cost of $3,500,000, which he intends shall be the finest private building in the country.

THE abolition of the internal revenue tax on matches has encouraged the manufacture in foreign countries, and tons of matches are being brought to America from Sweden.

CANON BERNARD of Brussels, recently charged with breach of trust, purloining money, etc., was acquitted. The public prosecutor still believes him guilty, and has appealed the case.

THE government of Egypt intends to suppress a newspaper published in Cairo, because it has printed satirical articles on the public ministers. Four other papers hav been warned.

THE thirty-second annual meeting of the Association for the Advancement of Science met in Minneapolis on the 15th inst. The deliberations were rather anomalously opened with prayer.

A SITE has been selected for a monument to Washington in Westmoreland county, Va., near the site of the old homestead. An act of Congress has authorized the erection of such a monument.

QUIET has been restored throughout Spain. The rebellion is quelled and the various bodies of police hav returned to their former stations. Activ inquiries are now being made as to the cause of the revolt.

THE town of Ischia, on the island of Cassamicciola, near Naples, recently destroyed by earthquake, is being rebuilt. Emperor William of Germany has contributed 50,000 marks (about $15,000) in aid of the sufferers. The Prince of Wales givs $500.

JUDGE JEREMIAH S. BLACK, the eminent jurist and old-time politician, died at his home in Brockie, Pa., on the 19th, aged 73 years. He will be remembered by readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER as one of the parties to the Ingersoll-Black discussion published last year in the North American Review.

A BRITISH Jew, representing a business firm of London, and who arrived in St. Petersburg, Russia, on the 15th, provided with the proper British passport and credentials to banking firms, has been expelled from Russia by order of the authorities. The Jewish World of London says that the Russian minister of the Interior has ordered the enforcement of the decree forbidding Jewish manufacturers from employing Christian workmen.

Selections.

Further Views of Col. Ingersoll on the Situation.

From the Brooklyn Union.

In response to the reporter's query as to the progress made in theology, Col. Ingersoll said:

"By comparing long periods of time, it is very easy to see the progress that has been made. Only a few years ago men who are now considered quite orthodox would hav been imprisoned, or at least mobbed, for heresy. Only a few years ago men like Huxley and Tyndall and Spencer and Darwin and Humboldt would hav been considered as the most infamous of monsters. At that time every scientific discovery was something to be pardoned. Moses was authority in geology, and Joshua was considered the first astronomer of the world. Now, everything has changed, and everybody knows it except the clergy. Religion is finding out new meanings for old texts. We are told that God spoke in the language of the common people; that he was not teaching any science; that he allowed his children not only to remain in error, but kept them there. It is now admitted that the Bible is no authority on any question of natural fact; it is inspired only in morality, in a spiritual way. All, except the Brooklyn ministers, see that the Bible has ceased to be regarded as authority. Nobody appeals to a passage to settle a dispute of fact. The most intellectual men of the world laugh at the idea of inspiration. Men of the greatest reputations hold all supernaturalism in contempt. Millions of people are reading the opinions of men who combat and deny the foundation of orthodox Christianity. I can remember when I would be the only Infidel in the town. Now I meet them thick as autumn leaves; they are everywhere. In all the professions, trades, and employments the orthodox creeds are despised. They are not simply disbelieved; they are execrated. They are regarded, not with indifference, but with passionate hatred. Thousands and hundreds of thousands of mechanics in this country abhor orthodox Christianity. Millions of educated men hold in immeasureable contempt the doctrin of eternal punishment. The doctrin of atonement is regarded as absurd by millions. So with the dogma of imputed guilt, vicarious virtue, and vicarious vice. I see that the Rev. Dr. Eddy advises ministers not to answer the arguments of Infidels in the pulpit, and givs this wonderful reason: That the hearers will get more doubts from the answer than from reading the original arguments. So the Rev. Dr. Hawkins admits that he cannot defend Christianity from Infidel attacks without creating more Infidelity. So the Rev. Dr. Haynes admits that he cannot answer the theories of Robertson Smith in popular addresses. The only minister who feels absolutely safe on this subject, so far as his congregation is concerned, seems to be the Rev. Joseph Pullman. He declares that the young people in his church don't know enough to hav intelligent doubts, and that the old people are substantially in the same condition. Mr. Pullman feels that he is behind a breastwork so strong that other defense is unnecessary. So the Rev. Mr. Foote thinks that Infidelity should never be refuted in the pulpit. I admit that it never has been successfully done, but I did not suppose so many ministers admitted the impossibility. Mr. Foote is opposed to all public discussion. Dr. Wells tells us that scientific Atheism should be ignored; that it should not be spoken of in the pulpit. The Rev. Dr. Van Dyke has the same feeling of security enjoyed by Dr. Pullman, and he declares that the great majority of the Christian people of to-day know nothing about current Infidel theories. His idea is to let them remain in ignorance; that it would be dangerous for the Christian minister even to state the position of the Infidel; that after stating it, he might not even with the help of God successfully combat the theory. These ministers do not agree. Dr. Carpenter accounts for Infidelity by nicotine in the blood. It is all smoke. He thinks the blood of the human family has deteriorated. He thinks that the church is safe because the Christians read. He differs with his brothers Pullman and Van Dyke. So the Rev. George E. Reed believes that Infidelity should be discussed in the pulpit. He has more confidence in his general and in the weapons of his warfare than some of his brethren. His confidence may arise from the fact that he has never had a discussion. The Rev. Dr. McClelland thinks the remedy is to stick by the catechism; that there is not now enough of authority; not enough of the brute force; thinks that the family, the church, and the state, ought to use the rod; that the rod is the salvation of the world; that the rod is a divine institution; that fathers ought to hav it for their children; that mothers ought to use it. This is a part of the religion of universal love. The man who cannot raise children without whipping them ought not to hav them. The man who would mar the flesh of a boy or girl is unfit to hav the control of a human being. The father who keeps a rod in his house keeps a relic of barbarism in his heart. There is nothing reformatory in punishment; nothing reformatory in fear. Kindness, guided by intelligence, is the only reforming force. An appeal to brute force is an abandonment of love and reason, and puts father and child upon a savage equality. The savageness in the heart of the father prompting the use of the rod or club produces a like savageness in the victim. The old idea that a child's spirit must be broken is infamous. All this is passing away, however, with orthodox Christianity. That children are treated better than formerly shows conclusivly the increase of what is called Infidelity. Infidelity has always been a protest against tyranny in the state, against intolerance in the church, against barbarism in the family. It has always been an appeal for light, for justice, for universal kindness and tenderness."

"The ministers say, I believe, colonel, that worldliness is the greatest foe to the church, and admit that it is on the increase?"

"It is the habit of the ministers to belittle the men who support them—to slander the spirit by which they liv. 'It is as though the mouth should tear the hand that feeds it.' The nobility of the Old World hold the honest workingman in contempt, and yet are so contemptible themselvs that they are willing to liv upon his labor. And so the minister, pretending to be spiritual—pretending to be a spiritual guide—looks with contempt upon the men who make it possible for him to liv. It may be said by 'worldliness' they only mean enjoyment—that is, hearing music, going to the theater and the opera, taking a Sunday excursion to the silvery margin of the sea. Of course, ministers look upon theaters as rival attractions, and most of their hatred is born of business views. They think people ought to be driven to church by having all other places closed. In my judgment, the theater has done good, while the church has done harm. The drama never has insisted upon burning anybody. Persecution is not born of the stage. On the contrary, upon the stage has forever been found impersonations of patriotism, heroism, courage, fortitude, and justice, and these impersonations hav always been applauded, and hav been represented that they might be applauded. In the pulpit hypocrits hav been worshiped; upon the stage they hav been held up to derision and execration. Shakspere has done far more for the world than the Bible. The ministers keep talking about spirituality as opposed to worldliness. Nothing can be more absurd than this talk of spirituality. As though readers of the Bible, repeaters of texts, and sayers of prayers were engaged in a higher work than honest industry. Is there anything higher than human love? A man is in love with a girl, and he has determined to work for her and to giv his life that she may hav a life of joy. Is there anything more spiritual than that—anything higher? They marry. He clears some land. He fences a field. He builds a cabin; and she, of this hovel, makes a happy home. She plants flowers, puts a few simple things of beauty upon the walls. This is what the preachers call 'worldliness.' Is there anything more spiritual? In a little while, in this cabin, in this home, is heard the drowsy rhythm of the cradle's rock, while softly floats the lullaby upon the twilight air. Is there anything more spiritual, is there anything more infinitly tender, than to see husband and wife bending with clasped hands over a cradle, gazing upon the dimpled miracle of love? I say that it is spiritual to work for those you love. Spiritual to improve the physical condition of mankind—for he who improves the physical condition improves the mental. I believe in the plowers instead of the prayers.

"Some of the clergymen who hav been interviewed admit that the rich and the poor no longer meet together, and deprecate the establishment of mission chapels in connection with the large and fashionable churches."

"The early Christians supposed that the end of the world was at hand. They were all sitting on the dock waiting for the ship. In the presence of such a belief, what are known as class distinctions could not easily exist. Most of them were exceedingly poor, and poverty is a bond of union. As a rule, people are hospitable in the proportion that they lack wealth. In old times, in the West, a stranger was always welcome. He took, in part, the place of the newspaper. He was a messenger from the older parts of the country. Life was monotonous. The appearance of the traveler gave variety. As people grow wealthy they grow exclusiv. As they become educated there is a tendency to pick their society. It is the same in the church. The church no longer believes the creed, no longer acts as though the creed were true. If the rich man regarded the sermon as a means of grace, as a kind of rope thrown by the minister to a man just above the falls; if he regarded it as a life-boat, or as a light-house, he would not allow his coachman to remain outside. If he really believed that the coachman had an immortal soul, capable of eternal joy, liable to everlasting pain, he would do his utmost to make the calling and election of the said coachman sure. As a matter of fact, the rich man now cares but little for servants. They are not included in the scheme of salvation, except as a kind of job lot. The church has become a club. It is a social affair, and the rich don't care to associate in the week days with the poor they may happen to meet at church. As they expect to be in heaven together forever, they can afford to be separated here. There will certainly be time enough there to get acquainted. Another thing is the magnificence of the churches. The church depends absolutely upon the rich. Poor people feel out of place in such magnificent buildings. They drop into the nearest seat; like poor relations, they sit on the extreme edge of the chair. At the table of Christ they are below the salt. They are constantly humiliated. When subscriptions are asked for they feel ashamed to hav their mite compared with the thousands given by the millionaire. Their pennies feel ashamed to mingle with the silver in the contribution plate. The result is that most of them avoid the church. It costs too much to worship God in public. Good clothes are necessary, fashionably cut. The poor come in contact with too much silk, too many jewels, too many evidences of what is generally assumed to be superiority."

"Would this state of affairs be remedied if, instead of churches, we had societies of ethical culture? Would not the rich there predominate and the poor be just as much out of place?"

"I think the effect would be precisely the same, no matter what the society is, what object it has, if composed of rich and poor. Class distinctions, to a greater or less extent, will creep in—in fact they do not hav to creep in. They are there at the commencement, and they are born of the different conditions of the members."

"These class distinctions are not always made by men of wealth. For instance, some men obtain money, and are what we call snobs. Others obtain it and retain their democratic principles, and meet men according to the law of affinity, or general intelligence, on intellectual grounds, for instance."

"There is not only," remarked Colonel Ingersoll, "the distinction produced by wealth and power, but there are the distinctions born of intelligence, of culture, of character, of end, object, aim in life. No one can blame an honest mechanic for holding a wealthy snob in utter contempt. Neither can any one blame respectable poverty for declining to associate with arrogant wealth. The right to make the distinction is with all classes, and with the individuals of all classes. It is impossible to hav any society for any purpose—that is, where they meet together—without certain embarrassments being produced by these distinctions. Now, for instance, suppose there should be a society simply of intelligent and cultured people. There wealth, to a great degree, would be disregarded. But, after all, the distinction that intelligence draws between talent and genius is as marked and cruel as was ever drawn between poverty and wealth. Wherever the accomplishment of some object is deemed of such vast importance that, for the moment, all minor distinctions are forgotten, then it is possible for the rich and poor, the ignorant and intelligent, to act in concert. This happens in political parties, in time of war, and it has also happened whenever a new religion has been founded. Whenever the rich wish the assistance of the poor, distinctions are forgotten. It is upon the same principle that we gave liberty to the slave during the civil war, and clad him in the uniform of the nation; we wanted him, we needed him; and, for the time, we were perfectly willing to forget the distinction of color. Common peril produces pure democracy. It is with societies as with individuals. A poor young man coming to New York, bent upon making his fortune, begins to talk about the old fogies; holds in contempt many of the rules and regulations of the trade; is loud in his denunciation of monopoly; wants competition; shouts for fair play, and is a real democrat. But let him succeed; let him hav a palace upon Fifth avenue, with his monogram on spoons and coaches; then, instead of shouting for liberty, he will call for more police. He will then say, 'We want protection; the rabble must be put down.' We hav an aristocracy of wealth; in some parts of our country an aristocracy of literature—men and women who imagin themselvs writers and who hold in contempt all people who cannot express commonplaces in the most elegant diction; people who look upon a mistake in grammar as far worse than a crime. So, in some communities, we hav an aristocracy of muscle. The only true aristocracy, probably, is that of kindness. Intellect without heart is infinitly cruel; as cruel as wealth without a sense of justice; as cruel as muscle without mercy. So that, after all, the real aristocracy must be that of goodness where the intellect is directed by the heart.

"You say that the aristocracy of intellect is quite as cruel as the aristocracy of wealth—what do you mean by that?"

"By intellect, I mean simply intellect; that is to say, the aristocracy of education—of simple brain—expressed in innumerable ways—in invention, painting, sculpture, literature. And I meant to say that that aristocracy was as cruel as that of simple arrogant wealth. After all, why should a man be proud of something given him by nature; something that he did not earn, did not produce; something that he could not help. Is it not more reasonable to be proud of wealth, which you hav accumulated, than of brain which nature gave you? And, to carry this idea clear out, why should we be proud of anything? Is there any proper occasion on which to crow? If you succeed, your success crows for you; if you fail, certainly crowing is not in the best of taste. And why should man be proud of brain? Why should he be proud of disposition or of good acts?"

"You speak of the cruelty of the intellect, and yet, of course, you must recognize the right of everyone to select his own companions. Would it be arrogant for the intellectual man to prefer the companionship of people of his own class in preference to commonplace and unintelligent persons?"

"All men should hav the same rights, and one right that every man should hav is to associate with congenial people. There are thousands of good men whose society I do not covet. They may be stupid, or they may be stupid only in the direction in which I am interested, and may be exceedingly intelligent as to matters about which I care nothing. In either case they are not congenial. They hav the right to select congenial company; so hav I. And while distinctions are thus made, they are not cruel; they are not heartless. They are for the good of all concerned, spring naturally from the circumstances, and are consistent with the highest philanthropy. Why we notice these distinctions in the church more than we do in the club is that the church talks one way and acts another; because the church insists that a certain line of conduct is essential to salvation, and that every human being is in danger of eternal pain. If the creed were true, then, in the presence of such an infinit verity, all earthly distinctions should instantly vanish. Every Christian should exert himself for the salvation of the soul of a beggar with the same degree of earnestness that he would show to save a king. The accidents of wealth, education, social position, should be esteemed as naught, and the richest should gladly work side by side with the poorest. The churches will never reach the poor as long as they sell pews; as long as the rich members wear their best clothes on Sunday. As long as the fashions of the drawing-room are taken to the table of the Last Supper, the poor will remain in the highways and hedges. Present fashion is more powerful than faith. So long as the ministers shut up their churches, and allow the poor to go to hell in summer; as long as they leave the devil without a competitor for three months in the year, the churches will not materially impede the march of human progress. People, often unconsciously and without any malice, say something or do something that throws an unexpected light upon a question. The other day, in one of the New York comic papers, there was a picture representing the foremost preachers of the country at the seaside together. It was regarded as a joke that they could enjoy each other's society. These ministers are supposed to be the apostles of the religion of kindness. They tell us to love even our enemies, and yet the idea that they could associate happily together is regarded as a joke! After all, churches are like other institutions—they hav to be managed, and they now rely upon music and upon elocution rather than upon the gospel. They are becoming social affairs. They are giving up the doctrin of eternal punishment, and hav consequently lost their hold. The orthodox churches used to tell us there was to be a fire, and they offered to insure; and as long as the fire was expected the premiums were paid and the policies were issued. Then came the Universalist church, saying that there would be no fire, and yet asking the people to insure. For such a church there is no basis. It undoubtedly did good by its influence upon other churches. So with the Unitarian. That church has no basis for organization; no reason, because no hell is threatened, and heaven is but faintly promised. Just as the churches hav lost their belief in eternal fire, they hav lost their influence, and the reason they hav lost their belief is on account of the diffusion of knowledge. That doctrin is becoming absurd and infamous. Intelligent people are ashamed to broach it. Intelligent people can no longer believe it. It is regarded with horror, and the churches must finally abandon it, and when they do that is the end of the church militant."

"What do you say to the progress of the Roman Catholic church, in view of the fact that they hav not changed their belief, in any particular, in regard to future punishment?"

"Neither Catholicism nor Protestantism will ever win another battle. The last victory of Protestantism was won in Holland. Nations hav not been converted since then. The time has passed to preach with sword and gun, and for that reason Catholicism can win no more victories. That church increases in this country mostly from immigration. Catholicism does not belong to the New World. It is at war with the idea of our government, antagonistic to true republicanism, and is in every sense anti-American. The Catholic church does not control its members. That church prevents no crime. It is not in favor of education. It is not the friend of liberty. In Europe it is now used as a political power, but here it dare not assert itself. There are thousands of good Catholics. As a rule, they probably believe the creed of the church. That church has lost the power to anathematize. It can no longer burn. It must now depend upon other forces—upon persuasion, sophistry, ignorance, fear, and heredity."

"You hav stated your objections to the churches—what would you hav to take their place?"

"Of course, there will always be meetings, occasions when people come together to exchange ideas, to hear what a man has to say upon some question, but the idea of going fifty-two days in a year to hear anybody on the same subject is absurd."

"Would you include a man like Henry Ward Beecher in that statement?"

"Beecher is interesting just in proportion that he is not orthodox, and he is altogether more interesting when talking against his creed. He delivered a sermon the other day in Chicago, in which he takes the ground that Christianity is kindness, and that, consequently, no one could be an Infidel. Everyone believes in kindness, at least theoretically. In that sermon he throws away all creed and comes to the conclusion that Christianity is a life, not an aggregation of intellectual convictions upon certain subjects. The more sermons like that are preached, probably the better. What I intended was the eternal repetition of the old story—that God made the world and a man, and then allowed the devil to tempt him, and then thought of a scheme of salvation, of vicarious atonement, fifteen hundred years afterward; drowned everybody except Noah and his family, and, afterward, when he failed to civilize the Jewish people, came in person and suffered death, and announced the doctrin that all who believed on him would be saved, and those who did not, eternally lost. Now this story, with occasional references to the patriarchs and the New Jerusalem, and the exceeding heat of perdition, and the wonderful joys of paradise, is the average sermon, and this story is told again, again, and again, by the same man, listened to by the same people without any effect except to tire the speaker and the hearer. If all the ministers would take their texts from Shakspere, if they would read every Sunday a selection from some of the great plays, the result would be infinitly better. They would all learn something; the mind would be enlarged, and the sermon would appear short. Nothing has shown more clearly the intellectual barrenness of the pulpit than the baccalaureate sermons lately delivered. The dignified dullness, the solemn stupidity of these addresses has never been excelled. No question was met. The poor candidates for the ministry were given no new weapons. Armed with the theological flint-lock of a century ago, they were ordered to do battle for doctrins older than their weapons. They were told to rely on prayer, to answer all arguments by keeping out of discussions, and to overwhelm the skeptic by ignoring the facts. There was a time when the Protestant clergy were in favor of education; that is to say, education enough to make a Catholic a Protestant, but not enough to make a Protestant a philosopher. The Catholics are also in favor of education enough to make a savage a Catholic, and there they stop. The Christian should never unsettle his belief. If he studies, if he reads, he is in danger. A new idea is a doubt; a doubt is the threshold of Infidelity. The young ministers are warned against inquiry. They are educated like robins; they swallow whatever is thrown in the mouth—worms or shingle-nails, it makes no difference—and they are expected to get their revenge by treating their flock precisely as the professors treated them. The creeds of the churches are being laughed at. Thousands of young men say nothing, because they do not wish to hurt the feelings of mothers and maiden aunts. Thousands of business men say nothing, for fear it may interfere with trade. Politicians keep silent for fear of losing influence. But when you get at the real opinions of the people, a vast majority hav outgrown the doctrins of orthodox Christianity. Some people think these things good for women and children, and use the Lord as an immense policeman to keep order. Every day ministers are uttering a declaration of independence. They are being examined by synods and committees of ministers, and they are beginning everywhere to say that they do not regard this life as a probationary stage; that the doctrin of eternal punishment is too bad; that the Bible is, in many things, foolish, absurd, and infamous; that it must hav been written by men. And the people at large are beginning to find that the ministers hav kept back the facts; hav not told the history of the Bible; hav not given to their congregations the latest advices, and so the feeling is becoming almost general that orthodox Christianity has almost outlived its usefulness. The church has a great deal to contend with. The scientific men are not religious. Geology laughs at Genesis, and astronomy has concluded that Joshua knew but very little of the motions of the heavenly bodies. Statesmen do not approve of the laws of Moses; the intellect of the world has got on the other side. There is something besides preaching on Sunday. The newspaper is the rival of the pulpit. Nearly all the cars are running on that blessed day. Steamers take hundreds of thousands of excursionists. The man who has been at work all the week seeks the sight of the sea, and this has become so universal that the preacher is following his example. The flock has ceased to be afraid of the wolf, and the shepherd deserts the sheep. In a little while all the libraries will be open—all the museums. There will be music in the public parks; the opera, the theater. And what will the churches do then? The cardinal points will be demonstrated to empty pews, unless the church is wise enough to meet the intellectual demands of the present."

"You speak as if the influences working against Christianity to-day will tend to crush it out of existence. Do you think that Christianity is any worse off now than it was during the French Revolution, when the priests were banished from the country and Reason was worshiped; or, in England, a hundred years ago, when Hume, Bolingbroke, and others made their attacks upon it?"

"You must remember that the French Revolution was produced by Catholicism; that it was a reaction; that it went to infinit extremes; that it was a revolution seeking revenge. It is not hard to understand those times, provided you know the history of the Catholic church. The seeds of ths French Revolution were sown by priests and kings. The people had suffered the miseries of slavery for a thousand years, and the French Revolution came because human nature could bear the wrongs no longer. It was something not reasoned—it was felt. Only a few acted from intellectual convictions. The most were stung to madness, and were carried away with the desire to destroy. They wanted to shed blood, to tear down palaces, to cut throats, and in some way avenge the wrongs of all the centuries. Catholicism has never recovered—it never will. The dagger of Voltaire struck the heart; the wound was mortal. Catholicism has staggered from that day to this. It has been losing power every moment. At the death of Voltaire there were twenty millions less Catholics than when he was born. In the French Revolution muscle outran mind—revenge anticipated reason. There was destruction without the genius of construction. They had to use materials that had been rendered worthless by ages of Catholicism. The French Revolution was a failure, because the French people were a failure, and the French people were a failure because Catholicism had made them so. The ministers attack Voltaire without reading him. Probably there are not a dozen orthodox ministers in the world who hav read the works of Voltaire. I know of no one who has. Only a little while ago a minister told me he had read Voltaire. I offered him one hundred dollars to repeat a paragraph, or to giv the title, even, of one of Voltaire's volumes. Most ministers think he was an Atheist. The trouble with the Infidels in England a hundred years ago was that they did not go far enough. It may be that they could not hav gone further and been allowed to liv. Most of them took the ground that there was an infinit, all-wise, beneficent God, creator of the universe, and that this all-wise, beneficent God certainly was too good to be the author of the Bible. They, however, insisted that this good God was the author of Nature, and the theologians completely turned the tables by showing that this God of nature was as bad as the God of the Bible; that this God of nature was in the pestilence and plague business, manufactured earthquakes, overwhelmned towns and cities, and was, of necessity, the author of all pain and agony. In my judgment the Deists were all successfully answered. The God of Nature is certainly as bad as the God of the Old Testament. It is only when we discard the idea of a deity, the idea of cruelty or goodness in nature, that we are able even to bear with patience the ills of life. I feel that I am neither a favorit nor a victim. Nature neither loves nor hates me. I do not believe in the existence of any personal God. I regard the universe as the one fact, as the one existence—that is, as the absolute thing. I am a part of this. I do not say that there is no God; I simply say that I do not believe there is. There may be millions of them. Neither do I say that man is not immortal. Upon that point I I admit that I do not know, and the declarations of all the priests in the world upon that subject giv me no light, and do not even tend to add to my information on the subject, because I know that they know that they don't know. The Infidelity of a hundred years ago knew nothing, comparativly speaking, of geology, nothing of astronomy, nothing of the ideas of Lamarck and Darwin, nothing of evolution, nothing, comparativly speaking, of other religions, nothing of India, that womb of metaphysics; in other words, the Infidels of a hundred years ago knew the creed of orthodox Christianity to be false, but had not the facts to demonstrate it. The Infidels of to-day hav the facts, that is the difference. A hundred years ago it was a guessing prophecy—to-day it is the fact and fulfilment. Everything in nature is working against superstition to-day. Superstition is like a thorn in the flesh, and everything, from dust to stars, is working together to destroy the false. The smallest pebble answers the greatest parson. One blade of grass, rightly understood, destroys the orthordox creed."

"You say the pews will be empty in the future until the church meets the intellectual demands of the present. Are not the ministers of to-day, generally speaking, much more intellectual than those of a hundred years ago, and are not the 'Liberal' views in regard to the inspiration of the Bible, the atonement, future punishment, the fall of man, and the personal divinity of Christ which openly prevail in many churches, an indication that the church is meeting the demands of many people who do not care to be classed as out-and-out disbelievers in Christianity, but who hav advanced views on those and other questions?"

"The views of the church are changing, the clergy of Brooklyn to the contrary notwithstanding. Orthodox religion is a kind of boa-constrictor; anything it can't dodge it will swallow. The church is bound to hav something for sale that somebody wants to buy. According to the pew demand will be the pulpit supply. In old times the pulpit dictated to the pews. Things hav changed. Theology is now run on business principles. The gentleman who pays for the theories insists on having them suit him. Ministers are intellectual gardeners, and they must supply the market with such religious vegetables as the congregations desire. Thousands hav given up belief in the inspiration of the Bible, the divinity of Christ, the atonement idea, and original sin. Millions believe now that this is not a state of probation; that a man, provided he is well off, and has given liberally to the church, or whose wife has been a regular attendant, will, in the next world, hav another chance; that he will be permitted to file a motion for a new trial. Others think that hell is not as warm as it used to be supposed; that, while it is very hot in the middle of the day, the nights are cool; and that, after all, there isn't so much to fear from the future. They regard the old religion as very good for the poor, and they giv them the old ideas on the same principle that they giv them their old clothes. These ideas, out at the elbows, out at the knees, buttons off, somewhat raveled, will, after all, do very well for paupers. There is a great trade of this kind going on now—selling old theological clothes to the colored people in the South. All I hav said applies to all churches. The Catholic church changes every day. It does not change its ceremonies; but the spirit that begot the ceremonies, the spirit that clothed the skeleton of ceremony with the white flesh and blood and throb of life and love, is gone. The spirit that built the cathedrals, the spirit that emptied the wealth of the world into the lap of Rome, has turned in another direction. Of course the churches are all going to endeavor to meet the demands of the hour. They will find new readings for old texts. They will re-punctuate and re-parse the Old Testament. They will find that 'flat' meant 'a little rounding'; that 'six days' meant 'six long times'; that the word 'flood' should hav been translated 'dampness,' 'dew,' or 'threatened rain'; that Daniel in the lion's den was an historical myth; that Samson and his foxes had nothing to do with this world. All these things will be gradually explained and made to harmonize with the facts of modern science. They will not change the words of the creed; they will simply giv new meanings; and the highest criticism to-day is that which confuses and avoids. In other words, the churches will change as the people change. They will keep for sale that which can be sold. Already the old goods are being 'marked down.' If, however, the church should fall, why then it must go. I see no reason, myself, for its existence. It apparently does no good; it devours without producing; it eats without planting, and is a perpetual burden. It teaches nothing of value. It misleads, mystifies, and misrepresents. It threatens without knowledge and promises without power. In my judgment, the quicker it goes the better for all mankind. But if it does not go in name, it must go in fact, because it must change; and therefore it is only a question of time when it ceases to divert from useful channels the blood and muscle of the world."

"You say that in the baccalaureate sermons delivered lately the theological students were told to answer arguments by keeping out of discussion. Is it not the fact that ministers hav, of late years, preached very largely on scientific disbelief, Agnosticism, and Infidelity, so much so as to lead to their being reprimanded by some of their more conservativ brethren?"

"Of course, there are hundreds of thousands of ministers perpetually endeavoring to answer Infidelity. Their answers hav done so much harm that the more conservativ among the clergy hav advised them to stop. Thousands hav answered me, and their answers, for the most part, are like this: Paine was a blackguard, therefore the geology of Genesis is on a scientific basis. We know the doctrin of the atonement is true, because in the French Revolution they worshiped Reason. And we know, too, all about the fall of man and the Garden of Eden, because Voltaire was nearly frightened to death when he came to die. These are the usual arguments, supplemented by a few words concerning myself. And, in my view, they are the best that can be made. Failing to answer a man's argument, the next thing is to attack his character. 'You have no case,' said an attorney to the plaintiff. 'No matter,' said the plaintiff, 'I want you to giv the defendant the devil.'"

"What hav you to say to the Rev. Dr. Baker's statement that he generally buys five or six tickets for your lectures and givs them to young men, who are shocked at the flippant way in which you are said to speak of the Bible?"

"Well, as to that, I have always wondered why I had such immense audiences in Brooklyn and New York. This tends to clear away the mystery. If all the clergy follow the example of Dr. Baker, that accounts for the number seeking admission. Of course, Dr. Baker would not misrepresent a thing like that, and I shall always feel greatly indebted to him, shall hereafter regard him as one of my agents, and take this occasion to return my thanks. He is certainly welcome to all the converts to Christianity made by hearing me. Still, I hardly think it honest in the young men to play a game like that on the doctor."

"You speak of the eternal repetition of the old story of Christianity, and say that the more sermons like the one Mr. Beecher preached lately the better. It is not the fact that ministers, at the present time, do preach very largely on questions of purely moral, social, and humanitarian interest, so much so, indeed, as to provoke criticism on the part of the secular newspaper press?"

"I admit that there is a general tendency in the pulpit to preach about things happening in this world; in other words, that the preachers themselvs are beginning to be touched by 'worldliness.' They find that the New Jerusalem has no particular interest for persons dealing in real estate in this world. And thousands of people are losing interest in Abraham, David, Haggai, and take more interest in gentlemen who hav the cheerful habit of living. They also find that their readers do not wish to be reminded perpetually of death and coffins, and worms, and dust, and grave-stones, and shrouds, and epitaphs, and hearses, biers, and cheerful subjects of that character. That they prefer to hear the minister speak about a topic in which they hav a present interest, and about which something cheerful can be said. In fact, it is a relief to hear about politics, a little about art, something about stocks or the crops, and most ministers find it necessary to advertise that they are going to speak on something that has happened within the last eighteen hundred years, and that, for the time being, Shadrach, Meshech, and Abednego will be left in the furnace. Of course I think that most ministers are reasonably honest. Maybe they don't tell all their doubts, but undoubtedly they are endeavoring to make the world better and most of the church-members think that they are doing the best that can be done. I am not criticising their motivs, but their methods. I am not attacking the character or reputation of ministers, but simply giving my ideas, avoiding anything personal. I do not pretend to be very good, nor very bad—just fair to middling."

"You say that Christians will not read for fear that they will unsettle their beliefs. Father Fransiola (Roman Catholic) said in the interview I had with him: 'If you do not allow man to reason you crush his manhood. Therefore, he has to reason upon the credibility of his faith, and through reason, guided by faith, he discovers the truth, and so satisfies his wants.'"

"Without calling in question the perfect sincerity of Father Fransiola, I thing his statement is exactly the wrong end to. I do not think that reason should be guided by faith; I think that faith should be guided by reason. After all, the highest possible conception of faith would be the science of probabilities, and the probable must not be based on what has not happened, but upon what has; not upon something we know nothing about, but the nature of the things with which we are acquainted. The foundation we must know something about, and whenever we reason, we must hav something as a basis, something secular, something that we think we know. About these facts we reason, sometimes by analogy, and we say thus and so has happened, therefore thus and so may happen. We don't say thus and so may happen, therefore something else has happened. We must reason from the known to the unknown, not from the unknown to the known. This father admits that if you don't allow a man to reason you crush his manhood. At the same time he says faith must govern reason. Who makes the faith? The church. And the church tells the man that he must take the faith, reason or no reason, and that he may afterward reason, taking the faith as a fact. This makes him an intellectual slave and the poor devil mistakes for liberty the right to examin his own chains. These gentlemen endeavor to satisfy their prisoners by insisting that there is nothing beyond the walls."

"You criticise the church for not encouraging the poor to mingle with the rich, and yet you defend the right of a man to choose his own company. Are not these same distinctions made by non-professing Christians in real life, and will there always be 'some greater, richer, wiser than the rest?'"

"I do not blame the church because there are these distinctions based on wealth, intelligence, and culture. What I blame the church for is, pretending to do away with these distinctions. These distinctions in men are inherent; differences in brain, in race, in blood, in education, and they are differences that will eternally exist—that is, as long as the human race exists. Some will be fortunate, some unfortunate, some generous, some stingy, some rich, some poor. What I wish to do away with is the contempt, and scorn, and hatred existing between rich and poor. I want the democracy of kindness—what you might call the republicanism of justice. I do not hav to associate with a man to keep from robbing him. I can giv him his rights without enjoying his company, and he can giv me my rights without inviting me to dinner. Why should not poverty hav rights? And has not honest poverty the right to hold dishonest wealth in contempt, and will it not do it, whether it belongs to the same church or not? We cannot judge men by their wealth, nor by the position they hold in society. I like every kind man; I hate every cruel one. I like the generous, whether they are poor or rich, ignorant or cultivated. I like men that love their families, that are kind to their wives, gentle with their children, no matter whether they are millionaires or mendicants. And to me the blossom of benevolence, of charity, is the fairest flower, no matter whether it blooms by the side of a hovel or bursts from a vine climbing the marble pillar of a palace. I respect no man because he is rich; I hold in contempt no man because he is poor."

"Some of the clergymen say that the spread of Infidelity is greatly exaggerated; that it makes more noise and creates more notice than conservativ Christianity simply on account of its being outside of the accepted line of thought."

"There was a time when an unbeliever, open and pronounced, was a wonder. At that time the church had great power; it could retaliate; it could destroy. The church abandoned the stake only when too many men objected to being burnt. At that time Infidelity was clad not simply in novelty, but often in fire. Of late years the thoughts of men hav been turned, by virtue of modern discoveries, as the result of countless influences, to an investigation of the foundation of orthodox religion. Other religions were put in the crucible of criticism, and nothing was found but dross. At last it occurred to the intelligent to examin our own religion, and this examination has excited great interest and great comment. People want to hear, and they want to hear because they hav already about concluded themselvs that the creeds are founded in error. Thousands come to hear me because they are interested in the question, because they want to hear a man say what they think. They want to hear their own ideas from the lips of another. The tide has turned, and the spirit of investigation, the intelligence, the intellectual courage of the world is on the other side. A real good old-fashioned orthodox minister who believes the Thirty-nine Articles with all his might is regarded to-day as a theological mummy, a kind of corpse acted upon by the galvanic battery of faith, making strange motions, almost like those of life—not quite."

"We need no inspiration, no inspired work. The industrious man knows that the idle has no right to rob him of the product of his labor, and the idle man knows that he has no right to do it. It is not wrong because we find it in the Bible, but I presume it was put in the Bible because it is wrong. Then, you find in the Bible other things upheld that are infamous. Any why? Because the writers of the Bible were barbarians, in many things, and because that book is a mixture of good and evil. I see no trouble in teaching morality without miracle. I see no use of miracle. What can men do with it? Credulity is not a virtue. The credulous are not necessarily charitable. Wonder is not the mother of wisdom. I believe children should be taught to investigate and to reason for themselves, and that there are facts enough to furnish a foundation for all human virtue. We will take two families; in the one, the father and mother are both Christians, and they teach their children the creed; teach them that they are naturally totally depraved; that they can only hope for happiness in a future life by pleading the virtues of another, and that a certain belief is necessary to salvation; that God punishes his children forever. Such a home has a certain atmosphere. Take another family: the father and mother teach their children that they should be kind to each other because kindness produces happiness; that they should be gentle; that they should be just, because justice is the mother of joy. And suppose this father and mother say to their children, if you are happy, it must be as a result of your own actions; if you do wrong, you must suffer the consequences. No Christ can redeem you; no savior can suffer for you. You must suffer the consequences of your own misdeeds. If you plant, you must reap; and you must reap what you plant. And suppose these parents also to say: 'You must find out the conditions of happiness. You must investigate the circumstances by which you are surrounded. You must ascertain the nature and relation of things so that you can act in accordance with known facts, to the end that you may hav health and peace.' In such a family there would be a certain atmosphere, in my judgment, a thousand times better, and purer, and sweeter than in the other. The church generally teaches that rascality pays in this world, but not in the next; that here virtue is a losing game, but the dividends will be large in another world. They tell the people that they must serve God on a credit, but the devil pays cash here. That is not my doctrin. My doctrin is that a thing is right because it pays, in the highest sense. That is the reason it is right. The reason a thing is wrong is because it is the mother of misery. Virtue has its reward here and now. It means health; it means intelligence, contentment, success. Vice means exactly the opposit. Most of us hav more passion than judgment, carry more sail than ballast, and by the tempest of passion we are blown from port, we are wrecked and lost. We cannot be saved by faith, nor by belief. It is a slower process: We must be saved by knowledge, by intelligence—the only lever capable of raising mankind."

Notes.

A METHODIST minister of the New Jersey Conference told a writer on the Tribune that many Methodists were leaving that church and joining the Episcopal. That is jumping from the frying-pan into the fire.

CHARLES WATTS writes that he left England on the 18th, and expected to be with us on or about the 27th. He will proceed to Rochester at once, after which he will go wherever engagements may be made for him. Liberals wishing his able services may address him in care of this office.

PENNSYLVANIA Liberals, says Man, are determined to begin a state League organization. They hold their first state convention at Pittsburgh on September 8th and 9th. Messrs. Wakeman, Palmer, Leland, and other speakers will go there from Rochester, and all Pennsylvania ought to be there to hear them. Pittsburgh is a great center and depot of orthodoxy. There is where the God-in-the-constitution movement took its rise, and its president resides there. The Pittsburgh League has heretofore given them a good shaking up. This convention will continue the good work and possibly finish them.

THE Jews know what religious persecution means. They hav suffered terribly at the hands of infuriate Christians, from the middle ages to the present day. Their afflictions hav made them wise in the matter of government, as appears from the following from their organ in this city, the Hebrew Leader:

"The trouble in dealing with the Mormon question lies altogether in the fact that the government has no authority to establish or to discover any sort of religion, true or false. The authority to break up a false religion involves the authority to destroy a true belief. There are some things which it is better to leave to the attack of moral agencies. When we undertake to regulate men's belief, or their eating and drinking, or their going and coming, by statutes, we are at once involved in a maze of perplexities."

"PROBABLY no city in the United States," says the Central Christian Advocate, "has so little reverence for Sunday as a religious institution as St. Louis. We hav on our statute books about the same 'Sunday laws' that other states and cities hav, but no person appears to pay the least attention to them as a restraint on any one from doing just as he pleases; and the police authorities evidently consider themselvs relieved from all obligation to enforce them. Visitors to the city freely express their astonishment at this condition of things and count it a disgraceful surrender of American traditions of moral culture to the exactions of foreigners and the low class of politicians who bid for the support of the people who do not believe in religion. This is not an unfair statement of the situation."

How sad it is that the churches cannot drive everyone into their musty houses on Sunday! If Christianity could only be made a state religion and the army used to gather in the unbelievers, the pietists of the stamp of the Advocate would be happy!

AVERY MERIWETHER, translator of Voltaire's "Tomb of Fanaticism" which has appeared in these columns, died at Waukesha, Wis., whence he had gone for his health, on the 22d of July, of brain fever. He was a brilliant scholar and estimable man, the leading spirit of Meriwether's Weekly, a free trade journal published at Memphis, Tenn., which is now for sale. Before the issuance of his paper he was a stanch friend of Mr. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER, and remained so up to his death. He did a great deal of good work for Freethought in the South. His loss is deeply regretted by a circle of friends numbering thousands, and by fellow-journalists who had the pleasure to know him. His family are all but prostrated by the suddenness of their deprivation. It is a great loss, indeed, to the South.

MR. W. H. HARRIS, in a recent deliverance before the Concord School of Philosophy, presented the matter discussed in the following words:

"If man were not immortal there would be a break in the chain of beings that reaches from the pure external passiv up to the pure activ, and hence the external elevation of the second person into equality with the first person would be impossible, and, therefore, the first person would not know himself in the second, hence there would be no self-activity at all, and consequently also, no derivativ or finite being. But this is impossible!"

This should be preserved and read occasionally to those persons who are in the habit of saying that a future life cannot be demonstrated.

THE Elmira Sunday Telegram is more or less troubled that a Christian should be found rash enough to venture into debate with the Freethinkers' at Rochester. It is also not a little surprised that the convention should invite an opponent to its platform, a proceeding utterly foreign to theological circles. Mr. Mitchell is likened to Paul preaching to the Athenians, while the effect anticipated is not at all favorable to the church. We quote:

"Indeed, it is probable that many Christians will condemn the action of Rev. Thomas R. Mitchell as imprudent, to say the least; for he will encounter there all the phases of modern Infidelity upon a battle-ground of their selection, where they are strong in numbers and in the moral support which they giv to each other. Many of them hav already passed over the ground that Dr. Mitchell must occupy, and so are able to discount in advance what he will say. Moreover, it is not possible for any man in the space of two hours—which will probably be the extreme limit of the time allowed on this occasion—to meet half of the forms in which modern disbelief utters itself. The old skepticism of Hume, Paine, and Voltaire exists still, and finds such daring disciples as Robert Ingersoll and others. Then there is the skepticism of scientific Materialism, which has grown enormously during the present half century, numbering among its exponents Huxley, Tyndall, and the whole school of recent physiologists, the zoologists and botanists, the geologists, and the evolutionists generally. It is not meant that all these classes of scientists are Athesists, but that they nearly all reject the supernatural, and believe that religion, like all other human things, is a development, and arose like governments, laws, morals, arts and sciences, out of the needs of human nature. To answer this phase of skepticism alone would require Dr. Mitchell to speak for more than two hours. Then there is the skepticism of historic and documentary criticism. The recent studies of the sacred writings hav gone searchingly into the authenticity and genuinness of the scriptures, and the authority of many writings that our fathers venerated has been shaken or overthrown. This branch of skepticism is found inside of the church as much as out of it. The utterances of Heber Newton, Henry Ward Beecher, and prominent ministers of the Richmond Episcopal congress, and the actions and writings of the revisers of the New Testament, hav all shaken the authority of the sacred writings. Whether Dr. Mitchell holds by the "infallible book," as the "word of God" in the old-fashioned way, or adopts the new view of inspiration, he will hav great difficulty in overcoming the doubts of the Freethinkers upon the inspiration of the scriptures in the course of a two-hours' speech. Besides these, there are other forms of skepticism to be met; for example, the utilitarian philosophy and Positivism of Comte, John Stuart Mill, Herbert Spencer, and others. There is another class that Dr. Mitchell will meet which will be hard for him to persuade—the retired clergymen. There are several ministers of the gospel during the past few years who hav found that they could no longer conscientiously hold the doctrins that they held when they began their ministries, and they gave up large salaries and influential positions and abjured their religion. However mistaken we may think such men may be, it is impossible to doubt their sincerity. Some ministers like Henry Ward Beecher may abandon the atonement, the inspiration of the Bible and the doctrin of eternal punishment, and carry their congregations with them. Others may feel those doubts and stifle and conceal them, and go on with their ministries; but there are others—of which Ralph Waldo Emerson was a type—who prefer withdrawing from the ministry and making frank avowal of their change of belief. Several of these ex-ministers will be at the Freethinkers' convention, and one of the most difficult things that Dr. Mitchell will hav to do will be to convince them of their errors and lead them back into the fold. If, however, he should fail in two hours to allay the questionings which, operating on their minds for years, finally induced them to abandon their creeds, their lifework, their incomes and their social positions, he ought not to feel disheartened. The task is, indeed, difficult, and two hours is a short time in which to accomplish it. Yet we hope that Rev. Thomas B. Mitchell now that he has drawn the sword, will throw away the scabbard and go into the fight with zeal and power. It is a grand occasion. He stands first as the champion of faith, and goes to meet doubt and rationalism and Freethought in their stronghold. He must confront Freethinking by showing that Freethought is error, and perhaps sin; and he must do this not standing on his own ground, but upon theirs. It will, of course, be useless to address Freethinkers upon the assumption that thought is not free; for in that case there would be no common ground between speaker and audience. He cannot assume the truth of any of the doctrins that they reject for the same reason. He must take his stand on their ground, and by fair reasoning show them that their position is untenable. Should he succeed in doing this, he will not only accomplish an immense victory for his faith, but will show himself to be the master mind of the century.

If Mr. Mitchell can lead all the reformed ministers back to their sins; if he can prove the inspiration of the scriptures, or show when, by whom, and how they were written; if he can overthrow the doctrin of evolution and substantiate the Bible account of creation; if he can locate heaven and stake out hell; if he can show the justice of punishing the innocent for the guilty; or of damning a man to infinit torture for a finite sin; if he can explain how total depravity is consistent with good actions; or how particular redemption can affect a man who died a few thousand years before or after the particular redeemer lived and died; or how a man who is "effectually called" can be distinguished from the ordinary sinner; or what is really meant by the "perseverance of the saints;" if he can induce St. Peter to rattle his keys so all can know for sure that he has them in his possession; if he can convince the convention that a mere belief is going to change the final destiny of men, sending some to paradise, and others to eternal fire and pain; if he can physiologically explain the annunciation and the resurrection—the beginning and the end of divinity; if he can do all these and clear up a few more thousand Christian mysteries that are inconsistent with common sense and solid facts, he is indeed the "master-mind of the century," and one whom the churches long hav sought, and mourned because they found him not. Fame and fortune await him here on earth, and a whole house up above among the mansions.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE annual meeting of the Iowa Liberal League will be held at Tama City from September 15th to 23d. Mr. C. W. Dibble, the secretary, writes that he expects a large attendance, and urges all who can to attend. His address is Osceola, Iowa.

W. F. JAMIESON has issued a challenge to the Clinton, Iowa, camp-meeting of Spiritualists to debate the question of a future life. He is satisfied that as the beasts of the field dieth, so dieth he, but would like to be convinced to the contrary. He had a debate on the subject two winters ago with Moses Hull, which was very able on both sides, but now Moses refuses to meet him, and he would like another champion to come forward.

THE series of lectures by Messrs. Wakeman and Palmer through New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Michigan, is pretty nearly made up. As far as arranged now they will be at the Freethinkers' Convention in Rochester, N. Y., from August 29th to September 2d. After that they will lecture in Buffalo, N. Y., on the evening of September 5th; at Dunkirk, Sept. 6th; at Erie, Pa., Sept. 7th; at the Pennsylvania State Convention held in Pittsburgh, Sept. 8th and 9th; at Salem, Ohio, Sept. 10th; at Alliance, Ohio, Sept. 11th; at Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 12th; at Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 13th; at Adrian, Mich., Sept., 14th; at Jackson, Mich., Sept. 15th; at Kalamazoo, Mich., Sept. 16th; at Dowagiac, Mich., Sept. 17th. After that there are three evenings open for engagement, the 18th, 19th, and 20th, before the congress at Milwaukee and on the road there. Messrs. Palmer and Wakeman will lecture the same evening at these places, dividing the evening between them. There will be no better opportunity for our Liberal friends in the above-named places and vicinity to hear these leading thinkers and speakers. They hav something to say and will say it well. Leland will be along as business agent, and perhaps they may hear a spurt from him

Beginning the Fall Campaign in Newark.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The Liberal League has been taking a vacation since June. The council has had a meeting once in two weeks. At the meeting July 31st, it was decided to re-open Sept. 2d. At our last meeting, Aug. 14th, we decided to hav Mr. John E. Remsburg lecture for us Sunday, Aug. 26th, at 3 o'clock P.M., at our hall, 177 Halsey street, corner of Market street. Mr. Remsburg could not be with us on Sept. 2d, therefore we hav a special meeting for him. Personally we do not know him, but we feel assured of a good lecture, from the reports of him in THE TRUTH SEEKER. We hope to make our League felt during the coming season. Hoping that the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER outside of Newark, as well as those in the city, will be on hand to hear Mr. Remsburg, I remain, Yours truly, GUS.

Newark, N. J., Aug. 19, 1883.

The Kansas Camp-Meeting.

This promises to be the largest and best Freethought meeting ever held west of the Missouri. Opening Aug. 30th, and closing Sept. 2d, it comes in a most delightful season of the Kansas year, just as the first breath of autumn now and then fans the cheek of the forest wanderer, and the fair grounds at Valley Falls will be crowded with pleasure and truth seekers.

Mrs. H. S. Lake has chosen as two of her lectures on this occasion, "What Shall We Do to be Saved?" and "Individualism." Ex-Governor Charles Robinson will discourse upon "The Philosophy of Prohibition," and Prof. W. F. Peck's subjects are "Evolution vs. Creation," and "What is Truth?" The other speakers hav not yet sent us the titles of their lectures. Among these speakers are C. W. Stewart, LL.B., of Indiana; Judge Hagaman, of the Kansas Blade, Prof. D. C. Seymour, Prof. Welch, O. Olney, Esq., and other Kansas speakers.

There is an abundance of good water on the grounds, and tenters will find fuel, straw, feed for their teams, provisions, etc., for sale at reasonable rates. Bring your tents and come prepared to stay until the close of the meeting. Three good hotels in town. Visitors arriving by train will find free transportation from depot to Fair Grounds. Trains over the A. T. and S. F. arrive from the North at 11:20 A.M., and 11:35 P.M.; from the South, at 3:46 A.M., and 4:20 P.M. Over the Kansas Central trains come in at 11:15 A.M., from the West, and at 1:03 P.M. from the East.

Prof. W. F. Peck will hav charge of the musical department. That we shall hav first-class music this announcement is a sufficient assurance.

Three sessions daily. Conference hour at morning and afternoon sessions. A free platform upon which the Freethinker and Christian can meet and amicably discuss the questions upon which they hold divergent views.

Remember the time—Aug. 30th and 31st, and Sept. 1st and 2d. Come every one, and help organize a state League. By order of the committee, E. C. Walker, secretary, Valley Falls; John Ernst. chairman, Arrington; Mrs. S. Reicherter, treasurer, Valley Falls.

Elmina Disappointed.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I supposed that at least a few of the copies of those Physiologists I advertised for in THE TRUTH SEEKER would be sent me, but thus far not a single one has come. I want them very much. Will friends who can spare them please send them at once?

Anxiously, ELMINA.

[The numbers of the Physiologist which Mrs. Slenker advertised for, it will be remembered, were as follows: June and July (double number), 1878; April and May (double number), 1879; November, 1878; August and September, 1879; June, 1879; January, February, March, and April, 1881. To those who will send the numbers called for Mrs. Slenker will send in return the Matrimonial Review, copy for copy; or will send the Alpha or Herald of Industry.]

Communications.

The Epistle to the Colossians.

This epistle is probably genuin. Timothy is coupled with Paul in the writing of it.

We do not know who founded the church at Colosse, in Phrygia, but we learn from Acts that Paul traveled twice through that country, and it is probable that he visited Colosse, though he does not say so categorically. Dr. Davidson thinks the church at Colosse was planted by Epaphras, a nativ of the place, who is twice named in the epistle, and that he is not identical with Epaphroditus, one of the pastors at Philippi.

Paul speaks of Epaphras as "our beloved fellow-servant who is for you a faithful minister of the messiah" (i, 7). Again he says, "I wish you to know what a struggle (Syr., hagona; Gr., agona) I hav for you, and for them of Laodicea, and for the others who hav not seen my face in the flesh" (ii, 1). Evidently the record of Acts is very meager, taking little or no notice of Paul's experience in Phrygia.

The following passage deserves especial notice in its bearing upon the manner of the death of the messiah:

"And by his mandates he blotted out the handwriting of our debts, . . . and affixed it to his cross" (ii, 14).

King James's version reads, "Nailing it to his cross;" and the word nailing is retained in the revision. The Greek word is proselosas, from proseloo, which Donegan's lexicon renders "to nail to," and which Screvelius defines clavis affigio, "to fasten with nails." But we dispute the fastening with nails for the following cogent reasons:

1. The Syriac version has no nails; the word is "affixed," and this agrees with the Latin translation of Martin Trost, 1621, which has "affixit ipsum cruci suæ."

2. The Vulgate has "affigens illud cruci," which agrees with the Syriac—no nails in either.

3. Nowhere else in Paul's epistles is there a word which even in the Greek version implies nailing.

4. Neither the word nailing nor nail occurs elsewhere in the New Testament, except in the following passage:

"Unless I see in his hands the places of the nails, and put my finger into them, and extend my hand to his side, I will not believe" (John xx, 25).

5. There is nothing in the description of the crucifixion given by the evangelists which implies the use of nails.

6. "Neither the Jews nor any other people," says Voltaire, "ever thought of fixing persons to the cross by nails; there is not a single instance of it; it is a fiction of some painter, built upon a notion completely erroneous" (Art. Executioner, in Phil. Dic.).

The following passages in the epistle to the Colossians are peculiarly Pauline:

"Let no one therefore disquiet you about food and drink, or about the distinctions of festivals, and new moons and Sabbaths, which were shadows of the things then future, but the body is the messiah. And let no one wish, by abasing the mind, to bring you under bonds, that ye subject yourselvs to the worship of angels" (ii, 16–18).

Another passage we transcribe for the purpose of showing the variation in the Syriac and Greek codices:

Syriac.	Greek.
"Where there is neither Jew nor Aramean, neither circumcision nor uncircumcision, neither Greek nor barbarian, neither bond nor free, but the messiah is all and in all" (iii, 11).	"Where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all" (Ibid).

The Greek text is here undoubtedly corrupt, and King James's translators hav falsely rendered kai "nor" twice. The revision has "and" both times, and the third "nor" is omitted.

In another passage the Greek codices omit three words, which we italicize from the Syriac:

"And let your speech at all times be with grace as it were seasoned with salt" (iv, 6).

Paul speaks of himself as in bonds with Aristarchus, a fellow-captiv (iv, 10). Aristarchus, according to Acts, was a citizen of Thessalonica; was mobbed at Ephesus; went with Paul from Asia to Macedonia, and embarked with him on his voyage to Rome (Acts xix, 29; xx, 4; xxvii, 2). The traditions of the Greek church represent Aristarchus as bishop of Apamea in Phrygia, and allege that he was beheaded with Paul at Rome. The Roman Martyrologies make him bishop of Thessalonica (McCl. and Str. Cy.).

The bearer of the epistle appears to be Tychicus, a brother minister, who is accompanied by Onesimus, a faithful brother of Colosse, elsewhere spoken of by Paul as "my son, whom I hav begotten in my bonds" (Philem. 10).

Salutations are sent from Aristarchus, Paul's fellow-captiv; from Marcus "an uncle's [Gr. sister's] son to Barnabas" (i. e., John Mark); and from Jesus (Syr. Yshua) who is called Justus. "These," says Paul, "are of the circumcision, and they only hav aided me in the kingdom of God" (iv, 11). What a humiliating confession for the octogenarian apostle!

Further salutations are sent from Epaphras, a Colossian minister, from Luke, the beloved physician, and from Demas. Epaphras is highly commended for his zeal not only for the Colossians, but for the Laodiceans and Hierapolitans.

Paul wishes the Colossians to salute the Laodiceans, and the church in the house of Nymphas. Nymphas is presumably a male in most codices, but some read "her house."

Paul wants this epistle read to the church of the Laodiceans (in the house of Nympha?) and wishes the Colossians to read his Laodicean epistle. He charges Arcippus to be attentiv to the ministry, and says in conclusion, "Remember my bonds."

PAUL IN MACEDONIA AND GREECE AGAIN.

Our apostle has now departed from Ephesus to visit Macedonia a second time, after an interval of from five to seven years, according to the data of Acts.

"And when he had traveled over those regions, and had comforted them with many discourses, he proceeded to the country of Greece. And he was there three months. And the Jews formed a plot against him, when he was about to go to Syria; and he contemplated returning to Macedonia" (xx, 2–4).

The Greek text is here a little clearer, which makes Paul return to Syria through Macedonia in order to escape the plot of the Jews.

"And there departed with him, as far as Asia, Sopater of the city of Berea, and Aristarchus and Secundus, who were of Thessalonica, and Gaius, who was of the city of Derbe, and Timothy of Lystra, and of Asia, Tychicus and Trophimus."

The oldest Greek codices hav "Sopater [the son] of Pyrrhus," and the Vulgate has "Sosipater of Pyrrhus." The Peshito alone has "of Lystra" after Timothy; otherwise it would seem uncertain whether he resided at Lystra or Derbe (xvi, 1).

"These" (seven brethren, says the writer of Acts, who resumes the "we" which he dropped at xvii, 1) "proceeded on before us and waited for us at Troas" (xx, 5).

What cities in Greece and Macedonia Paul visited this second time we are not told, except Philippi.

Secundus is mentioned nowhere else in the New Testament. In a former article we suggested a possible identity of Tyrannus, the school-teacher at Ephesus, with Tyrannus, one of the body guard of Herod the Great. And now we note the further singular fact that Josephus couples Jucundus with Tyrannus three times (Ant. xvi, 10 § 3, 6; War i, 26 § 3). These two esteemed officers of Herod were put to death about 7 B.C. If one of them was a friend of Paul at Ephesus, may not the other hav become a disciple at the same place or at Thessalonica? How easy to write Secundus for Jucundus!

PAUL AT TROAS.

The narrativ proceeds:

"And we departed from Philippi, a city of the Macedonians, after the days of unleavened bread, and proceeded by water, and arrived at Troas in five days, and remained there seven days. And on the first day of the week, when we assembled to break the eucharist, Paul discoursed with them, because he was to depart the next day; and he continued his discourse till midnight" (xx, 6, 7).

How happens it that the Greek codices hav artos, "bread," while the Syriac has eukristia, a word apparently borrowed from the Greek eucharistia, compounded of eu, "well," and charis, "favor." Eucharistia, translated "thankfulness," occurs in the Greek version of Acts once only, to wit, in the speech of Tertulius against Paul before Felix (xxiv, 4), but the Syriac omits it. The same word translated thanksgiving, "giving of thanks," and "thanks" is of frequent occurrence in Paul's epistles; and the verb eucharisteo, "to giv thanks," is still more frequent. But "breaking the eucharist" seems to be first mentioned in the Peshito.

"And there were many lamps burning in the chamber where we were assembled. And a young man named Eutychus was sitting in a window and listening. And while Paul prolonged his discourse he sunk into a deep sleep, and in his sleep he fell from the third loft, and was taken up as dead" (8, 9).

The omission of "as" in the Greek makes the story contradictory as the next sentence shows.

"And Paul went down and bent over him and embraced him, and said: Be not agitated, for his soul is in him" (10).

The Syriac version is consistent; the fall was not fatal; nor did Paul restore the young man to life, as the Greek version would hav us infer.

"And when he [Paul] had gone up he broke bread and tasted it, and discoursed until the morning dawned. And then he departed to go by land. And they brought the young man alive, and rejoiced over him greatly" (11, 12).

Heretofore Paul's preaching has been on Sabbath days, but sometimes daily. Now it is on the first day of the week, but no significance need be attached to this, because he was to depart the next day.

There is nothing in this passage to support a change of Sabbath to the first day of the week. The Jewish day began at sunset, and the writer probably did not intend to say that Paul began preaching on the evening before the first day. But if he entertained the idea that Paul was preaching and breaking bread on a Christian Sabbath, he betrayed himself. For if the meeting was on the evening of the first day it was, according to Jewish reckoning, not on the first day, and being prolonged till morning dawned it ran far into the second day according to the Roman reckoning. But, on the other hand, if the meeting began on the evening before the first day, that is, at the beginning of the day according to Jewish reckoning, then St. Paul traveled on Sunday.

Some Puzzles of Chronology.

It is almost impossible to rid ourselvs of influences of education. Hearing and reading Bible stories all through childhood, as though they were truths, it requires the use of calm reason to convince us they are false. And we all hav such dim, mysterious ideas of antiquity, that, if a story is put back far enough, we are ready to swallow it. Tell a man that God talked to another man last year from a burning bush, out in Colorado, and he will laugh in your face, though you and a hundred others assure him you were eye-witnesses. Put the story away back fourteen hundred years "before Christ," and read it to him out of some so-called holy book, and really the thing does not seem so absurd. Unless mankind change very much, just think what advantages a thousand years will giv to the Mormon story! I do not think any man who has passed fifty years, and can think back half century, realizing what a little time it is, can hav quite so much respect for antiquity. Fifty years! Thirty-six times longer is not so much! Certainly, a citizen of the United States has seen greater changes than has an inhabitant of any other part of the world in that time. And yet nothing supernatural has occurred. No gods hav talked with men, nor begotten sons by women. Yet going back only a few spaces more of fifty years each and we get into the time when the gods had much to do with men and women. A very short time indeed to the man who knows what fifty years are from personal experience. Short as that time of fifty years multiplied by thirth-six in reality is, you hav only to multiply the product by two, and you are back into the days soon after the flood. If we would get rid of our dim, indefinit ideas of past time, we might get clearer ideas of history. Many of us can remember back fifty years, and how short the time! Yet go back only twelve times longer in thought and you are at a period when England, and nearly all northern Europe, was a savage wilderness. That time includes all there is of modern history worth recording.

A proper realization of the shortness of a century will prevent our being troubled by the chronology of the Bible. Yet the majority of writers are governed more or less by its influence. How exceedingly absurd it is in view of some facts is readly shown. The veriest Bible idolater admits that a very high degree of civilization existed among nations around the Mediterranean Sea as early as a thousand years B.C. or 1,300 years after the flood. Now the flood is a new creation, on a more limited scale than the first one, as to all animals save man. It is also admitted by all that such countries as China and India were, not long after, densely inhabited. Herodotus, writing of matters before his time, says, "India and Thrace are the most densely populated regions of the globe." Alexander the Great invaded India and found it densely peopled by a highly civilized race. Not long after his day we hav descriptions of some of its cities, and of the occupations and manners of its people, that show us the condition of civilization was as high as any ever attained by Europeans, at least prior to our present railway and telegraph era. So abundant was its literature that, as Sir Wm. Jones, says, "Wherever we direct our attention to Hindoo literature the notion of infinity presents itself, and the longest life would not suffice for the perusal of near five hundred thousand stanzas in the Puranas, with a million more in the other works before mentioned." It was written in a language, says the same great authority, "of a wonderful structure; more perfect than the Greek, more copious than the Latin, and more exquisitly refined than either." Moreover, this literature contains almost every science and art known to man. And this language was, in all probability, a dead language 800 B.C. Here let me quote, for the benefit of readers who hav not access to the book, an extract from a poem of Dionysius, who flourished about A.D. 140. It is descriptiv of India and is very interesting on one or two points:

"To the East a lovely country wide extends,
India whose borders the wide ocean bounds;
On this the sun, new rising from the main,
Smiles pleased and sheds his early orient beams.
The inhabitants are swart, and in their locks
Betray the tint of the dark hyacinth.
Various their functions; some the rock explore,
And from the mine extract the latent gold;
Some labor at the wool with cunning skill
And manufacture linen; others shape
And polish ivory with the nicest care;
Many retire to rivers and plunge
To seek the beryl or glittering diamond;
Some the jasper find, the topaz too, or
Last of all the lovely amethyst.
The rich soil, washed by a thousand rivers,
Pours its wealth without control.
Its nativs first essayed the deep
And wafted merchandise to coasts unknown.
Those who first digested the starry choir,
Their motions marked and called them by their names.'

What we do not know of antiquity is a vast deal. We are most profoundly ignorant of what they knew.

Out of perhaps a hundred writers who flourished at one time—one year—perhaps we hav a fragmentary work which tells what he knew. No doubt in his day, as in Columbus's day, there were thousands of sailors who were familiar with coasts not set down in geography of the time. No doubt it was familiar knowledge among Greeks of Homer's day, that the swart Hindoos first essayed the deep and "first named the starry choir." Undoubtedly there was a vast international commerce between India, Arabia, and China in those days, and it is probable that an average Grecian would hav been as much surprised at it as were those world rangers, the Venetians and English and Dutch, in 1250 to learn the reports of Marco Polo. For these latter, as well as the Greeks, imagined they had all the civilization extant. When in or about 1720 the Englishman Bell entered China, via Siberia and Lake Baikal, he was amazed beyond expression at the high state of enlightenment in China. He had never seen anything in Europe to equal it; nor, since the days of Rome's empire, had there been. It has always seemed to me that somewhere from a central source civilization flowed East as well as West, and that Chinese civilization is later than that of Southern Europe, because there are no ruins in China comparable with those of Rome and Greece. Yet in India we find remains whose vastness and grandeur strike us speechless and make us feel as several spectators hav expressed themselvs, "These works were never done by mortal men." It is lamentable that for some mysterious reason those researches that began as early as 1750 in Hindostan and to-day are prosecuted in Egypt, hav ceased comparativly. Nothing of importance has been discovered since 1800. Thousands visit the pyramids, nobody the rock-cut temples of Ellora, each one of which, if correctly described, cost more labor than the largest pyramid and causes more wonder than do they all. The spirit of inquiry that had been for years growing around these wonders was suddenly stamped out by priestcraft, which, fearing they might disclose some fact hostil to the deluge story, gave out, "These things are no wonders after all—nothing but ornamental holes in the ground, made by the Mohammedans!" Yet a careful view of the work begins to giv ground for the opinion that had the Moslem invaders employed all the men, money, and art in their power on these works the last year of the last century of their rule would hav found them unfinished. For many centuries workmen hav been engaged on the temple of Milan and St. Peter's Cathedral, and yet they are unfinished. These rock-cut subterrenes, of hardest granit, where access is very limited, where one small lot of workmen must labor for years to make room for a few others, and yet every square inch of whose vast walls is carved in the most admirable style with ornamentation surpassing conception—what shall be said? 'Tis useless to attempt description. Let me recall once more, however, the attention to one fact.

At the door of one of these temples is a stairway carved out of the same granit leading to a reservoir for water. Evidently the steps led originally to the reservoir, but the semi-annual falling of a small stream of water from above upon this rock-cut reservoir has so worn it away that over sixty steps are now required to complete the stairway.

A small stream falling during the rainy season about one hundred feet upon "clay porphyry so hard no ordinary steel can work it." How long will it take to wear one foot away? The Christians and Moslems say the work was done about one thousand years ago. The Brahmans declare the work was completed just seven thousand eight hundred and ninety-four years ago. This declaration was made in the year A.D. 1794, which makes it almost eight thousand years ago. To use their own language, "just three thousand years before the completion of the Dwarpa Yoag the work was done. This is now the four thousand eight hundred and ninety-fourth year of this Yoag, or the Kal Yoag, making seven thousand eight hundred and ninety-four years ago!" As we cannot easily calculate how long it must hav taken to finish this excavation of three thousand seven hundred and twenty-nine feet in length, hight averaging about twenty-five feet, breadth from sixty to one hundred and twenty feet, with the innumerable stairways, verandahs, pillars, domes, reliefs, walls, ceilings, statues, etc., on which work, with rarest exceptions, every trace is carved with utmost delicacy and finish, from the tiara on the head of Indra to the daintiest feather on the peafowls of his consort, Indrance, it is best to leave the further consideration of the subject to readers.

When, therefore, we measure these works and the remains of others, and consider how short a century in reality is, we see the absurdity of allowing ourselvs to be imposed upon by this everlasting obstruction to learning, namely, biblical chronology.

There is, however, one little point, among many others, that may serve to further illustrate the mistakes of Moses, or Bishop Usher, and which neither Bishop Colenso nor Hon. Robert Ingersoll has noted so far as I hav observed. On all these Hindoo ruins somewhere we find the elephant's gigantic form. Even amid the ruins of dead languages that must hav been spoken as early as that "confusion and fright of Babel," made by our Lord Jehovah to prevent our heaven-defying forefathers from climbing up to him and taking the new Jerusalem by a kind of aerial storming, we find a word descriptiv of his highness, the elephant. Even the eminently pious, Bible-fearing Rollin tells us Semiramis invaded India with an innumerable multitude of men, and "as the strength of the Indians consisted chiefly in their great number of elephants, this artful queen had a multitude of camels accoutered in the form of elephants, in hope of deceiving the enemy." He admits that he "is puzzled at the idea of such multitudes of men, with chariots, scythes, gold and silver, so soon after the deluge," and hopes the Greek historians were mistaken.

But what puzzles me most are the elephants—how in two hundred and fifty years after Father Noah took them out of the ark, one pair, we find these animals scattered over the earth from Mount Ararat all over Africa and Asia. As the elephant carries its young almost two years during gestation, the race will not increase more rapidly than by doubling the number every forty years. Bearing one at a time, and not conceiving till it arrives at a great age as compared with other animals, even were this original pair so lucky as to produce a female several times in succession at first, it is not probable that by two hundred and fifty years after the flood over one hundred and twenty-eight elephants were in existence. The idea, as Father Rollin admits, is a puzzler as to men, and scythes, and chariots, but when it comes to elephants it is utterly incredible, unless we permit, as other matters, the word "antiquity" to mystify us into admitting some miraculous power of procreating and conceiving on the part of that old elephantine pair, that after all were only elephants, no matter when they lived.

HOLT.

Oregon, Mo.

Goods for Religious Purposes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Inclosed I forward you the following printed price-list, issued by a New York firm dealing in merchandise used by Christians in their devotional services:

J. TURGIS & COMPANY.
41 Barclay St., and 46 Park Place.

CHEAP INCENSE, 25 CENTS PER POUND, OR 25 POUNDS FOR $5.
French Prepared Incense, 50 cts. per. lb.
Jerusalem Incense, 75 cts. per lb.

Large Pictures, Rosaries, Medals, etc., and the finest assortment of Large Religious Pictures in the United States. Framing in all its branches.

BEST WAX CANDLES.

Plain white, 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, or 8 to lb. - -	Per lb.	$0 50
Richly ornamented, 2, 4, or 6 to lb. - -	"	0 80
Wax tapers, - - - - - - - - - -	"	0 70
Gas lighters, - - - - - - - - -	"	0 50
Plain Paschal candles, 2 to 10 lbs each, - -	"	0 50
Ornamented Paschal candles, 3 to 12 lbs, each,	"	0 80

Wax candles 14 ounces to the pound.

BEST STEARIC ACID OR HYDRAULIC PRESSED CANDLES.

4 to lb. of 16 oz., per lb., $0 22 | 6 to lb. of 14 oz., per lb., $ 22
By taking 30 lb, box, 4 to a lb., - - per box, $6 25
" " 40 " 6 to a lb., - " 8 40

N. B.—When ordering candles please state price, so no error will be made.

THIS CANDLE IS THE BEST MADE AND ALWAYS GIVS SATISFACTION.

FRENCH CHARCOAL FOR CENSERS,
50 cts. per box of 50 tablets.

You will observe that the compound called "cheap incense" is quoted very cheap indeed, viz., "25 cents per pound, or 25 lbs. for $5.00." Good "French prepared incense" is affixed at the tempting price of 50 cents per pound, and genuin "Jerusalem incense," undoubtedly the best in the market, can be had in any quantity at the reasonable rate of 75 cents per pound.

The price is also given for plain white and for richly ornamental candles; plain and ornamental Paschal candles, wax candles, French charcoal for censers, lace pictures, religious pictures, rosaries, medals, and other pious bric-a-brac.

The people who buy and use these goods for religious observances are not pagans living at the commencement of the Christian era, nor in the "Dark Ages" of Christian domination, but they exist now, in the broad sunlight and boasted intelligence of the nineteenth century. They are surrounded with the blessings of liberty and civilization. Education and knowledge are within their reach; but the worship to which they fondly cling is an inheritance from former centuries of barbarism, and a legacy from the credulity of ages that hav passed.

Holy incense, holy water, holy candles, holy oil, and holy worship, formerly offered to Cybele, the mother of the gods, to Jupiter, Apollo, Bacchus, and all the Olympian host, are now offered to Mary, the mother of God, to the holy evangelists, the blessed martyrs, and the long calendar of Christian saints. The immaculate virgin, the mother of Christ, now usurps the vacant pedestal of Cybele, the deposed pagan goddess. Instead of the statue of Zeus with his lightning and his thunder, or Mercury with his wand and winged cap and sandals, or Neptune with his trident, or Hercules with his club and lion skin, we behold in the sacred niche behind the altar the figure of St. Peter with his keys, St. Phillip with his cross, St. Thomas with his square, St. Thaddeus with his battle-ax, St. Matthew with his tablets, St. James with his staff, or St. John, the apostle, whom Jesus loved. The names of the gods hav indeed been changed, but the worship is essentially pagan in its origin, in its practice, and in its results.

On those fortunate mortals who hav "climbed the hights, and left all superstitions far below," devolve the duty and the honor of enlightening these devout but misguided beings, and teaching to them in the spirit of charity, kindness, and forbearance the sublime truth that religious duties consist not in burning incense to appease the supposed anger of imaginary beings, but "in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy."

PETER ECKLER.

A Strange Case all Around.

From the New York Sun.

We hav more facts regarding the case of the Rev. Mr. Park, the Congregational minister, against whose installation as pastor of a New Haven church an ecclesiastical council lately reported. They show anew how loath such councils are to acknowledge the existence of religious skepticism among their clergy, how disinclined they are to denounce such Infidelity with boldness and without reservation.

Mr. Park, a graduate of the great divinity school of the Congregationalists at Andover, was called to a church at New Haven, and all the preparations for his installation as pastor had been made. The congregation had even assembled in the meeting-house to take part in the ceremonies. But after the people had waited for a long time, they were dismissed with the announcement that a council, just adjourned, had refused to install the new pastor.

The decision reached by the council and the reasons for it were thus recorded in the minutes of the body:

"Voted, that, while recognizing the ability and spirit of the candidate, yet, in view of the fact that he holds views in regard to infant baptism not acceptable in our churches, and on other doctrins, we do not see our way clear to proceed to the installation."

Of course the inference from this is that the chief trouble with Mr. Park was his unsoundness regarding infant baptism.

The Rev. Dr. Dennen, of New Haven, in a letter to the Christian Union, shows, however, that the council sought to deceive the public by the wording of their resolution. "The main question," says Dr. Dennen, "was not as to his views on baptism. Had this been all, he would hav been installed." That is what we said at the time. His doctrinal offenses must hav been glaring to insure his rejection by a Congregational council of this day, and in New England. "It was his theological opinions that led the council to the results they reached," says Dr. Dennen, who thus summarizes the views of Mr. Park:

"On the question of inspiration he is a Unitarian rationalist, holding the views of Arnold: That only of revelation is true which is verifiable by human consciousness and spiritual elevation and insight. The inspiration of Paul differed only in degree from that of any other man. The prophets were not inspired, only 'elevated in character by a righteous life.'

"On the question of probation he is a Universalist, and holds to the final restoration of all men. In answer to the direct question: 'Do you believe in any form of final restoration of all men?' he replied, 'I do; this is the trend of my mind; it is my hope.' When the creed of the church was read, and he was asked, 'Do you accept this statement in regard to future penalty, and will you preach it?' his reply was, 'No, not in those terms; I should state it differently.' The question of baptism, and the fact of a church divided in his call, had, no doubt, their influence. But, with these alone, his installation would hav become an accomplished fact."

It is plain, therefore, that the council equivocated in the resolution in which they pretended to giv the reasons for their rejection of Mr. Park. Why did they do that? Were they afraid to acknowledge that opinions so rationalistic could be held by a Congregational minister in good standing, and did they dread to express themselvs decidedly with regard to them?

Whatever their excuse, it could not be creditable to them. If they were honest men of sincere conviction, they would hav met the issue squarely. But they evaded it. More than that, they gave a false reason for their action. They declared in their resolution what was not true, what was deceitful, and what was intended to convey a false impression. They pretended to reject Mr. Park for a reason which they would not hav counted against him. They hid the real grounds.

The fact is, Mr. Park is not an orthodox Christian at all. He is a rationalist; and if his opinions are sound, Christian theology has lost its utility. Yet Mr. Park's views so far suit the New Haven church which called him that, in spite of the council, they hav asked him to preach to them as a "stated supply," without installation.

AMONG religious news, we find the following in the Fall River Advance:

"A church lawn party in Amsterdam, N. Y., ended in a row and free fight. An ice-cream sylph got mixed up in the crowd and had all her false hair torn off, and two deacons crawled under the church and got wedged in so that they had to be greased with lard before they could be pulled out."

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT, - - - Proprietor.

CONDUCTED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - - AUGUST 25, 1883.

The Truth Seeker Company.

TO THE SUBSCRIBERS AND FRIENDS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: You will, of course, notice the change that has been made at the head of our paper, and I wish to tell you in a few words why it has been made. My husband in his will provided for it in these words:

"My wish is that my wife may place THE TRUTH SEEKER, a paper owned and published by me and the property connected therewith, including the plates of books and pamphlets published by myself, in the hands and control of trustees of an incorporated company, so that the same may be a permanent publication and business."

Now that his estate has been practically settled, it seemed the proper time to carry out this expressed wish of Mr. Bennett. The wisdom of his wish, too, has become more apparent to me of late than ever before, for the constant attention required from me to the business is a burden beyond my health and strength, especially at this season of the year. I hav, therefore, had a company organized consisting of the friends whom I knew he had selected for the purpose of strengthening my hands and THE TRUTH SEEKER. These friends are his executors with me, Messrs. Daniel E. Ryan and T. B. Wakeman, my faithful brother, Mr. Loren J. Wicks, and the faithful editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Mr. Eugene M. Macdonald, and the no less faithful, but not so well known, office worker, Mr. John V. Wingate. These gentlemen, five in all, with me form the company. The property remains mine, and the general control and management also. Mr. Macdonald will continue as the editor, but Mr. Wingate and my brother will relieve him and me of much business and office work that should not be imposed upon the editor of the paper, nor upon me personally. Thus THE TRUTH SEEKER, as its founder intended, is placed upon a firm and permanent basis, and is not to depend upon any one life, nor any accident of ownership, for its continuance and success. Let no one suppose that this company is or will be a monopoly or money-making concern for the benefit of the trustees. Messrs. Macdonald and Wingate, who will giv their steady daily labor to the paper, hav only moderate salaries. The other trustees receive nothing and hav only a nominal interest to enable them to be my advisers as my husband intended. The proceeds of the business shall go, as they always hav, to build up the business and to improve THE TRUTH SEEKER, and when my health no longer permits me to use the ownership of the business for that purpose, I shall find others who can.

Now, my friends, I must rely upon you, as my husband was wont to do, to sustain me in my efforts to build up a great Liberal newspaper and make it his best monument. Since my husband's death many debts hav had to be paid. The price of the subscription, when reduced from $3 to $2.50, was put too low for a sixteen-page paper. The result is that I must ask you to rally around me and THE TRUTH SEEKER, as my friends above named hav done, with renewed spirit and efforts to extend its circulation. That it shall be a better paper than ever before I think I can safely promis. That it shall be the most widely circulated Liberal paper in the world a little effort on the part of each of you will soon make a certain fact. I shall be pleased to hear from you, and ask you to address all letters to me as usual, or to THE TRUTH SEEKER Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York. Sincerely yours, MARY W. BENNETT, Acting Executor and President of THE TRUTH SEEKER Company.

What Kind of Education is This!

Above all things else, educational journals should be accurate in their statements. Without accuracy they are valueless. The editors hav a great responsibility upon them. Their utterances are regarded by students as a final settlement of a mooted question. When they use their positions to teach falsehood they deserve the severest condemnation. If their mistakes arise from ignorance, they are culpable and incapable instructors; if, from a desire to uphold a favorit system of theology, they teach untruth, there is no adequate condemnation short of displacement.

But here is the Western Normal Advocate, "a monthly journal of education," devoted to the "free and unbiased discussion of all subjects tending to the advancement of the teacher and student," published at Bushnell, Ill., of which two persons named respectivly C. L. Gregory and C. F. Holcomb, are the responsible conductors, in which we find the following statement concerning the seven bibles of the world:

"The seven bibles of the world are the Koran of the Mohammedans, the Tri Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zend Avesta, and the scriptures of the Christians.

"The Koran is the most recent of these, dating about the seventh century after Christ. It is a compound of quotations from the Old and New Testaments, the Talmud, and the gospel of St. Barnabas.

"The Eddas of the Scandinavians were first published in the fourteenth century. The Pitikes of the Buddhists contain sublime morals, and pure aspirations, and their author lived and died in the sixth century before Christ. There is nothing of excellence in these sacred books not found in the Bible.

"The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, the word 'kings' meaning web of cloth. They contain the best sayings of the best sages on the duties of life. These sayings cannot be traced farther back than eleven hundred years before Christ.

"The three Vedas are the most ancient books of the Hindoos; and they are believed to date not beyond eleven hundred years before Christ. The Zend Avesta of the Persians is the greatest of the sacred books next to our Bible. Zoroaster, whose sayings it contains, was born in the twelfth century before Christ. Moses lived and wrote the Pentateuch fifteen hundred years before Christ; therefore that portion of our Bible is at least three hundred years older than the most ancient of other sacred writings."

It is to the italicized statement in the last paragraph that we call particular attention and take particular exception. There are minor errors in the previous paragraphs, but as many of the ancient bibles are in as deep obscurity as to their origin and authorship as are most of the books of the Christian scriptures, we pass them by, and glance at the last statement—outrageous as coming from an educational journal.

The connection of Moses with the Pentateuch is pure assumption. No scholar of note to-day claims that he penned it. On the contrary, his authorship has been most clearly disproved. We will look at the statement that Moses wrote the Pentateuch.

First, we ask for proof. The books themselvs do not claim Moses as their author. But they do contain positiv proof that he did not write them, for they refer to events that occurred after his death—for instance, of the city of Dan and the kings of Judah. Besides the impossibility of his writing of post-mortem events, it is equally impossible that he could hav penned the account of the creation which occurred many hundreds of years before his birth. Plenary inspiration is an idea as dead as Moses himself, and that is the only way out of this dilemma. Inspiration is not claimed by the book itself, and certainly no one has any authority to claim it for it.

To Ezra is given by all the biblical scholars the credit for compiling the Pentateuch. Who wrote it nobody knows. The probable manner of its existence is thus stated by Prof. Samuel Davidson, one of the best biblical scholars of the age:

"Men of prophetic gifts wrote in the name of distinguished prophets, and put their productions with those of the latter, or adapted and wrote them over after their own fashion. The fiftieth and fifty-first chapters of Jeremiah show such overwriting. To Zechariah's authentic oracles were attached chapters ix and xiv, themselvs made up of two parts (ix–xi; xii–xiv) belonging to different times and authors prior to the destruction of the Jewish state by the Babylonians.

"The soferim, as the successors of the prophets, must hav corrected and revised the sacred books to some extent. We need not hesitate to allow that they sometimes arranged parts and even added matter of their own. In the time of the canon's entire preparation they and the other priests, with writers and scholars generally, redacted the national literature, excluding or sanctioning such portions of it as they saw fit.

"From Ezra's treatment of the oldest law books we infer that he did not look upon them as inviolate. Venerable they were, and so far sacred; but neither perfect nor complete for all time. . . . The redaction to which he submitted them shows no superstitious reverence. With him canonical and holy were not identical. Nor does the idea of an immediate divine authority appear to hav dominated the mind of Nehemiah and his scholars in the selection of books.

"The scribes who followed Ezra, 'Seeing what he did, would naturally follow his example, and would not scruple, if it seemed best, to revise the text in substance as well as form. They did not refrain from changing what had been written, or inserting fresh matter.'

"The differences between them (the Palestinian and Alexandrian versions of the prophets and the Hagiographa), often remarkable, prove that those who had most to do with the books did not guard them as they would hav done had they thought them infallibly inspired.

In addition to the Pentateuch the following books, according to Davidson, Westbrook, Westcott, and others equally learned, are without known authorship: Joshua, Judges, Ruth, First and Second Kings, First and Second Chronicles, First and Second Samuel, Esther, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, Lamentations, Ezekiel, Daniel, Obadiah, Jonah, Habakkuk, Haggai, making, with the five books of Pentateuch, twenty-six from thirty-nine books. "The time was, of course," says Keeler, "when the Pentateuch was thought to hav been written by Moses; but no theologian whose opinion is entitled for a moment to any respect, now says so." Bishop Colenso, recently deceased, wrote a work disproving the claims made for Moses, and he remained to the day of his death a bishop in the church. Further proof can be had by consulting Dr. Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," or McClintock and Strong's "Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature." These are orthodox works, and it is inexcusable that the editors of an educational journal are not familiar with them, but instead publish falsehood where it is easy to know the truth. By consulting the standard works upon this subject it is easy to learn, says Keeler, that most of the books of the Old Testament were not written by the authors assigned to them; that when their authenticity is assumed by tradition, generally nothing is known of the personal history of the author; that most of them are not original works, but are, on the other hand, compilations from pre-existing records; that no one knows who wrote these pre-existing records, or when they were written; no one knows who compiled them into books, or when; in short, no one knows anything about their origin, except it can be very easily shown that they were not composed by Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, and the authors usually named.

Ezra is first known in 458 B.C. Previous to him and his scribes and clerks the Bible was in chaos. It practically did not exist. Whether he wrote the books or found them is of no account. There were more in existence than he got hold of, and there are some in the Bible certainly not so old as his time. Isaiah was not known till two hundred and fifty years after that worthy had ceased to breathe—if he ever did breathe; the wonderful prophecies attributed to Daniel were entirely unknown to that gentleman, being composed about 165 B.C., four hundred years after he was dust and ashes, and consequently long after the events had transpired.

It is expected that the clergy will suppress these facts, but when an educational journal does so in the interests of Christianity it loses all claim to respect, and should be shown up wherever found. The proneness to conceal the truth on the part of the orthodox is one of the main existing reasons for the hostility of intelligent men toward the church. Reason despises the faith that must be kept alive by secrecy and misleading statements.

"ANTICHRIST" this week makes a strong point against the nailing of Jesus to the cross; he shows that the only scriptural support for it is a passage in the fourth gospel; and he quotes the learned Voltaire, who says that nails were never used, and that nailing to the cross is "a fiction of some painter." Perhaps Voltaire, when he wrote that, forgot about the "print of the nails" in John. xx, 25, or he might not hav dared to deny the nailing.

"The Limitations of Freethinking."

An article in the last North American Review under the above caption is noticeable, not so much for the name attached as for the character of the magazine in which Mr. D. S. Phelan thus airs his essentially Catholic opinions. It seems almost impossible that anyone in these times can deliberately assert that a man has not always a right to his opinions. But Mr. Phelan does this boldly, and worse. He says that a man "has a right to his opinion if his opinion is right."

But who is right? There is the point. Opinions cannot be settled by majorities, neither by any "concensus of the competent;" for in all times the majority has been wrong, and the competent of one age hav been the fools of the next. Human tribunals constantly err, and the human race has committed horrible atrocities in its barbaric childhood. The Catholic church arrogates to herself all knowledge in religion, all power in ethics. Her Procrustean bed is the couch upon which all morality, all thought, all works, must be measured. Yet upon an appeal to facts the Catholic church is found to be monstrously in error. With her the length to which Freethinking may go is measured by a grave.

But the Protestant church, which, too, pompously announces itself as the ethical yardstick, is, in the opinion of millions, no nearer right. She and her God punish thought. With her a man's morality is nothing if his ideas are wrong. The injustice of this is recognized by all.

Clearly neither of these two pretended teachers can be right. Our right to this opinion Mr. Phelan himself cannot deny. The prime object of civilization is happiness. To insure this the individual must be left the greatest amount of freedom compatible with the happiness and security of the community in which he livs. Thought does not injure. Ideas do not spill blood. Reflection never starved a family. The advocacy of even Communism does no harm. The idea that a wrong thought is as pernicious as a wrong act is possible only where the standard of right and wrong is inflexible—made by some superhuman power. As at present there is no such standard—as right and wrong are relativ terms, with meanings changing with the passing years—one set of men cannot pass upon the opinions of another and condemn them as immoral. There can be no possible limitation to Freethinking.

Man, says Mr. Phelan, "could not be a rational being without a free will." To him, evidently, rationality is a bundle of thought put into man by some divine creator. Free will is a side-dish on the table of being. It is the theologic idea, we know, but as false as all theology. Man is a rational being, but his rationality is the proceeds of the aggregated experience of all the race, not a gift from God. The early savage was not even a rational animal. He learned by degrees, and every additional particle of knowledge was an addition to his reason. Free will never did and never can exist. Man is governed by his environment. The soil on which he livs, the climate, society, friends, all hav their influence upon him. Could a man elect to be or do only what he likes, how long would we see laborers and employers, rich and poor, wise and ignorant? In matters of ethics, of thought, no more than in acts, is man free. No man can believe without evidence, and no man can resist the influence of evidence upon his mind. One man can lead a horse to water, but a hundred cannot make him drink. So it is with belief. Evidence must be presented which acts upon the mind independent of the will, and the thundering tones of thousands of priests fall still before the evidence of one small fact. Man cannot will to know, neither can he will not to know.

Some of Mr. Phelan's statements of Freethought philosophy and polity, as he understands them, are worth reproducing as curiosities. They evidence a state of mental chaos, of wild, madman-like opposition, truly pitiable in one who aims to set a limitation to thought. He raves:

"As all property is robbery to the Communist, even so is all principle usurpation to the Freethinker. It is not strange, therefore, that we find Communism and Freethought indigenous to the same social soil and thriving under similar atmospheric conditions. The intellectual barbarian sees chains in social customs and tyranny in social order. The vast ramifications of human interests claim no consideration from him: although the grandest and best institutions of society should be buried in the fall, he boldly lays his ax to the root of the tree, nor recks the cost. What to him the truth, so patent to other people, that principles underlie morality, and morality is the basis of society? What cares he for the abstract proposition, that without morality even civil government is impossible? He answers you with the hoarse shout: 'Fiat libertas ; ruat imperium;" and he straightway lays his intellectual dynamite at the foot of the social arch. He swoops down like a literary Attila on the fair provinces of conservativ knowledge, his feverish activity stimulated by feelings akin to those ascribed to Blucher when that burly soldier first entered London. A book by a Freethinker is a storehouse of booty, collected during a lifetime of literary outlawry.

"The literary savage, too, loves to inflict pain. The holiest relations of life, the fondest conceptions of duty, the dearest creations of philanthropic fancy, are the objects of his malignant destructivness. In common with all savages, he requires a vast territory to roam over. A Freethinker dabbles in theology, philosophy, political economy, history, physics—in any and every study that can be reached by a bullet of blatant negation. He is a slave to a master. No savage Indian ever obeyed his chief with half the alacrity that literary braves show in following their chosen leaders. They are the veriest slaves of certain literary dictators. The Tecumseh of the theological tribe is Voltaire. The Sitting Bull of the political tribe is Paine. The Logan of the scientific tribe is electiv, the beads and feathers being generally awarded to the latest God-killer."

As a matter of fact, the Freethinker is the only person whose basic principles of life are not a usurpation of the rights of others. Catholicism, Protestantism, Mohammedanism, all religions built on similar supernaturalism, usurp the right of man to believe as he finds the evidence convincing, and enforce their usurpations by penalties here and hereafter. They are the true intellectual barbarians, not the Freethinkers, whose intellects hav been trained and disciplined and civilized. Communism and Freethought are growths from the same root of doubt, and restlessness, and dissatisfaction with a condition of civilization that givs one man all meat and another all bone, one heaven and another hell, but they hav nothing else in common. As another matter of fact, very few Communists are Freethinkers, and very few Freethinkers are Communists. The only ones who might use the motto he has put into the mouths of all Infidels, Fiat libertas; ruat imperium (freely translated, Let liberty liv though governments fall) are the Arnarchists, and as a still further matter of fact, they are not a Freethinking class.

The Freethinker insists that principles and not divine persons underlie morality; and that morality and not religion is the basis of a true government. It is because the church does not in any way uphold morality that he asks for a permanent injunction restraining her from interfering with civil government. "A book by a Freethinker is a storehouse of booty, collected during a life-time of literary outlawry," is a well-rounded enough sentence, but it lacks one element necessary to carry conviction—namely, truth.

The concluding paragraph is bombastic nonsense, worth as a rhetorical lie what Mr. Phelan got for it—about $3.47—but as a statement of a position entirely erroneous. If, as he says in a previous paragraph, "thoughts hav their ethics as well as deeds," to what moral hell must he be assigned as punishment for his illegal and immoral thought and act! Happily for him there is no limbo for liars, or his freedom of thought and action would be materially curtailed. It is to the Freethinkers of the past he is indebted for his liberty to abuse those of the present. Let him ponder upon this.

Poison and Its Antidote.

The following is the amendment to our Constitution proposed by the "National Reform Association" of religious bigots:

To the Honorable, the members of the Senate and House of Representativs of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, citizens of the United States, petition your honorable bodies for such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as shall suitably express our national acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source of all authority in civil government; of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations, and of his revealed will as of supreme authority; and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages of the government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

In supporting this amendment Dr. Sproull said:

The question demanding consideration is, should those parts of the Constitution be so amended as to secure the appointment of religious men to office, and giv the Christian church the benefit of national support? We take the affirmativ. . . . We do not wish an amendment to come as a kind of patch work—a piece of new cloth on an old garment. We want the whole made new; the government put squarely under Christ, and none but Christ's friends to be suffered to meddle with its administration.

The Rev. George Hill, D.D., gave utterance to this truly Christian sentiment:

If any cannot conscientiously liv under a Christian government, they can conscientiously go elsewhere.

As an antidote to this treacherous sentiment we may quote the words of some eminent men who hav given it their attention. The first is Washington:

The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion.—Treaty with Tripoli.

Franklin took this view:

When a religion is good, I conceive it will support itself; and when it does not suppport itself, and God does not take care to support it, so that its professors are obliged to call for help of the civil power, 'tis a sign, I apprehend, of its being a bad one.—Letter to Dr. Price.

Jefferson's opinion of Christianity was expressed thus:

I hav recently been examining all the known superstitions of the world, and do not find in our particular superstition (Christianity) one redeeming feature. They are all alike, founded upon fables and mythologies.—Letter to Dr. Woods.

And Paine said:

All national institutions of churches. . . . appear to me no other than human inventions set up to terrify and enslave mankind and monopolize power and profit.—Age of Reason.

Even Grant, attendant of a Methodist church, in his well-known Des Moines speech, advised the people to "keep the church and state forever apart."

Let the American people keep these words of wisdom ever in their minds, and resist to the uttermost the efforts of the Christian reactionists to drag the nation backward.

The Monument Fund.

Since our last acknowledgment we hav received the following sums:

Previously acknowledged,	$1,091 81	Euphemia M. Beveridge,	50
S. F. Shepard,	1 00	Andrew Beveridge,	50
T. V. Nichols,	1 00	Isabella Bennett Beveridge,	50
J. K. Garrett,	1 30	H. S. Borrette,	50
E. B. Shafer,	1 00	Sol. Benson,	1 00
Wm. R. VanCampen,	1 00	Judge L. R. Hawkins,	1 00
D. D. Ryers,	1 00	Judge L. M. Brown,	1 00
D. Bruce,	1 00	Judge L. H. Hawkins,	1 00
Wm. S. Logan,	50	S. H. Ellingwood,	1 00
James Beveride,	50	John Mollinger,	5 00
J. A. Broadbeck,	1 00
		Total,	$1,113 11

Joe Bradley's Religion.

The Christian at Work controverts the statement of the "Man of Sin" that all but one of the judges of the United States Supreme Court are Infidels. It alleges that five of the said Judges, namely, Waite, Field, Bradley, Gray, and Blatchford, are professed Christians, and does not believe that one of the nine is an Infidel. Church membership nowadays is poor prima facie evidence of a man's belief in Christianity. See what a correspondent writes to the New York Sun about one of the above named members of the church:

ALIUNDE JOE'S RELIGION.

To the Editor of the Sun, Sir: I read in your paper of Tuesday an article giving the religious status of the judges of the United States Supreme Court. I presume the article is correct—at least it should be, coming from the source it does. Aliunde Joe is put down as an elder in the Reformed church. Great Scot! you ought to hear him cuss once when in a passion. The individual who carted a load of apples up a steep hill wasn't a marker to Joe. I like to see every man placed where he belongs. Historian.

Newarlc, N. J., August 14.

With such a stunning confirmation of the original statement, the editor of the Truth Seeker will see that he was too previous in saying that it was now in order for "Antichrist" to speak. Antic.

We fail to see the previousness of our remarks. We agree with "Antichrist" that belonging to a church is no criterion of a man's real religious belief, as late developments show the churches to be honeycombed with Freethought, neither is a man's profanity any proof that superstition has no hold on him. We once worked on a country journal whose editor was most proficient in cursing, yet subscribed to the Thirty-nine Articles of the Episcopal church and really believed that his soul's salvation hinged on his belief. We do not wish to convey a doubt of the correctness of "Antichrist's" statement; only, more light would be acceptable.

Amen and Amen!

J. P. Mendum in The Boston Investigator.

I hope when the Congress meets it will confine itself to practical business—stick to the Nine Demands of Liberalism—and act in unity for the promotion of those principles. Let all other outside objects be set aside, and work for the building up of our cause, and leave "Freelove," "Free Religion," and "New Calendars" to be nursed by those who see any good in them, but which like old superstitions and a future state of existence can never be explained, but only result in separation and disintegration.

The Truth Seeker will be sent three months to trial subscribers for 50 cents.

The Romish Church and Its Priesthood.

The Roman Catholic Church claims to be the mother church. In many ways we think it is. It is a church whose clergy, ever since the time of Constantine (its real founder) hav set the example for almost every sin. There is no crime in the catalog of crimes but what they hav at one time or another committed. Roman Catholic bishops' and priests' vices hav reached even to heaven. We hav but to refer to the crimes of some of the Catholic clergy in the past, in order that we may acquaint ourselvs of the extent of the crimes that many of the same class of men are guilty of at the present day.

In the Catholic Breviary are to be found these words: "Qui dicit ecclisiam Catholicam Romanam non esse infallibilum, anathema sit." "Whoever says that the Roman Catholic church is not infallible, let him be accursed." That is to-day the belief of all Catholics. But still a large number of Roman priests, men who are the very body and soul of the Catholic church, are now, and hav ever been, reveling in crime and debauchery. Charlemagne was obliged to issue the following edict:

"We hav been informed, to our great horror, that many monks are addicted to debauchery and all sorts of vile abominations, even to unnatural sins. We forbid all such practices in the most solemn manner, and hereby make known that all monks who indulge in the gratification of such lusts will be punished by us so severely that no Christian will ever care to commit such sins again. We command our monks to cease swarming about the country, and we forbid our nuns to practice fornication and intoxication. We shall not allow them any longer to be ——s, thieves, murderers and so forth, to spend their time in debauchery, and singing improper songs. Priests are herewith forbidden to haunt the taverns and market places for the purpose of seducing mothers and daughters, etc."

We are told the Catholic church never changes. If it does not, why should its priesthood ever change? If its clergy hav ever been guilty of heinous crimes in the past, why should they not be guilty of the same kind of crime at the present time? The Catholic church established the Inquisition, that damnable court of human torture. Let us now hear what a well-known writer has to say concerning a prison established near the city of Madrid, by the Romish Inquisition, and what was found within its walls, and how it came to be destroyed. He says:

"In 1809, Col. Lehmanowsky was attached to the part of Napoleon's army which was stationed in Madrid. And while in that city, said Col. Lehmanowsky, I used to speak freely among the people what I thought of the priests and Jesuits, and of the Inquisition. It had been decreed by the Emperor Napoleon that the Inquisition and monasteries should be suppressed, but the decree, he said, like some of the laws enacted in this country, was not executed. Months had passed away, and the prisons of the Inquisition had not been opened. One night, about ten or eleven o'clock, as he was walking one of the streets of Madrid, two armed men sprang upon him from an alley, and made a furious attack. He instantly drew his sword, put himself in a posture of defense, and while struggling with them, he saw at a distance, the lights of the patrols—French soldiers mounted, who carried lanterns, and who rode through the streets of the city at all hours of the night, to preserve order. He called to them in French, and, as they hastened to his assistance, the assailants took to their heels and escaped, not however before he saw by their dress that they belonged to the guards of the Inquisition.

"He went immediately to Marshal Soult, then governor of Madrid, told him what had taken place, and reminded him of the decree to suppress this institution. Marshal Soult replied that he might go and destroy it. Col. Lehmanowsky told him that his regiment (the 9th of the Polish Lancers) was not sufficient for such a service, but if he would giv them two additional regiments—the 117th, and another, which he named, he would undertake the work. The 117th regiment was under the command of Col. De Lile, who is now, like Col. Lehmanowsky, a minister of the gospel, and pastor of an evangelical church in Marseilles, France. The troops required were granted, and I proceeded (said Col. Lehmanowsky) to the Inquisition, which was situated about five miles from the city. It was surrounded with a wall of great strength, and defended by a company of soldiers. When we arrived at the walls, I addressed one of the sentinels, and summoned the holy fathers to surrender to the imperial army, and open the gates of the Inquisition. The sentinel, who was standing on the wall, appeared to enter into conversation for a moment with some one within, at the close of which he presented his musket, and shot one of my men. This was the signal of attack, and I ordered my troops to fire upon those who appeared on the walls.

It was soon obvious that it was an unequal warfare. The walls of the Inquisition were covered with the soldiers of the holy office; there was also a breast-work upon the wall, behind which they partially exposed themselvs as they discharged their muskets. Our troops were in the open plain, and exposed to a destructiv fire. We had no cannon, nor could we scale the walls, and the gates successfully resisted all attempts at forcing them. I could not retire and send for cannon to break through the walls without giving them time to lay a train for blowing us up. I saw it was necessary to change the mode of attack, and directed some trees to be cut down and trimmed, to be used as battering-rams. Two of these were taken up by detachments of men, as numerous as could work to advantage, and brought to bear upon the walls with all the power which they could exert, while the troops kept up a fire to protect them from the fire poured upon them from the walls. Presently the walls began to tremble, a breach was made, and the imperial troops rushed into the Inquisition. Here we met with an incident which nothing but jesuitical effrontery is equal to. The inquisitor-general, followed by the father confessors in their priestly robes, all came out of their rooms, as we were making our way into the interior of the Inquisition, and with long faces, and their arms crossed over their breasts, their fingers resting on their shoulders, as though they had been deaf to all the noise of the attack and defense, and had just learned what was going on, they addressed themselvs in the language of rebuke to their own soldiers, saying, "Why do you fight our friends, the French?"

"Their intention, no doubt, was to make us think that this defense was wholly unauthorized by them, hoping, if they could make us believe that they were friendly, they should hav a better opportunity, in the confusion of the moment, to escape. Their artifice was too shallow, and did not succeed. I caused them to be placed under guard, and all the soldiers of the Inquisition to be secured as prisoners. We then proceeded to examin all the rooms of the stately edifice. We passed through room after room; found all perfectly in order, richly furnished, with altars, and crucifixes, and wax candles in abundance, but could discover no evidences of iniquity being practiced there, nothing of those peculiar features which we expected to find in an Inquisition. We found splendid paintings, and a rich and extensiv library. Here was beauty and splendor, and the most perfect order on which my eye had ever rested. The architecture, the proportions, were perfect. The ceiling and floors were scoured and highly polished. The marble floors were arranged with a strict regard to order. There was everything to please the eye and gratify a cultivated taste; but where were those horrid instruments of torture of which we had been told, and where those dungeons in which human beings were said to be buried alive? We searched in vain. The holy father assured us that they had been belied; that we had seen all; and I was prepared to giv up the search, convinced that this inquisition was different from others of which I had heard.

"But Col. De Lile was not so ready as myself to giv up the search, and said to me, 'Colonel, you are commander to-day, and as you say, so it must be; but if you will be advised by me, let this marble floor be examined. Let water be brought and poured upon it, and we will watch and see if there is any place through which it passes more freely than others.' I replied to him, 'Do as you please, colonel,' and ordered water to be brought accordingly. The slabs of marble were large and beautifully polished. When the water had been poured over the floor, much to the dissatisfaction of the inquisitors, a careful examination was made of every seam in the floor, to see if the water passed through. Presently Col. De Lile exclaimed that he had found it. By the side of one of these marble slabs the water passed through fast, as though there was an opening beneath. All hands were now at work for further discovery; the officers with their swords and the soldiers with their bayonets, seeking to clear out the seam and pry up the slab; others with the butts of their muskets striking the slab with all their might to break it, while the priests remonstrated against our desecrating their holy and beautiful house. While thus engaged, a soldier, who was striking with the butt of his musket, struck a spring, and the marble slab flew up. Then the faces of the inquisitors grew pale as Belshazzar when the handwriting appeared on the wall; they trembled all over. Beneath the marble slab, now partly up, there was a staircase. I stepped to the altar, and took from the candle-stick one of the candles four feet in length, which was burning, that I might explore the room below. As I was doing this, I was arrested by one of the inquisitors, who laid his hand gently on my arm, and with a very demure and holy look said, 'My son, you must not take those lights with your bloody hands; they are holy.' 'Well,' I said, 'I will take a holy thing to shed light on iniquity; I will bear the responsibility!' I took the candle, and proceeded down the staircase. As we reached the foot of the stairs we entered a large square room, which was called the Hall of Judgment. In the center of it was a large block, and a chain fastened to it. On this they had been accustomed to place the accused, chained to his seat. On one side of the room was one elevated seat called the Throne of Judgment. This the inquisitor-general occupied, and on either side were seats less elevated, for the holy fathers when engaged in the solemn business of the holy Inquisition.

"From this room we proceeded to the right, and obtained access to small cells, extending the entire length of the edifice; and here such sights were presented as we hoped never to see again.

"These cells were places of solitary confinement, where the wretched objects of Inquisitorial hate were confined year after year, till death released them from their sufferings, and there their bodies were suffered to remain until they were entirely decayed, and the rooms had become fit for others to occupy. To prevent this being offensiv to those who occupied the Inquisition, there were flues or tubes extending to the open air, sufficiently capacious to carry off the odor. In these cells we found the remains of some who had paid the debt of nature; some of them had been dead apparently but a short time, while of others nothing remained but their bones, still chained to the floor of their dungeon.

"In other cells we found living sufferers of both sexes and of every age, from three score years and ten down to fourteen or fifteen years—all naked as when born into the world! and all in chains! Here were old men and aged women, who had been shut up for many years. Here, too, were the middle aged, and the young man and the maiden of fourteen years old. The soldiers immediately went to work to release these captivs from their chains, and took from their knapsacks their overcoats and other clothing, which they gave to cover their nakedness. They were exceedingly anxious to bring them out to the light of day, but Col. Lehmanowsky, aware of the danger, had food given them, and then brought them gradually to the light, as they were able to bear it.

"We then proceeded, said Col. Lehmanowsky, to explore another room on the left. Here we found the instruments of torture, of every kind which the ingenuity of men or devils could invent. Col. Lehmanowsky here described four of these horrid instruments. The first was a machine by which the victim was confined, and then, beginning with the fingers, every joint in the hands, arms, and body, was broken or drawn one after the other until the victim died. The second was a box, in which the head and neck of the victim were so closely confined by a screw that he could not move in any way. Over the box was a vessel, from which one drop of water a second fell upon the head of the victim—every successiv drop falling upon precisely the same place on the head, suspended the circulation in a few moments, and put the sufferer in the most excruciating agony. The third was an infernal machine, laid horizontally, to which the victim was bound; the machine then being placed between two beams, in which were scores of knives so fixed that, by turning the machine with a crank, the flesh of the sufferer was torn from his limbs all in small pieces. The fourth surpassed the others in fiendish ingenuity. Its exterior was a beautiful woman, or large doll, richly dressed, with arms extended, ready to embrace its victim. Around her feet a semi-circle was drawn. The victim was passed over this fatal mark, touched a spring, which caused the diabolical engine to open; its arms clasped him, and a thousand knives cut him into as many pieces in the deadly embrace.

"Col. Lehmanowsky said that the sight of these engins of infernal cruelty kindled the rage of the soldiers to fury. They declared that every inquisitor and soldier of the inquisition should be put to the torture. Their rage was ungovernable. Col. Lehmanowsky did not oppose them; they might hav turned their arms against him if he had attempted to arrest their work. They began with the holy fathers. The first they put to death in the machine for breaking joints. The torture of the inquisitor put to death by the dropping of water on his head was most excruciating. The poor man cried out in agony to be taken from the fatal machine. The inquisitor-general was brought before the infernal machine called 'The Virgin.' He begs to be excused. 'No,' said they, 'you caused others to kiss her, and now you must do it.' They interlocked their bayonets so as to form large forks, and with these pushed him over the deadly circle. The beautiful image instantly prepared for the embrace, clasped him in its arms, and he was cut into innumerable pieces. Col. L. said that he witnessed the torture of four of them—his heart sickened at the awful scene—and he left the soldiers to wreak their vengeance on the last guilty inmate of that prison house of hell!

"In the mean time it was reported through Madrid that the prisons of the Inquisition were broken open, and multitudes hastened to the fatal spot. And oh, what a meeting was there! It was like a resurrection! About a hundred who had been buried for many years were now restored to life. There were fathers who found their long-lost daughters; wives were restored to their husbands, sisters to their brothers, and parents to their children; and there were some who could recognize no friend among the multitude. The scene was such as no tongue could describe.

"When the multitude had retired, Col. Lehmanowsky caused the library, paintings, furniture, etc., to be removed, and having sent to the city for a wagon-load of powder, he deposited a large quantity in the vaults beneath the building, and placed a slow match in connection with it. All had withdrawn at a distance, and in a few moments there was a most joyful sight to thousands. The walls and turrets of the massiv structure rose majestically toward the heavens, impelled by the tremendous explosion, and fell back to the earth an immense heap of ruins. The Inquisition was no more."—Phil. Chris. Obs.

Now, we would ask, who can read the above account of that miserable prison, and the sufferings of those who were incarcerated in it, without a shudder? The same church which built that prison still exists, and millions of its members are to-day inhabitants of what we are pleased to call free America. We would again inquire, Are our liberties in no danger in the face of such a foe? The pope, claiming as he does to be God's vicar on earth, is now planning a movement, which is intended to comprise the whole world, and he desires Rome to be the sole representativ and center of it. His powers hav been circumvented at times, and hav received several severe shocks. His forces hav been many times broken, and his legions of Jesuits, Friars, Dominicans, Franciscans, and Capuchins often scattered, but he has always armed himself afresh, and now this new world, this "land of the free and home of the brave," appears to him as the safest ground on which to reunite his forces in order that he may again renew the conflict for power. This he well knows can never be done unless he throws some fire-brand of discord among our people, which even now he is vigorously trying to do, and nothing but strong resistance by every true American will ever keep him from effecting it.

AMERICAN JEW.

Clerical Insolence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: No one who reads much of religious controversy can hav failed to notice the habitual insolence of the clergy in their treatment of those who do not agree with them. These "meekest of men" are so accustomed to the use of insolent language that they seem not to be aware that they use language wholly unbecoming their stilted pretensions to candor and exact truthfulness. Witness the following: "God Out and Man In" is the title of a late book, by Rev. W. H. Platt, D.D., LL.D., rector of St. Paul's church, Rochester, N. Y. In this work he attempts what, by a loose use of language, is called "a reply" to Mr. Ingersoll. In his introduction he quotes from the latter as follows:

"Whoever attacks the prevailing religious opinions of his time must, in turn, expect to be attacked. We havn't yet outgrown the barbarism that argument can be answered by personal abuse."

To which he replies:

"Personal abuse is unnecessary where so many successful replies are at hand. Conceding to Mr. Ingersoll the same right of opinion that I claim for myself, I can only regret that he sees fit to exercise it so recklessly and to insult so rudely. He asserts where he thinks he reasons, and he defies from temper where he is least fortified by facts. He claims a victory when he has only provoked a laugh. Where he intends offense I intend none. Let each be fully persuaded in his own mind, and each assume for himself the responsibility of his own opinions. To the sacredness of truth each stands or falls. He seems to seek applause rather than truth, and to denounce rather than to disprove. If Christianity cannot stand the test of a fair investigation, let it go down; but we cannot test feelings and persuasions as we test matter. The more light we hav the more we shall believe Christianity, or, if that were possible, something better; but in the inquiry let there be candor and courtesy."

The italics are mine.

Leaving out the cheekiness of the unwarranted assumption contained in the doctor's first sentence, that "so many successful replies are at hand," and the lofty promis implied in that sentence, that he will therefore be—well, tolerant of Mr. Ingersoll's existence and altogether decent and not a blackguard, and his still loftier scorn implied in the next sentence of his concession to Mr. Ingersoll of the same right of opinion which he claims for himself, is it not amusing to see how he can charge him with recklessness of insult and rudeness? Here we hav the reverend doctor of divinity and doctor of laws, rector, etc., etc., while avoiding personal abuse, mind you, charging Mr. Ingersoll with speaking recklessly—meaning regardless of truth, in fact, lying—and insulting somebody or something not specified.

One might, considering that he had once been some sort of a lawyer before he became a rector, suppose that the reverend gentleman had learned better manners than to assail an antagonist with such language while he was endeavoring to advocate a cause which could be far better commended by decency in the language and deportment of its defenders and followers. He should hav remained at the bar, where, if he had business ability, his bad manners would hav fitted him for successful advocacy of law causes.

"Let there be candor and courtesy;" and yet he says of Mr. Ingersoll, "He seems to seek applause rather than truth, and to denounce rather than to disprove." What an arraignment is this against a man whom he probably never saw, and whom, the foregoing paragraph shows, he would rather denounce than to treat as a gentleman.

But "evil associations corrupt good manners." This was shown by Judge Black in his so-called reply to Mr. Ingersoll last year. If I remember rightly, he used language expressiv of scorn toward the colonel, and for his article in the North American Review, no less than thirty-five times, and he thereby illustrated the debasing influence of modern theology upon the speech of even so great a man as Jeremiah Black.

LEVI NORTH.

Kewanee, Ill., August 8, 1883.

New Books.

IS RELIGION THE CAUSE OF CIVILIZATION? The Claims of its Advocates Refuted. By C. W. Stewart, LL.B. Blade Publishing House, Concordia, Kan. Price 15 cents.

Mr. Stewart is a logical and forceful speaker and writer, and always fortifies himself well with facts. In this pamphlet of thirty-eight pages he has conclusivly shown that not only has Christianity not aided the advancement of the world, but has been the most terrible incubus and obstacle in its way. The authorities he has consulted—Gibbon, Buckle, Draper, Lecky, Hallam, and Winwood Reade—are the very best of the standard historians, and the facts gathered from them are to be relied upon. It is a strong indictment he has drawn, sufficient to convince the most ardent Christian of the failure of his religion as a moral force, and the falseness of its claims as a civilizer. The book should be widely circulated. It will do good.

ESSAYS ON DEATH AND FUNERALS. By Joseph Henry, an old workingman. A collection of facts and ideas, original and selected, referring to death and funerals. Price 25 cents. Address Joseph Henry, Salina, Kan.

"If there were no death," says Mr. Henry, "there would be no superstition in the world. The church has taken great pains to show that the last moments of all Infidels hav been wretched; and priests and preachers are no longer men; they become hyenas, they dog upon graves, they devour the dead. They make trade of things that people revere the most. Orthodoxy is cruel in life, but in death it is a very fiend, says Chainey. It casts a shadow upon the brightest day, but from the cloud of grief it bursts like a thunderbolt, to blast and destroy the noblest minds with insanity. Some say that science has no comfort to ask at the grave, but better eternal silence in the presence of death than to speak such words as the church alone can offer. It is superstition and the false teachings of theologians that hav clothed death with all the terrors and dread with which it is usually contemplated." In fulfilling what he regards as the "duty of every Freethinker, in this day of reason and dawn of intellectual light, to put his thoughts in a tangible form, to publish his views and ideas concerning the needed reforms of the day, and especially of those whose ideas are in opposition to the great majority," Mr. Henry has published this pamphlet. He has added to his remarks some essays showing the nature of death and really how little it should be feared. The dying, says Dr. Griswold, do not fear death but rather desire it. All physicians agree that the dying think of the past and not of the future. There is often terrible suffering from disease, but death is always a relief. It is idle as well as wicked to make death seem terrible or painful. In the popular religion of Buddhism the ultimate fate of the dead is nirvana, or absolute rest and unconsciousness. It is Christianity which has, by its lurid pictures of a burning hell, aroused an almost universal fear of this repose. The spirit in which man should await the approach of the inevitable, is given by Mr. Henry in verse:

But yet I'm troubled by no Christian fears:
No lurid glow of hell lights up my path;
I shed no craven, penitential tears,
Nor cry for succor from almighty wrath.

Away false fears, ye specters of the mind,
Creations of the artful priests of yore.
Religious quicksands I hav left behind,
To plant my footstep's on Truth's rocky shore.

And as I stand upon the brink of Life,
And see Death's valley far below me lie,
I feel assured I leave the worldly strife,
To rest in peace beneath the changing sky.

The good I wrought perchance may not bring forth
Till 'mongst the living I've long ceased to be:
Then let all mankind judge my humble worth,
And o'er my failings pass in charity.

And you, my faithful friends, I leave behind
To perfect all that I hav tried to do;
Raise up the weak, instruct the darkened mind,
Make gladness for the many, not the few.

Thus will I pass away content, in peace,
Knowing my trust is placed in worthy hands;
In patient labor you must never cease,
To shed your light abroad to distant lands.

Now let me slumber! I am old and gray;
And fain would leave the scene of woe;
My one regret that when I'm passed away,
Still struggling multitudes must come and go.

Strange darkness falls upon my feeble eyes,
And faint and rapid comes and goes my breath;
And now do fade from view the azure skies—
Good-bye to all!—I yield myself to death.
. . . . . .

Behold, he sleeps! Raise up his hoary head!
How grave and calm his last departing hours.
Ere many days we'll lay him with the dead,
And say farewell! and strew his grave with flow'rs.

Notwithstanding the disagreeableness of the subject, the book is pleasant reading, and the Liberals who are often called on to preside at the last rites of some deceased Freethought brother will find in it many valuable passages and ideas.

THE INSTITUTE OF HEREDITY, and its Third Annual Convention, held in Wesleyan Hall, Boston, May 29, 1883. Reported and edited by J. H. W. Toohey. Published by the Institute. Address Mr. Toohey, 153 Cherry street, Chelsea, Mass.

The publication and sending of this report is for the benefit of friends of the institute living at a distance who are unable to attend the various meetings held to propagate its principles, which can perhaps be best set forth by giving a paragraph from its forthcoming constitution:

"Whereas the progress of the intellect and the verifications of science hav demonstrated that the inheritance and transmission of life in and through the human organization is the great mission work of parentage; the physical characteristics of which are health of function, beauty of form, and strength of constitution in the natural order of biologic development; and whereas ignorance, poverty, bad education, and general misdirection of mind and body hav culminated in such derangement of this biologic order as to afflict humanity, and transmit inherited diseases to the third and fourth generations with new and complicated forms of vice, crime, and insanity. Therefore it is proposed to publish and otherwise make known the fundamental facts of parentage, including the character-forming influence of the wife and mother on the embryonic and growing child, and utilize a neglected department of knowledge which will bring physical and mental health to the sons and daughters of progress—loving fathers and mothers, whom it is hoped will join this associativ effort."

Mr. S. P. Putnam is the president of the branch of this society in this city, and Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr., is the secretary. The meetings at the latter's parlors last winter were well attended, and the interest manifested in the objects of the society large. As a practical step toward learning how to physically and mentally improve the human race the Institute of Heredity promises to be of the first importance.

GENESIS: The Miracles and Predictions According to Spiritualism. By Allen Kardec. Translated by the "spirit-guides" of W. J. Colville. Colby & Rich publishers. Price $1.50.

The object of this book, it is announced, is the study of three subjects—Genesis, Miracles, and Prophecies. Mr. Colville, the translator, is a Christian, plus Spiritualism, and he has seized upon Kardec's works to sustain him in that betwixt-heaven-and-earth position. Kardec appears to hav a great desire to reconcile modern Spiritualism with ancient miracles. He was a believer in "God," and the qualities and characteristics he attributes to him sound very like an orthodox sermon—with hell left out. He quotes scriptures as though it possessed authoritativ character, and he makes his genesis of the material and spiritual rest upon the pure assumption that "God" is the "first cause of all things, the starting-point of all, the pivot upon which the edifice of creation reposes." Upon this insecure foundation he builds his equally unstable structure of metaphysics. Although he is not certain that the religions now accepted by men are revelations from God, he is pretty sure that Spiritualism is, and that "its coming is providential."

His reasoning is very theological. "Before time was born, immeasurable eternity received the divine word, and impregnated space itself." That sentence about equals Talmages assertion that God created the universe out of his own omnipotence. Any one who asserts that there was a time before time was shows but too plainly the impress of a theologic education to be trusted and implicitly followed in his reasoning.

The biblical deluge, according to this author, was an actual fact, only it was local in its extent, "for, however abundant and continuous rain had been for sixty days, the calculation proves the quantity of fallen water could not possibly hav been sufficient to cover all the earth even to the tops of the highest mountains." It is surprising that the acumen that discovered this did not discover that the Bible says the whole earth was covered, and, therefore, a "local option," explanation cannot be stretched to cover the case. Holy writ has been twisted around a good deal already by ambitious theologians to meet the requirements of modern science, and now if it must be still further distorted to fit the exigencies of modern Spiritualism, neither can stand the strain. For this is what the book in question does in its consideration of miracles and prophecies. They are attributed to the influence of spirits, being as ingeniously defended as by any liberal theologian who conceives he has a call to uphold "God's word" by reconciling it with the present known facts of science.

But, in our opinion, the status of Spiritualism is not raised by this book, and certainly the Bible has been much better defended by professional theologians. When a certain portion of the Spiritualists learn that that old book is no authority, their cause —with which we hav no dispute—will make better progress.

The Origin of the White Man.

From Nature.

There may be remains of stone age whites, but there are no certain remains of white savages of the low order. We may well doubt if there ever were any white savages; it is more likely that the white men were developed late in the race history of the world from ancestors far on in civilization, with its improved supply of food, its better housing and clothing, its higher intellectuality, was one main factor in the development of the white type. Here, however, it must be remembered that there is not a white race in the sense in which there is a Carib race, or an Andaman race. It includes several race types, and even the same languages, such as English or German, may be spoken by men as blonde as Danes or as dark as Sicilians. The fair-haired Scandinavian type has something of the definitness of a true race; but as one travels south there appear, not well defined sub races, but darkening gradations of bewildering complexity. The most reasonable attempt to solve this intricate problem is Professor Huxley's view that the white race is made up of fair whites of the Northern or Scandinavian type and dark whites who are the result of ages of mixture between the fair whites and the darker nations, though it is perhaps hardly prudent to limit these dark ancestors to one variety, as he does.

If now we cannot trace the white man down to the low level of primitiv savagery, neither can we assign to him the great upward movement by which the barbarian passed into civilization. It is not to the Aryan of Persia nor to the Semite of Syria that the art of writing belongs which brought on the new era of culture. The Egyptian, whose hieroglyphics may be traced passing from picture into alphabet, had his race allies in the people of North Africa, especially the Berbers of the north coast—people of whom no elasticity of ethnological system would bring into the white race. Of the race type of the old Babylonians, who shaped likewise rude pictures into wedge phonetic signs, we know but little as yet; at any rate, their speech was not Aryan, and the comparisons of Lenormant and Sayce hav given some ground for connecting it with the Turanian language, belonging to a group of nations of whom one, the Chinese, had in remote antiquity, worked out a civilization of which the development of an imperfect phonetic writing formed part. If the great middle move in culture was made, not by any breach of the white race, but by races now represented by the Egyptian and Chinese, it is not less clear that these nations came to the limit of their developing power. The white race, in remote antiquity, risen high in barbaric culture when their contact with the darker nations who invented writing opened to them new intellectual paths. The Greeks found in ancient Egyptian theology the gods of the four elements, but they transferred this thought from theology to philosophy, and developed from it the theory of elements and atoms, which is the basis of modern chemistry. They found the Babylonians building terraced temples to the eleven planets in the order of their periods, and this conception again they transferred from religion to science, founding on it the doctrin of planet spheres, which grew into mathematical astronomy. It may moderate our somewhat overweening estimate of our power to remember that the white races cannot claim to be original creators of literature and science, but from remote antiquity they began to show the combined power of acquiring them and developing culture which has made them dominant among mankind.

Appreciativ.

From the Gayoso, Mo., Democrat.

We hav received a copy of THE TRUTH SEEKER, a "journal of Freethought and Reform," published by M. W. Bennett of New York. The subject of theology is liberally discussed. A great many good things can be gleaned from the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. It can be had for $2.50 per year by addressing the publisher at No. 33 Clinton Place, near Broadway, N. Y.

Among other things in THE TRUTH SEEKER we notice the dropping of final letters that hav no sound, of several words, as follows: "hav" for have; "relativ" for relative; "develop" for develope; "doctrin" for doctrine; "liv" for live. The final "e" is dropped in all these and many other words. It is time we were dropping these and many useless letters in words, where they hav no other office to perform but to perplex students, and often the man of business.

Letters from Friends.

CINCINNATI, August 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $1 for the Monument Fund. You can draw on me for more if needed.

C. D. WALLACE

MINNEAPOLIS. August 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER; for the THE TRUTH SEEKER is a grand success. The man or woman who cannot find food for thought, and gather information from its columns, is too far advanced to remain on earth.

J. F. MACOMBER.

TORONTO, CANADA, Aug. 5, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is a dollar bill, being my contribution toward the fund for raising a monument over the remains of our departed friend, D. M. Bennett. Would hav sent it earlier if I could hav done so. I will not let the opportunity pass away without sending my mite for so worthy a cause.

Yours truly, JAMES BODY.

ZOLLARSVILLE, Aug. 7, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I must speak to let you know at least that I am living, as it has been so long since you hav heard from me; and herewith inclose $1 to insure the continued visits of your most excellent paper. I expect to be a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER while I liv—or at least, as long as it livs—and I hope it may liv as long as there is a seeker for truth in existence, as it is a most fitting monument to it's immortal founder.

G. W. GARRETT.

ALBION, MICH., Aug. 7, 1883.

MY DEAR MRS. BENNETT: I come at last, though I hope not least, in sympathy for you in your bereavement, for I hav been a widow twenty-seven years and know well all of the lonely way. I met D. M. Bennett at the Watkins Convention five years ago, and hav been deeply interested in his history and travels since; and felt deeply his transition from earth life to that higher realm.

Inclosed find $1 for the Bennett Monument; and believe me ever in sympathy with you.

MRS. M. D. COLT.

NORTH WOLCOTT, Aug. 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am a subscriber for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I believe it to be the best Liberal paper published in America. I am pleased to see your method of introducing it to the public, and I hope that you may get many new subscribers, for it is such information as THE TRUTH SEEKER contains that the world is in need of. I inclose the names of ten persons who are unbelievers in the dogmas of Christianity, and hope their names may be added to your subscription list.

C. H. BETTS.

MILLGROVE, August 6, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $2—$1.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER the balance of the year; 25 cents for "Answers to Christian Questions;" 25 cents for "Crimes of Preachers," and also inclosed find names to whom you may send THE TRUTH SEEKER. I would be very loath to do without the food I get from THE TRUTH SEEKER. However, I am first indebted to R. G. Ingersoll for some of the fruit from the tree of knowledge. Last, but not least, I am having a weekly feast from reading THE TRUTH SEEKER.

JACOB MCDONAL.

CANTON, OHIO, Aug. 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please send me several "Underwood's Prayer" and a few other tracts, such as you deem fit for missionary work, and a few numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER for the inclosed postage stamps.

I am traveling some, and want to hav something tangible to read, as I am sick of hearing of "Christ and him crucified." I reside at Clare, Mich., and, with Charles Bradway, was instrumental in getting H. L. Green to lecture there on March 23, 1882, which proved a powerful bomb in the stronghold of superstition, and it had its effect, causing some to think for themselvs.

JOSEPH BUCHER.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

NEW YORK CITY, August 16, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Your insertion of my letter of August 2d emboldens me to suggest to the Convention at Rochester to take some action respecting the theological Sunday-schools.

Every Sunday hundreds of thousands of little children are taught to believe, as facts, the fables of the creation, redemption, ressurrection, etc., thus influencing for evil part, and in most instances the whole, of their after lives. Prof. F. Adler would be the right man on this subject, and I do hope he will put in an appearance there.

Capture the Sunday-schools, and our work, as far as theology is concerned, will soon triumph.

READER.

HELD GUILTLESS.

NUNDA, August 12, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I see by THE TRUTH SEEKER of August 4th that I am accused of plagiarism by one R. R Hall, M.D., of Rockford, Ill., by having "A Truth Seeker's Dilemma" published in your paper, and credited to my friend, "S. A." Now I disclaim all intention of wronging the doctor, as I had never seen it either in manuscript or print until "S. A." wrote it and left it on the desk; but probably had I consulted him the mistake would hav been avoided; hence, I hav only to apologize to the doctor for the wrong I hav innocently done, and sincerely hope he may continue to contribute his productions and hav them spread before the Liberal public on the pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

J. E. BECKLEY.

CHESTERFIELD, IND., Aug. 13, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My subscription as a trial subscriber expired some time since. Please find inclosed $2.85, to be used as follows: $1.25 for the continuance of the paper for six months, and the balance in tracts for distribution among my neighbors. I want to atone for some eighteen years of my time I worked in the interests of priestcraft, and I don't know of any better way than to use my efforts in circulating THE TRUTH SEEKER, as it was through the reading of a copy handed me by a friend that I was brought to a knowledge of the truth. I send you a list of names whom I think after reading a copy will become subscribers to your paper. I will spend a good portion of my surplus time in spreading the light.

Yours for truth, WM. JOHN.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing your offer in THE TRUTH SEEKER of a good twenty-five cent book for twenty-five names, I concluded to send you a list, as I had a good opportunity of getting them without much trouble. On the 27th, 28th, and 29th ult. there was a rousing convention of Freethinkers at Carthage, N. Y. where the speaking was splendid and the enthusiasm unbounded. As Carthage is my nativ town, I took the opportunity of visiting my boyhood home, and never enjoyed myself better. I am going there again during the month of August, and if you will giv me permission I will get you a goodly number of subscribers while there. The convention did a wonderful amount of good, and in the short time I was there I learned of quite a number who would take THE TRUTH SEEKER if there was only some one to present them with a copy and talk it into them.

I hav selected thirty-five names of people who are either Liberals or half Liberals, and with a very little reading on their part would soon become good, solid Freethinkers. Some are good Liberals, but do not take a Liberal paper, but would, I think, if urged to. I am going on a vacation to Carthage the latter part of this month, and will get you all the subscribers I can, and will be glad to do it, too.

DR. E. A. WOOD.

NORTH BEND, WIS., August 7, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The letter to the Pittsburgh Post, which was also published in the Pioneer and Press, St. Paul, Minn., under date of Aug. 2, 1883, betrays the animus of Christian bigotry. Out here in the wilds of Western Wisconsin, it has, I opine, not heretofore been generally understood that "Greenwood was a Christian burial ground." If it be, why did the authorities allow the poor Bennett to be buried in the "sacred" grounds. The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will doubtless remember a case which occurred in England, not many years ago, when a curate of the established church ordered the removal of a stone from the church yard, whereupon a daughter had placed the title "Rev." to her father's name, who had been a Methodist minister; the curate holding that none but regularly ordained ministers of the established church were entitled to the title "Rev." The daughter appealed to the bishop, who sustained the curate. An appeal was taken to the courts. The courts sustained the bishop. The case eventually came before the court of last resort, which not only reversed the judgments of the inferior courts, the bishop and the curate, but had the honesty to read them a severe reprimand for their bigotry. This correspondent thinks the "fond expectations of the widow" in having engraved upon the monument extracts from his writings, "may possibly be realized—but not in Greenwood cemetery." We will see! Find inclosed $1 for the Monument Fund.

FAIR PLAY.

ELGIN, ILL., August 5, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I notice you hav been soliciting names to whom you can send sample copies of your spicy and valuable paper. It is not improbable that some of the names I send you are already regular subscribers—hope they may be, and that all may ultimately conclude to share with us the immense quantity of valuable intelligence to be gleaned from the columns of the invincible TRUTH SEEKER from week to week and year to year. The dauntless sheet is looked for in our house at the terminus of each week with a zeal that thoroughly convinces me that it is now an indispensable article in our house. I feel that it is the duty of every man and woman who entertains an iota of regard for liberty, mental or physical, to support at least one and as many other secular and Freethought journals as their means can possibly admit of. As to the Liberal League, I am sorry to say the interest that Mr. Bell, of Boston, and later, the grand impetus given the cause by that indefatigable little lady, Mrs. S. H. Lake, is on the wane. We hold no meetings at present. The big majority of the members are like myself, compelled to work every day in order to obtain a subsistence, and, after ten hours of daily labor within the monotonous walls of the Elgin National Watch factory, it requires not a little fidelity and enthusiasm to induce oneself into a warm sultry room to discuss the merits of preparing for a hotter habitation beyond the "mystic vale." I believe a deal more good can be accomplished by a liberal distribution of secular reading matter, tracts, pamphlets, etc., and a better selection than THE TRUTH SEEKER office affords would be hard to find. In religious circles we hav been calumniated and abused considerably, and this had a tendency to throw weak-kneed converts off the track and discouragement into the ranks of the faithful few who were carrying the burden of expense and the lasting odium of their superstitious assailants. But we hav to come together soon to prepare for the lecture campaign and in a measure offset the strenuous efforts of the shouting "believers" and the Young Men's Christian Association, who are doing their best to suppress the inevitable, but, lo! we liv to fight another day.

Yours for liberty, JAS. METCALF.

FORCE.—TO OTTO WETTSTEIN.

DOWAGIAC, MICH., Aug. 10, 1883.

If force is an attribute of matter it must hav a method of action which is alike in every atom. It must be simply expansiv, or rotary or attractiv. There cannot possibly be any conceivable method or manner by which force could act other than one of these three. If it acts expansivly only, there never could be any aggregation of the atoms at all. If its motion is rotary there would be no result whatever. If it is attractiv simply, then all matter would come together in a solid mass. It is obvious, I think, that matter and force alone will not account for the wonderful results of nature's evolutions. You will probably say that matter has other properties besides force, that each atom contains within itself potentially all the essences and elements which compose this universe; that force develops and manifests them (I believe this is the theory of Materialism); but granting that each infinitesimal atom is pregnant with all the elements of life, form, thought, and all that constitutes the material and mental world, the question arises, How does the aggregation of myriads of atoms all alike in quality, and moved by one force, produce this wonderful phenomenon which we call nature? All the transformations of matter which we know anything about are wrought out by chemical processes which require the contact of substances wholly unlike, but what unlikeness can there be among the ultimate atoms? And if not there, where did the diversity begin, and what caused it? Reason feels that something is wanting here, which the Materialistic theory does not supply, and if it cannot find the true solution of the mystery it will not accept an absurd hypothesis in its stead.

When myriads of atoms drawn together by attraction hav aggregated in sufficient quantities to make a world, there would still be nothing but an ocean of formless substances, until some energy of which we hav no conception, unfolds the panorama of form, color, life, and intelligence. Force, acting by attraction, expansion, or revolution, could effect no chemical change upon the atoms; how then could it develop this glorious universe? Oh, the barrenness of Materialism! You hav something which you call force, which is blind, senseless, aimless, and unconscious of itself, and you make this mysterious nothing account for all the processes of nature. If you ask the scientist what force is, he will answer, "A tendency of the atoms to move." Is it not surprising that this "tendency to move," without any purpose in moving or any consciousness of moving, should result in trees, flowers, oceans, clouds, stars, and above all, in living, thinking, joyous, suffering human beings? Unconscious atoms and unconscious force producing conscious, intelligent entities, that looking backward can trace their own history through the primeval ages, and looking forward dream of immortality! And this glorious thing, the human mind, fraught with hopes, fears, and aspirations worthy of a god, glittering for a brief hour and then extinguished in eternal night. This is Materialism.

Thomas Paine said that any theory of religion which shocked the mind of a child was self-evidently false, and it must be equally true that any theory of the destiny of man which shocks every fiber of his being must also be false. But aside from its gloominess and barrenness, Materialism strikes me as extremely unphilosophical, and out of harmony with all the anologies of nature. You speak of matter as the "all in all," and as existing prior to the existence of its attributes. Of course you did not mean that, for what would matter be divested of its properties? Would there be anything left? I agree with you that matter is everything that is real, visible or invisible, and that it is moved by a force, but it is the same kind of force which moves your arm when you write or work—it proceeds from a will, and as your hand never could hav moved had you not willed it, neither could an atom in the universe hav stirred without the presence of deity. I am aware that this position involves many mysterious problems which no human intellect can solve, yet to me it is most in harmony with the revelations of nature and science; and I hav as yet failed to meet an Atheistic argument that did not present a darker problem to my understanding than any which is presented in Theism. MRS. E. HEDDON.

DEXAL STATION (BOMBAY PRESIDENCY), INDIA.

MR. MACDONALD: You will observe by the heading that I am in the land of the "mild Hindoo." I left America for India on Wednesday, December 13, 1882, in the steamship Servia, of the Cunard line, for Liverpool. In London I staid just one night, and off next morning for Paris, via Calais; from Paris to Rome (Italy), from Rome to Naples, arriving in the last mentioned place on Christmas night at 11:15 A.M. I was only three hours in Rome—from 1:15 P.M. to 4:15 P.M. Christmas day everything had a holiday appearance. Even the statues of the saints (in one of the churches close to the railway station that I visited) seemed to enjoy the holiday as well as the rest. I could not help wondering whether Bennett while in Rome ever visited the al ove church. I could not find out the name of it, for the only reply I could get from the benighted Italians that I spoke to was "cee, cee, cee, cee." Yes, I said at last, I can see as well as any of you, but tell me the name of that church. "Cee, cee," said the fellow. You may be sure I did not ask many more questions; it was no use. I learnt on the steamship Singapore, of the Florio Rubattino line, that "cee, cee," meant yes, yes, for one of the Italians on board was robbing me of my soap and towel. "Here, here," said I, "just fetch those things back." "Cee, cee," said he. "Yes," said I, "I do see, for I am not asleep," and in telling this to one of the passengers he explained to me with a hearty laugh that "cee, cee," meant yes, yes. So you can cee, cee how a poor fellow gets along in a foreign country. I left Naples on Wednesday, Dec. 27, 1882, for Bombay, and arrived in Bombay on Jan. 17, 1883, at 7:30 P.M. in the evening. Next year I intend visiting the United States again, to stay a few months there, or for good; I cannot tell which as yet.

But what I hav written this mostly for is to ask you to send me your catalog of Freethought works, including all of Col. Ingersoll's works; also all information concerning the monument for poor Bennett, and what you can send the ever favorit TRUTH SEEKER for to us in India. I hav already three subscribers, and will hav a few more for you by the time you reply to this. It is a great comfort to associate with those that think as we do, and to hav their friendship and sympathy in all we undertake from time to time. I hav had at least fifty arguments with different persons since my arrival in India, on the old subjects, religion and holy ghosts, and those ghosts that are not wholly ghosts, neither are they all spirit, but a mixture of medium and musketo netting. I am in the land of religion now—the birthplace of all religions, if we can judge by similarity, and I think we can; don't you? The other day I witnessed a Hindoo priest being worshiped (one might say so). There were the women and the young girls going round and round two trees (the fig and neem entwined together), while the priest was chanting and murmuring a lot of nonsense. The women and girls then knelt down each in turn before the priest, and kissed his foot (the right one) a la popery. They then gave the priest money (small copper coins) and fruit. When that, the chief part of the ceremony, was over. the women and the little girls departed, leaving the priest to count his money. I went up to him then, and asked him to exchange positions (situations with me), telling him at the same time that he was to be envied. The fellow laughed and said that it was only on one day in each year that this ceremony takes place. I asked him then if he wasn't sorry for that, but he only laughed as a reply. Well, well, I could not help thinking of Thomas Paine's words, "What a fool has religion made of man," and by Jove it has made confounded asses of the women.

Hav you an agent in India for the sale of Freethought and reformatory works? If so, please giv me his address. The other day I read a piece in the Times, of India, that the Reverend some fellow (I forget his name now) told his congregation in Bombay that a great amount of Freethought literature was in circulation in India—all Ingersoll's, Bradlaugh's, Annie Besant's, Foote's (the man now in prison for blasphemy, he said), and others, and that to counteract this flood of Infidelity Christian tracts were being printed as fast as possible, and of course the hat had to be passed around then to help the printers of the tracts anyhow. A good tale is told about a Bombay minister of the God's-pill, that in the absence of the collection-plate he sent around his new hat among the congregation, and all that was put into the hat was 2 pice (about two cents). "Well," he remarked, "thank God I got my hat back, anyhow." I can tell you the Bombayites are no fools.

I'll now wish you and THE TRUTH SEEKER every success, and to Mrs. Bennett success in all she undertakes. If all the Liberals in America will do their part I am sure THE TRUTH SEEKER will flourish. I shall do my part for its continuance, for it deserves to liv, and now that its founder has gone to his resting-place, we cannot perpetuate his name better, and giv peace and joy to his wife, more than by placing a fine monument over her husband and building a Bennett Memorial Hall to his memory, and a few dollars from each Liberal will more than accomplish this fine object, which will more than repay them for the dollars they giv, and also make his wife happy. Surely we can do this. WM. DALEY.

OPEN LETTER TO ELMINA.

NIRVANA, MICH., Aug. 15, 1883.

I thank you, Elmina, for your kind and able criticism on "Nature's Harmony," and am prompted to reply more through a feeling of congeniality than in justification of my book. Each has as good a right to their own opinion, as I to mine, and I am glad we do not all agree, else how could I expect others to help correct my errors, and whence would arise the mental agitation which hastens us onward to a higher intellectual development? We cannot find fault with any one's honest convictions, and as you are doubtless just in your conclusions, I greet you as a friend as heartily as though you accorded exactly with my views.

On general principles, there are but few points wherein we differ, but in dealing with these occult questions where tangible demonstrations are not had, we are liable constantly to be at variance. The clown would remark, the reason why we differ is because we are discussing something that neither knows anything about, hence both as liable to be wrong as right. So it is with this all-ipmortant question, "to be or not to be," and the reason why we cannot agree upon it is because one or both, or neither, know anything about it; but while this is so, let us canvass the field and see which stands on the best footing:

First, is there anything in nature which proves to you for a certainty that there can be no such thing as a future existence? We think you will hav to answer no! Then you hav no evidence by which you can deny another sphere. Now, on the other hand, if I hav no evidence by which I know for a certainty that there is a future state, then I am like you, wholly ignorant of the fact either pro or con; and while I guess there is, you guess there is not, and our judgments just equal to two school children's. But I am not willing to concede to this proposition. While I fail to see the evidences for your premises, after having held the same ground for thirty years, proofs positiv are presented to sustain my position. I endeavor to show in "Nature's Harmony" that all things attending life here, when rightly viewed, are evidence of a life beyond wherein each is conscious of his being; and I cannot understand why that every body cannot see it in the light I present it. But in addition to all that, we hav phenomena that none witnessing can ignore, testifying to the same fact. I mean to say that we hav conditions by which we can communicate with our departed or deceased friends as intelligibly as with those on earth, or rather in this sphere (for all we claim are allied to earth).

It seems from your statements that you hav not yet investigated this matter, and I am at a loss to know why you hav not done so. Do not intelligent and honest people keep telling you that it is not a farce? And will you still think they are either dishonest or foolish? I would hav you know that I bear witness of these facts, and that you may not think that I am the novice of deception, will here state, that I hav been an illusionist by profession, for twenty years, and would be very ignorant not to be able to judge as to the deception or reality of these demonstrations.

Now I propose to giv you an opportunity of witnessing these phenomena, and test the reality of the communications for yourself. I will direct you to where you can get the "independent slate writing" done between two slates, with or without pencil, with communication addressed to you from some friend who has "passed over," in their own handwriting, in answer to some question you may ask, known to no other mortal except yourself, and done while you are holding the slate in your own hands. Would such a test be satisfactory to you? If so, it will not be long before you will look upon this matter as I do. This test is very common out here, and if you would like it I can cite you to a score of slate writing mediums, where you can witness it, and some not far from where you are.

The phenomenon of materialization is not so common, yet very easy to be reached. I hav witnessed some of these demonstrations a hundred times over at my own house, until they are no longer a matter of curiosity, and the laws by which they are governed are as familiar to me as the analysis of the simplest chemicals, and when I hear people talk as to whether these things are true, or read controversies pro and con as to the matter, I am sorry for their ignorance.

That you may be assured of what I state, I will say, should you fail to get the demostrations as I hav stated them (which you shall not fail in) then charge me up for your time and the expense of your trip, and with it I will sacrifice $500 for the good of any institution of charity you may name.

By the way, I think Mr. Truesdell's book will look differently to you when you hav investigated the matter for yourself. He never could hav been a genuin medium, otherwise, now he would be an impostor; and if he never was a medium, then his investigations are not reliable, or he would hav seen the facts as I herein state them. Now, notwithstanding his Slade exposition, of which he boasts, as a seeker for truth and an advocate of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I would be pleased to know how much Mr. Truesdell would like to venture that this slate writing phenomena cannot be done as I represent it, and to his satisfaction, and beyond the ability of any mortal to gainsay, or his power to explain outside of spiritual manifestation?

For the cause of truth alone I suggest this demonstration, and know that what I state is true, and during the rest of my life time I intend to promulgate this truth. Fraternally yours,

AUTHOR OF "NATURE'S HARMONY."

NORDHOFF, CAL., August 5, 283.

E. M. MACDONALD, EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: I think the old TRUTH SEEKER is improving from week to week, and that you are the champion editor for a Liberal paper. I like the discussion between the Spiritualists and Materialists; and I greatly enjoy the articles from the heavy-brained fellows, such as Andrews, Wakeman, & Co. Of course you understand that they occupy a large amount of space in ventilating very simple truths. If Andrews should say, in so many words, that matter and all it's powers and potencies are co-eternal and indivisible, his opponents would agree with him, and the argument would close; but men who liv by their wits must exert themselvs to obscure their ideas by the greatest possible amount of words. By the way, what has become of the sleepy philosophy, "C. E. T.?" I even enjoy wading through his metaphysical inanities.

Suppose some of the heavy-brain fellows be asked to write an opinion as to whether the turning lose of the immense quantity of stored up energy, in the consumption of coal and wood and other material in generating steam and electricity, may not be the prime cause of the floods and cyclones which are making such havoc all over "God's footstool." You cannot too often call the attention of God's agents to the utter recklessness of their principal in destroying property dedicated to his sole use and benefit. It's inconceviable how any observer of the phenomena of nature can believe there is a being all wise, powerful, and good, controling and directing the action of the elements. And it is only necessary for people to divest themselvs of their theological spectacles and read the record of his prime favorits, and they must regard the God of Abraham, Moses, David & Co., with absolute contempt.

But I did not propose to giv my views on questions you are so well handling in THE TRUTH SEEKER yourself, but simply to request you to send me "Answers to Christian Questions." I want it for missionary work. Your article in July 28th number on labor and capital has the right ring. In this state we are completely swallowed by monopoly, and I see no hope short of revolution. No party can elect men strong enough to resist the power of the great transportation monopoly; it virtually owns the state. Since writing the above I hav read Otto Wettstein's article. I think the Spiritualists will find him a pretty able opponent. Yours truly, FRED. ROBINSON.

LONG LAKE, August 5, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Please accept $1.00 for the monument. The four volumes entitled "A Truth Seeker Around the World," came duly to hand, and are highly appreciated. These books, with the "Gods and Religions" and other works of Mr. Bennett, occupy, together with Mr. Bennett's picture, the best place in our best room.

THE TRUTH SEEKER grows more entertaining each week; the controversy between Spiritualists and Materialists is good. Let it go on; discussion elicits truth. W. ARCHIBALD.

The Love of Money.

Published by request.

Money, O money! thy praises I sing,
Thou art my savior, my god, and my king;
Tis for thee that I preach, and for thee that I pray,
And make a collection twice each Sabbath day.

I hav candles and all sorts of dresses to buy,
For I wish you to know that my church is called high;
I don't mean the structure of steeple or wall,
But so high that the Lord cannot reach it at all.

I've poor in my parish who need some relief—
I preach to their poverty, and pray for their grief;
I send my box round to them morning and night,
And hope they'll remember the poor widow's mite.

I gather my knowledge from wisdom's great tree,
And the whole of my trinity's £, s., and d.;
Pounds, shillings, and pence are all that I crave
From my first step on earth to the brink of the grave.

And when I'm laid low, and my body at rest,
Place a box on my grave, 'tis my latest request;
That friends may all see who come for reflection,
I can't rest in peace without a collection.

Money's my creed and I'll not pray without it,
My heaven is closed 'gainst all those who doubt it;
For this is the essence of parson's religion:
Come regular to church, and be plucked like a pigeon.

My pay may be hundreds or thousands a year—
Double it, treble it, still I am here
With my box or my bags collecting your brass;
I can't do as Jesus did, ride on an ass.

I'll hav carriages and horses and servants and all,
I'm not going to foot it, like and Peter and Paul;
Neither, like John, liv on locust and honey!
So out with your purses, and down with your money.

Fools sometimes ask what I do with this money!
They might just as well ask what bees do with honey!
I answer them all with a wink or a nod,
I keep three-thirds myself and giv praises to God.

In the cold, silent earth I may soon be laid low,
To sleep with the blest that went long ago;
I shall slumber in peace till the great resurrection,
Then be first on my legs to make a collection.

Poetry.

The Reformer.

All grim and soiled and brown with tan,
I saw a strong one in his wrath
Smiting the godless shrines of man
Along the path.

The church, beneath her trembling dome,
Essayed in vain her ghostly charm;
Wealth shook within his gilded home
With pale alarm.

Fraud from his secret chambers fled
Before the sunlight bursting in;
Sloth drew her pillow o'er her head
To drown the din.

"Spare," Art implored, "yon holy pile,
That grand old time-worn turret spare!"
Meek Reverence, kneeling in the aisle,
Cried out "Forbear!"

Gray-bearded Use, who, deaf and blind,
Groped from his old, accustomed stone,
Leaned on his staff, and wept to find
His seat o'erthrown.

Young Romance raised his dreamy eyes,
O'erhung with paley locks of gold;
"Why smite?" he asked in sad surprise,
"The fair, the old?"

Yet louder rang the strong one's stroke,
Yet nearer flashed his ax's gleam;
Shuddering and sick at heart I woke
As from a dream.

I looked! Aside the dust-cloud rolled;
The Waster seemed the Builder, too;
Up-springing from the ruined Old,
I saw the rising New.

'Twas but the ruin of the bad,
The wasting of the wrong and ill;
Whate'er of good the old-time had
Was living still.

Calm grew the brows of him I feared,
The frown that awed me passed away
And left behind a smile, which cheered
Like breaking day.

Green grew the grain on battle plains;
O'er swarded war-mounds grazed the cow;
The slave stood forging from his chains,
The spade and plow.

Where frowned the fort, pavilions gay,
And cottage windows, flower-entwined,
Looked out upon the peaceful bay,
And hills behind.

On vine-wreathed cups with wine once red,
The light on brimming crystal fell,
Drawn sparkling from the rivulet head
And mossy well.

Through prison walls, like heaven-sent hope,
Fresh berries blew and sunshine strayed
And with the idle gallows rope
The young child played.

Where the doomed captiv in his cell
Had counted o'er the weary hours,
Glad school girls, answering to the bell,
Came crowned with flowers.

Grown wiser for the lesson given,
I fear no longer; for I know
That where the share is deepest driven
The best fruits grow.

The out-worn rite, the old abuse,
The pious fraud transparent grown,
The good held captiv in the use
Of wrong alone.

These wait their doom from that great law
Which makes the past time seem to-day,
And fresher life the world shall draw
From their decay.

O backward looking son of time!
The new is old, the old is new;
The cycle of a change sublime
Still sweeping through.

So wisely taught the Indian seer,
Destroying Siva, forming Brahm,
Who wake by turns earth's love and fear
Are one the same.

As idly as in that old day
Thou mournest, did thy sires repine;
So, in his turn, the child grown gray
Shall sigh for thine.

But life shall on and upward go,
The eternal step of progress beats
To that great anthem, calm and slow,
Which God repeats.

Take heart! the Waster builds again,
A charmed life Old Goodness hath;
The tares may perish, but the grain
Is not for death.

God works in all things, all obey
His first propulsion from the night;
Ho! wake and watch! the world is gray
With morning light! WHITTIER.

THE RADICAL PULPIT.

Comprising discourses of advanced thought by
O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER
two of America's clearest thinkers.
Price, in cloth, $1

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid,
FOR FIFTY CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

A WIFE WANTED.

An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

LOVE AND CONJUGALITY.

Hints toward the true and felicitous in Love and Conjugality. Sexuality viewed from a higher ideal. New thoughts thereon, clearly presented, yet in unobjectionable shape. All in, or contemplating the conjugal relation should hav this essay. Sent on receipt of seven cents, postage, by S. G. LEWIS, GRASS VALLEY, CAL. 5t30

A REMARKABLE BOOK!
JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
30tf Syracuse, N. Y.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S

SOCIOLOGY;

OR,

The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.

WITH AN APPENDIX

ILLUSTRATED.

Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1.

Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.

Also a new Science of Music in preparation.
Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

WETTSTEIN'S

JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.

200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound, Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man. Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

Published at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Advancement of Science. The Inaugural Address of Prof. JOHN TYNDALL, delivered before the British Association for the Advancement of Science. With Portrait and Biographical Sketch. Also containing opinions of Prof. H. HELMHOLTZ, and articles of Prof. TYNDALL and Sir HENRY THOMPSON on prayer. Price, cloth, 50 cents. Inaugural Address alone, in paper, 15 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus. His Character and Doctrins. From the Analysis of Religious Belief. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A new scripture (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL. From the English. Very Rich. Price, 25 cents.

Crimes of Preachers in the United States. By M. E. BILLINGS. Shows how thick and fast the godly hav fallen from grace. Price, 25 cents.

Deity Analyzed and the Devil's Defense. In Six Lectures by Col. JOHN R. KELSO, A.M. These are among the ablest lectures ever delivered, and should be read by everybody. $1.50.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, a curate of a Roman church in France, containing the best of his writings. 25 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. A radical novel of marked ability. By FREDERIKA MACDONALD. 404 pages. Price reduced to $1.25.

Nature's Revelations of Character; or Physiognomy Illustrated. The science of individual traits portrayed by the temperaments and features. Illustrated by 260 wood cuts. By JOSEPH SIMMS, M.D. 650 pages, 8 vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

New England and the People up There. A humorous lecture. By GEORGE E. MACDONALD. 10 cents.

Pocket Theology. By VOLTAIRE. Comprising terse, witty, and sarcastic definitions of the terms used in theology. The only edition in English. 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Watkins Convention. 400 pages of excellent Speeches and Essays. Price reduced to $1.00.

Pyramid of Gizeh. The Relation of Ancient Egyptian Civilization to the Hebrew Narrativ in Genesis and Exodus, and the Relativ Claims of Moses and the Pyramid to Inspiration Considered. By VAN BUREN DENSLOW, LL.D. 25 cents.

Religion Not History. An able examination of the Morals and Theology of the New Testament. By Prof. F. W. Newman, of the London University. 25 cents.

Outline of the French Revolution: Its Causes and Results. A clear and comprehensiv portrayal of this interesting portion of human history. By W. S. BELL. 25 cents.

Outlines of Phrenology. By F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D. Most acceptable to Liberals of anything of the kind published. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Blakeman's 200 Poetical Riddles. Price, 20 cents.

PAINE'S WORKS.

Paine's Theological Works, including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, Reply to Mr. Erskine, Letter to Camille Jordan, etc., etc., with a life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 12mo In paper covers, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Paine's Great Works (complete) in one volume. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, $4.50.

Paine's Political Works, including Common Sense, The Crisis, and Rights of Man. Cloth, $1.50.

The Age of Reason. An investigation of true and fabulous theology. Without a peer in the world. Paper, 25 cents, or 5 for $1. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Age of Reason and An Examination of the Prophecies. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Common Sense. Paine's first work. 15 cents.

The Crisis. Containing numbers from I. to XVI. inclusiv. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Rights of Man. For the oppressed of humanity. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

B. F. UNDERWOOD'S WORKS.

FOR SALE AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE,

Essays and Lectures. Embracing Influence of Christianity on Civilization; Christianity and Materialism; What Liberalism offers in Place of Christianity; Scientific Materialism; Woman; Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint; Paine the Political and Religious Reformer; Materialism and Crime; Will the Coming Man Worship God? Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity; the Authority of the Bible; Freethought Judged by its Fruits; Our Ideas of God. 300 pp., paper, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Influence of Christianity upon Civilization. 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in Place of Christianity. 10 cents.

Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency. 10 cents.

Spiritualism from a Materialistic Standpoint. 10 cents.

Paine the Political and Religious Reformer. 10 cents.

Woman: Her Past and Present: Her Rights and Wrongs. 10 cents.

Materialism and Crime. 10 cents.

Will the Coming Man Worship God? 10 cents.

Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. 10 cents.

Twelve Tracts. Scientific and Theological. 20 cents.

Burgess-Underwood Debate. A four days' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind. Accurately reported. 188 pp. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth, 80 cents.

Underwood-Marples Debate. A four nights' debate between B. F. UNDERWOOD and Rev. JOHN MARPLES. Fully reported. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.

Write for Catalogues and Terms.

10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST:
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 0ºcents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.
A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York city.

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.
Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75cents.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

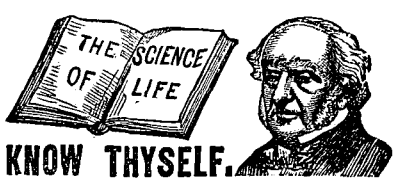
SHAKER REMEDY

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes a wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD

KNOW THYSELF.
A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y33

RUPTURES CURED by

my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

HONOR not the falsifier, the backbiter, the conspirator who, by the dark arts of the brigand and the assassin, combines with evil-minded men to work injury upon an unsuspecting brother who knows not of the machinations and plottings against him—D. M. Bennett.

MISS COBBE considers that virtue and happiness are antithetic, and that they clash when virtue "bids us suffer hunger and cold that we may feed and clothe others," oblivious of the truth that generous self-sacrifice affords a keener and a fuller pleasure than sensual gratification. Although a virtuous man may renounce some material enjoyment in order to do right, or to aid others, yet in that very renunciation he wins a moral happiness greater than the resigned material one. Thus it is perfectly consonant with utility to resign a physical enjoyment for a mental exertion, or to giv up a personal gratification for the keener and nobler pleasure of doing kindness to another. To do a virtuous action at the cost of material suffering, is really to aim at a purer pleasure than the pleasure resigned; it is to climb higher up on the mountain of happiness, to an elevation where the air is brighter and more exhilarating.—Miss Annie Besant.

THERE are some promotions in life which, independent of the mere substantial rewards they offer, acquire peculiar value and dignity from the coats and waist-coats connected with them. A field-marshal has his uniform; a bishop has his silk apron; a counsellor has his silk gown; a beadle has his cocked hat. Strip the bishop of his apron, or the beadle of his hat and lace, what are they? Men. Mere men. Dignity, and even holiness too, sometimes are more questions of coat and waist-coat than some people imagin.—Dickens's Oliver Twist.

WHAT though on homely fare we dine,
Wear hodden gray and a' that;
Gie fools their silks and knaves their wine,
A man's a man for a' that.

For a' that and a' that,
Their tinsel show and a' that
The honest man, though e'er sae poor,
Is king o' men for a' that. —Burns.

THAT was once new to "them of old" which any one now receives with veneration for its antiquity; nor was it the worse for appearing as a novelty; and that which is now embraced for its newness will to posterity be old, but not thereby be less true or less genuin. There is no occasion on this account to oppose the ancients and the moderns to one another or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge will gather what lights and get what lights he can, from either of them, from whom they are best to be had, without adoring the errors or rejecting the truths which he may find mingled in them.—Locke's Conduct of the Understanding.

THE fear from which rational religion delivers most effectually is the fear of reason, the fear of knowledge, the fear of rational investigation. True to itself, the myth of popular religion opens with a curse on the desire for knowledge. It was the tree of knowledge, for fear of eating which (Gen. iii, 22) the mythical Adam and Eve were expelled from Eden and condemned to die. The popular religionist does not fear hell itself so much as he fears reason, so much as he fears science, so much as he fears knowledge. And with good reason. For while the fires of hell are gradually dying down, the light of knowledge is continually brightening more and more. Once let its full-orbed radiance shine abroad and men are asking themselvs what will become of their god, their church, their book, their supernatural Christ. Why, they will vanish utterly.—J. W. Chadwick.

SUPPOSE that, fifteen or twenty centuries hence, there should be remaining some two or three authentic biographies of Napoleon Bonaparte. Suppose that in one of them, written by an admiring Frenchman, it should be said of him: "He was a very God among his soldiers—adoring millions prostrated themselvs before him—he took in the nations of the earth at a glance. His will was omnipotent." Suppose that in another of these biographies, written by a bigoted English Tory, it should be said of him: "He was a very fiend incarnate—the prince of darkness never let loose upon earth a more fearful angel of destruction." Suppose that, though, elsewhere throughout these books Napoleon was perpetually talked of as a man, and the books, taken as a whole, make utter nonsense upon the supposition that he was not a man, there yet should arise a set of critics who maintained that Napoleon was a divine being, and another set who maintained that he was a demon. These two classes of critics would aptly represent the generosity of modern theologians and biblical interpreters.—Dr. N. P. Peabody.

A MAN'S charity to those who differ from him upon great and difficult questions will be in the ratio of his own knowledge of them—the more knowledge the more charity.

BIBLE SERVICE: For Earnest Inquirers Only: Aiding poor sinners everywhere to confess the hellish torments that must enforce human progress in the near future; Also to vindicate the Supremacy of Gospel Truth—"King of Kings, and Lord of Lords;" and lastly to illustrate the joyous rescue and "glorious liberty" of God's people in the Holy War now impending, apparently between Capital and Labor, but infallibly between Christ and Antichrist. Send stamp for return papers.
Address, "REWARD," 710 Broadway, New York.

CHRISTIANITY VS. HUMANITY.

GEORGE CHAINEY
will lecture on this subject
AT GERMAN MASONIC TEMPLE,
220 EAST FIFTEENTH ST.,
Rooms of the Liberal Club),
SUNDAY EVENING, AUGUST 26,
AT EIGHT O'CLOCK.
TICKETS, - FIFTY CENTS
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE
"WILSONIA,"
INVENTED BY
WILLIAM WILSON,
MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS. AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.
80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N.Y.
63 Broadway, Brooklyn, E. D.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of disease as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and have been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

MR. WILSON, Dear Sir: Please send me a few circulars in regard to your curativ garments. I hav been telling several parties about them. I hav some friends who hav used them with great and pleasing results, and I would like to promote their use.
Yours, THOMAS W. BREWER,
Manasquan, N. J.

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to
DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to
DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

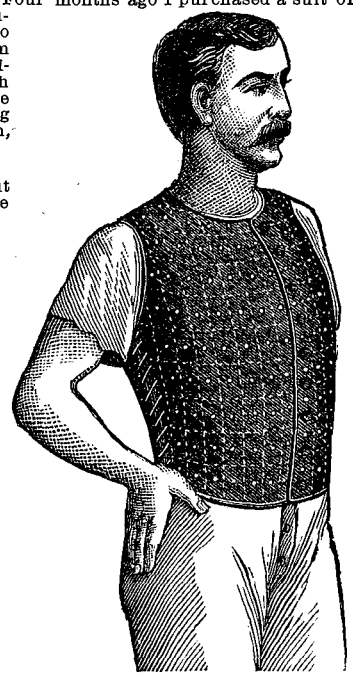
Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.



Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothing for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the mone if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information,
Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York. N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 35. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, September 1, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

EVANGELIST WEBER preached at the Lakeside Ohio, camp-meeting one day recently. While expounding the gospel a wicked fly, supposed to be in the secret service of Satan, walked down Weber's throat and nearly choked him to death.

How much help the Church of England Temperance Society gets from some of the church papers may be gathered from the reeling remark of the Church Times, that "the physiology[hic], economics [hic], ethics [hic], and theology [hic] of the orators [hic] of total abstinence" [hic] is "clotted nonsense" [hic].

WHEN William Black, who wrote the socialistic novel "Sunrise," was asked if there were any Internationalists in London, he replied that he really did not know, but he thought not. A Boston Herald correspondent says there are many of them, and by Internationalists he does not mean the ordinary members of the conventional English workingmen's Socialistic organizations, but the more picturesque refugees from France, Italy, Germany, and Russia.

THE Rev. A. Stewart Walsh, of this city, last Sunday evening gave an opinion of a nice girl. She was religious, the minister said; she had a mission in city, hospital, or church; she had common sense; she concentrated her powers on the moral advancement of humanity; she was not above work; she did not get her schooling from the novel of to-day; she was not a reader of George Eliot's productions. Mr. Walsh will wait a long time before he finds this sort of combination.

DISORDER was caused in a Maine temperance camp-meeting by the assertion that, after being a sot for many years, and making numerous vain efforts to abstain from drink, a man succeeded, through the help of tobacco. The presiding elder advised the man to stop using the weed, too, and the response was the lighting of a pipe. Smoking was against the rule, and the smoker was ordered off the grounds; but he was a chief promoter of the meeting, and his defiance was supported by a majority.

THE Summer School of Christian philosophers held a meeting one day last week in the Presbyterian church at Richfield Springs, N. Y. During the services lightning struck the Universalist church in the same town. The philosophers had advertised to meet in the latter building, but consider it a dispensation of providence that they altered their designs in favor of the Presbyterian church. The Universalists believe that the bolt was intended for the Summer School, but was misled by the advertisment.

THE Rev. J. B. Bonar, of the Congregational church in New Milford, Conn., resigned on Sunday, the 19th ult. Mr. Bonar has been preaching, it is said, very powerful and scholarly sermons, but it has been ascertained that they were not his own, but selected entirely from printed books of sermons. A member of the congregation discovered the plagiarism, and on Sunday, the 13th, he brought the printed book and followed the preacher word for word. Mr. Bonar offered as an explanation and apology that his wife was in poor health, and he was so pressed for time that he could not write. If he had told them in advance that the sermons were not his own he says he feared it would create dissatisfaction. His resignation was accepted.

THE Catholics of Ceylon hav the genuin Christian spirit. Last Easter Sunday had been selected by the Buddhists of Colombo for a big procession, and permission was granted by the police authorities. The report got abroad that they were about to parody the Christian religion by carrying along the street in front of the Catholic cathedral a cross with a monkey impaled upon it. This was more than sufficient to rouse the fury of the Catholic populace, and in a few moments alarm bells were rung, the Christians gathered by thousands, the Buddhists were dispersed, and all their processional appurtenances of flags, banners, drums, mock figures of giants, etc., were totally demolished in the very face of the police who were ordered to accompany the demonstration.

THE authorities of Geneva hav forbid the sale of the Salvation Army's books on the street, and at Aubonne, canton of Vaud, two members of the "army" hav been fined forty dollars each for selling the Salvation hymns. As to who is responsible for this petty persecution our esteemed contemporary, the Independent, from whose columns we learn the above facts, is considerably mixed. In one paragraph it lays it to the Protestants; in another it attributes it to the result of the widespread unbelief of the Swiss people. We can settle it. The act is Christian, and must come from one of the branches of the Christian church. The first case of Freethinkers persecuting for opinions' sake has yet to be recorded.

AMONG the passengers of a crowded steamboat was a man with delirium tremens. In the midst of his frightful visions and cries for help he turned to his attendants and begged piteously for a Bible. One was carried to the stateroom of the frantic sufferer, and eagerly seized by him. Then, laying it on the bed above his breast, with a wild laugh, he exclaimed, "There, devils, you are beaten now! you can't get over that book." A strange calm came over him as he lay with his wild eye fixed intently on the book. It might be expected that a religious paper would hav the brazen hardihood to tell this for a true story, and the Congregationalist therefore surprises but few in relating it as an incident of Sound travel.

MANY of our readers may not know that God has a dislike for sealing wax, plaster of Paris, and cement. We believe he prefers lead. The Archbishop of Cambray has discovered that five hundred portable altars in his diocese hav had the "sepulchers," which hold the relics, sealed with the ungodly substances above mentioned, and that God is therefore dissatisfied with their consecration. But reconsecrating all these altars would be a severe task for him, and he has petitioned the pope to let him, or a simple priest, as his proxy, reconsecrate them with some abridged rite. To which, through the congregation of rites, the pope has given gracious consent. The relics are to be replaced in a proper way; and it will be sufficent to touch the stone with holy oil, and repeat the prayer "Consecretur," then three grains of incense shall be burnt and the cover fastened on with another prayer, "Deus qui ex omnium," "and nothing more," adds the gracious edict.—Independent.

THE Mexican press does not love Protestant missionaries. The El Lunes prints, with cordial editorial approval, the following open letter to the inspector-general of the city of Mexico: "Prominent among the adventurers who hav drifted into Mexico are the religious evangelizers in a mission to deceive the ignorant masses with the bribe of a crust of bread, whom, having been enlisted in their service, they propose to use in general robbery. Keep a good watch on the Protestant church of Jesus, and be convinced of the truth of my statements. Inquire into the antecedents of some of the propagandists of this sect, and you will surely find more than one of their names registered in the records of your police. Post yourself on the quality of the education, and what it leads to, with which these ministers are saturating the minds of the young orphans, of whose conversion they make display. It is the female portion of the community that the Protestants corrupt, leading them by vice and crime to become their slaves. Do you wish to free them from their yoke? If you do, bear in mind that article 33 of our code, which guards against pernicious foreigners, meets the case." Another journal of two days previous invites the attention of the same official "to the Protestant church known as the church of Jesus, and to Bishop Riley of that church." This is probably only sectarian jealousy, as the Mexicans are well known to be sunk very deep in the slough of Catholicism. Protestantism could be no worse. But these religious amenities are instructiv reading for the Freethinking onlooker.

ANOTHER case of insanity for which the church is responsible has come to light in Greenpoint, Long Island. Edward B. McIntosh, for years a zealous member of the First M. E. church of that place, is at present employed in making designs for houses to be occupied by the workmen on the Panama Canal. On Sunday last, during a session of the Sunday-school in which Mr. McIntosh is a teacher, he suddenly jumped up and made a determined effort to strike Mr. B. E. Talmage, the superintendent. In answ to interrogations as to what caused him to attempt to injure Mr. Talmage, he said it was a commission given him by God. There were 144,000 of the chosen people who were to be marked with a cross of blood, and he was deputized by the Almighty to discriminate the elect and mark them for their future reward. He talked rationally enough on all other subjects, but when he was touched on the Bible and the work he was destined to perform he would act and talk strangely again. It was deemed prudent to hav him watched closely for fear he would do himself and others bodily harm. A few months ago he attracted attention by getting up in a prayer-meeting and making a tirade on masonry.

THE New York Evening Telegram of last Saturday contains the following notice of Brother Watts: "The noted English Freethinker, editor, and author, Mr. Charles Watts, is now on his way to this country, on board of the steamship Wisconsin, which sailed from Liverpool on Saturday and is expected here on Tuesday next. It was the intention of the members of the Liberal League of this city to giv Mr. Watts a grand reception upon his arrival, but his engagement to speak at the coming convention of Freethinkers at Rochester on Wednesday will prevent the demonstration. He will be the guest of Mr. Macdonald, editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, No. 33 Clinton place. He will remain in America about four months, and will lecture in all the principal cities on questions of Freethought. Mr. Watts was born at Bristol, February 27, 1836, of very religious parents. He was brought up in the Methodist church, of which his father was a pastor. At the age of fourteen years he made his debut upon the platform as a lecturer on temperance. At the age of fifteen years he severed his connection with all orthodox associations. The following year he went to London, and there met many leaders of Freethought. In 1864 he joined his brother, John Watts, in the printing business, and became sub-editor of the National Reformer, a weekly journal. The first public address on Freethought was made on the birthday of Thomas Paine in 1864. Two years later, on the death of his brother, Charles was left proprietor and editor of the National Reformer. Charles Bradlaugh, however, became editor at the request of Mr. Watts, who remained sub-editor. In 1877 a dispute arose between the two men, and Watts withdrew from the paper. He was elected special lecturer to the National Secular Society in 1869. At the death of Austin Holyoake, the printing house at No. 17 Johnson court, Fleet street, then the depot of Freethought literature, fell into his hands. Three years later he started the Secular Review at No. 84 Fleet street, which he still publishes. In company with others, Charles Watts, in 1878, established the British Secular Union, of which the Marquis of Queensberry, Professor Pasteur, and Ernest Renan are vice presidents. In politics he is a Liberal. When it was supposed that a Member of Parliament from Hull would retire as representativ a few years since, Watts was invited to stand as a candidate from that town. The member, however, changed his mind and remained in Parliament. He has written a large number of books. Last year he made a trip through this country and was warmly received everywhere, but could not fulfil all the engagements to lecture, hence his coming visit."

News of the Week.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COLERIDGE, of England, is visiting America.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR and party are strolling through the wild West on horseback.

A TORNADO in Minnesota last week is known to hav destroyed thirty or forty lives.

FRANK JAMES, brother of Jesse James, the Missouri outlaw, is on trial for his various misdeeds.

THE play of Oscar Wilde, the esthete, just brought out in New York, is pronounced a failure by the critics.

THE county treasurer of Roscommon county, Mich., has disappeared. An absence of $18,000 of county funds is simultaneously noted.

FRANCE is at war with Annam, a small country in the south of Asia. In a battle last Saturday seven hundred Annamites were killed.

A COLLISION occurred between two steamers, the Woodburn and St. Germain, in the English channel last Sunday. Twenty-three lives were lost.

COUNT DE CHAMBORD, the French Bourbon, died on the 24th ult. If France had remained a monarchy he would hav been king by "divine right."

DR. GINSBURG, in a report to the managers of the British Museum, declares that the Shapira manuscript of the book of Deuteronomy is a forgery.

Two men entered the house of Mrs. Ferrill, near Wellesville, Ohio, one day last week, forced her into a chair with a drawn revolver, cut off her luxuriant hair, and fled.

EX-GOVERNOR HOLLY and many others of Lakeville, Conn., hav petitioned the Catholic priest of that town to remove a wooden crucifix from in front of his church. The priest refused the petition.

CAPT. RHODES, who had promised to swim the Niagara whirlpool and rapids where Capt. Webb lost his life, has so far failed to attempt that achievement. He now sets the 10th of September as the day on which the experiment will be made.

A HUGE timber tow in the form of a raft has just arrived in New York from New Brunswick. The tow is 800 feet long and 35 feet wide. It is made up of about 6,000 65-foot logs, and left St. Johns, N. B., August 7th, being towed by two steamers.

Two foreign bruisers, Mitchell of England and Slade of Australia, are training for a prize-fight in Kansas. The governor of Kansas declares that the fight shall not take place in that state, and will hav the pugilists arrested if they make any preparations for the meeting there.

LAST Sunday was one of the best days of the season at the summer resorts in this vicinity. The slight attendance at these places this summer, caused by the cool weather, has been attributed by the clergy to a reviving respect for the Sabbath. One warm Sunday, however, was sufficient to dispel this delusion.

THE people of New York are getting weary of the Sunday-morning rattle and clangor of church bells, and Mr. Jackson S. Schultz has appeared before the health board as spokesman for the complainants. He will lay before the board affidavits and letters setting forth the injurious effects of the noise upon sick people.

THE English Parliament was prorogued on Saturday last. The queen's speech, so-called, was read as usual. The document closed with a remark to the effect that the writer trusted the favor of providence might uniformly guide the lords and gentlemen to promote the object of her "constant solicitude"—the welfare and happiness of her people. The people of Ireland will regard this expression of sentiment as something like a joke.

Communications.

Science, Knowledge, Reason, Again.

I rise to explain. I hope not to be prolix, but Mr. Putnam falls into a few errors in his last paper, in stating my views, which I think he himself will be glad to hav corrected. He has, I think, made a very sincere effort to state the Universological position fairly and correctly, and for much that he has said I hav to thank him; but he has, very naturally, incurred some misapprehensions.

Our point of departure in this discussion was not the origin of knowledge, nor yet the fundamental relation of matter and mind. Those subjects hav come in incidentally. The point was the true nature and definition of science. We shall see presently how important it is that we should "stick to the point" in this primitiv sense, as simply that will save us from supposing unnecessary difficulties in coming to a mutual understanding. Mr. Putnam speaks of profound differences of opinion between him and me. He is mistaken. It is only with one part of Mr. Putnam, put for the whole, that there is any disagreement on my part. When the whole of Mr. Putnam is present he and I agree perfectly. In other words, he agrees with me when he agrees with himself; and it is his misfortune, and mine, when he fails to do that.

All this supposed difference between us (on the points he is now arguing) comes from the single fact that he has two different definitions of science, and that he adheres to neither, but passes unconsciously from the one to the other. The first of these definitions, propounded by himself, was promptly agreed to by me, by Mr. Wakeman, and, curiously enough, by everybody else in the Colloquium, and by everybody in this discussion. That is the two simple words, Systematized Knowledge. But throughout this last article of his, Mr. Putnam has lapsed and fallen back upon an idea and an implied definition of science which I hav been fighting from the first, and which he logically abandoned when he propounded his new, simple, and wholly acceptable definition. Mr. Putnam now says: "The old transcendental position is this—that mind comes first, and makes matter. The scientific position is the exact opposit of this, namely, that matter is the original substance, and that mind is the result of certain conditions of this substance. There is no other conclusion to which science can come. Therefore science is driven to the conclusion that mind is not an entity." Having stated the Universological "betweenity," he adds, "But I still say that this is not the affirmation of science," etc. Again, "However, Mr. Andrews's 'Supremacy' [of the Reason] is not quite so bad as this. He believes in conforming to the outward, to a certain extent, at least. Still, however, he is not a scientific rationalist. Science studies matter directly. It denies that mind is equally eternal with matter. It denies that mind is an entity," etc.

Now in every one of these uses of the terms science and scientific, and in all the other and numerous uses of these words in Mr. Putnam's last article, he has gone completely away from the simple and satisfactory meaning and definition of Science agreed upon by us all, viz., Systematized Knowledge, and has used the word in another and very different sense, which is a simple begging of the question in respect to all the issues in dispute.

By Science he now and here means Systematized-Knowledge-of-a-certain-sort, and got-at-in-a-certain-way, which he and those who happen to believe with him suppose, in this year of the world, to be the right sort and the right way. If it has been discovered, or shall be discovered next year, that that sort of knowledge is only one of several sorts, just as absolute, as knowledge, as itself, and that that way of getting at it is only one of several ways of getting at knowledge equally good; and if the new sorts and ways should be ever so well systematized, they would be Systematized Knowledge, without still being Science—under this purely dogmatic conception and definition. Science, instead of Systematized Knowledge at large, a catholic and magnificent conception, which includes knowledge of whatsoever sort, and got at in whatsoever way—provided simply that it be knowledge, and properly systematized—is here narrowed down to a mere sectarian, local, and temporary theory, the fashion of the hour, in a world full of changes, and in no respect more changeable than in this matter of philosophic theories. Suppose that a chemist six months hence should find that mind, instead of being a mere function, as supposed by this theory, is a substance as real as oxygen; this fact, hardly more surprising if it were so, than the telephone, would become at once a portion of Systematized Knowledge, and so enter into and take its right place in the domain of science, under Mr. Putnam's first definition; but by his second definition, as fixed by his statements, it could never, to the end of time, be science, because "Science" has decided that mind is a mere function.

Now, if Mr. Putnam will forever abandon and renounce his narrow sectarian and false definition, and cease to try to limit science to a particular class of facts, got at by a particular method, and adhere to his own just, beautiful, and every way admirable definition—Systematized Knowledge—all those "profound differences of opinion" which he seems to see looming up between him and me will hav forever disappeared.

It is a mistake, altogether, this attempt to put Science into antithesis with Transcendentalism, or into antithesis with Metaphysics or Philosophy, or with any other thing, except with ignorance (ne-science), or with unsystematized knowledge. Who is wise enough to pretend to know and dictate what treasures of knowledge are yet to come out of Transcendentalism or Metaphysics, or any other field of thought occupying the human mind, even though they may hav temporarily fallen into disrepute as not the best highway to be traveled? Agnostics are new to their own Agnosticism, and hav hardly got the hang of that perpetual modesty which their name inculcates. A retrograde and dogmatic ban on any order of intellectual pursuits which commands the high intelligences of mankind, is hardly becoming in men who begin by confessing themselvs intellectual ignoramuses. Pray don't mistake me; it is not their confession of ignorance which I dissent from, but their subsequent assumptions of knowledge, where such assumptions are dangerous. I mean no disrespect to Agnostics. I am an Agnostic myself, in many things; but I strive, then, to keep myself true to the character.

"There is not the slightest evidence," says Mr. Putnam, "that mind has ever existed apart from matter." On the other hand, it is just as true: That there is not the slightest evidence that matter has ever existed apart from mind—except an inference made by and through the mind itself. Now if the mind has happened to hav made a mistake on the subject, then we know that mind exists, and hav no knowledge whatever that matter exists. This is the position of the pure idealists (Mr. John Fiske, I believe, included), who insist that just this mistake has been committed; and that while we hav evidence of the existence of mind, we hav none whatever (only a mistaken inference) of the existence of matter. Mr. Putnam begs the question and decides in favor of the Materialists, and goes farther, and ignores his own definition of science, and assumes a new and defectiv one, and pronounces all that is held by one party to that metaphysical controversy to be science, and all that is held on the other side, or by anybody else, on any other side, he dogmatically decides to be not-science (ne-science, ignorance); i. e, "we and our side know it all and you are ignorant." Universology comes in, unfortunately, as the third party, and falls under the same ban, as pure ignorance, for no other reason than because it is not the same as Materialism. Universology has in a great sense nothing whatever to trouble itself about in this controversy between Materialists and Mentalists; but would, if they would stop their metaphysical din and clatter long enough to attend to and understand it, explain them to each other, justify both in a measure, and settle their dispute. Mr. Putnam says rightly it is a "betweenity;" which it is, precisely as a judge on the bench is a betweenity as respects the clamorous lawyers and their clients on either side.

"Giv certain conditions of matter and you hav mind;" so say Mr. Putnam and the Materialists. Giv certain conditions of mind and you hav matter; so say the idealists or mentalists. Mr. Putnam, having rightly said that whatsoever we really come to know on either side (or any side) is science, then turns round, and now says that only whatsoever we come to know on or in favor of one of the two sides is science; and that whatsoever we come to know on or in favor of the other side (or any third side) is ignorance or ne-science (a reductio ad absurdum). Universology holds the third or middle position, and despite the dogmatic a priori metaphysical dictum of our anti-metaphysical critic, we, as Universologists, shall continue to assert it not only as science but as the higher and governing science in the world.

But let us understand what Universology really has to say of and what it really has to do with this controversy between Objectiv Materialists and Subjectiv Mentalists. Let us take our departure from Mr. Putnam's next statement. "Matter, then, is eternal, and mind is but part of its changes," or matter first and mind sequential; to which the idealist replies, Mind is eternal and matter is but a part of its changes; or mind first and matter secondary or sequential. Mr. Putnam adds: "Universology takes neither one nor the other of these radically opposit positions, but 'a betwixt and a between' position; that is, it affirms the equal eternity of mind and matter. Matter does not produce mind and mind does not produce matter. The life of each is in itself, and they simply act together in time and space, commingling with an inscrutable and wondrous affinity. Both are entities, original causes in the infinit universe of life, and human consciousness is 'the bright consummate flower' of their blending activity. I think Mr. Andrews will accept this as a fair statement of the fundamental affirmation of Universology concerning mind and matter. It is a beautiful doctrin, I admit; far better than the old transcendentalism," etc.

I do admit the general and proximate correctness of this terse and lucid statement; and I am grateful for its candor and concessivness. But its correctness is still only proximate. It is at this point that I am sure that Mr. Putnam will be, in turn, grateful to me for giving additional information on the subject. If driven to the necessity of taking an affirmativ position in respect to the eternity of any thing, that which is thus summarized by Mr. Putnam would, it is true, be the position upon which the Universologist would certainly fall back as alone tenable; and he often propounds it as his position, where the opportunity does not exist to explain farther. He assumes it because it seems that equally good reasons can be urged by Materialist and Mentalist, and that neither can prove his assertion on either side; and because the Universologist called on, on the spur of the occasion, prefers to cut the knot to attempt to untie it. But, given the opportunity to explain, he would state himself thus:

The important point, the core and center of Universological interest, concerning mind and matter, is an entirely new one, wholly apart from the older controversy, and relates to the relations between the two in a wondrous net-work of particulars—just now for the first time discovered, and constituting the new and the higher science—and not at all involving the question of which is first, matter or mind; or whether one, either, or both of them is eternal or not eternal. We Universologists say, "A curse on both your houses!" in such a controversy, and only want to be rid of it, in order to get to our work, and be permitted to show what we hav discovered and hav to teach. If left to our own courses, therefore, we should never raise one of those (objectionably metaphysical) questions. But, coming forward and trying to teach this net-work of related phenomena between the two spheres, we find, to our vexation and dismay, that the minds of the people, and especially of the thinkers, are all "chock-full" of ideas relating to these old and nearly senseless controversies, and that we can't open our mouths before they suppose that they know all about us; that they can "put" us in our place; and that the first thing to do, before they can go a single step with us in learning the new science, is to fight out certain old battles which hav been waged for at least four thousand years, and which it will take more than that time to settle. So terribly inveterate is this vicious habit of mind, that I find myself almost compelled to resort only to children and the common people, who never read philosophy nor know anything of science. They don't begin by thinking that they know all about me. In a word, our ablest and best-informed men are the biggest fools that exist anywhere, in respect to a doctrin really new and profound; and I almost never undertake to communicate anything to them of these new discoveries but I retire from the effort with something too much bordering on disgust and contempt. About the best I hav met with, of this sort, is Mr. Putnam, and you see for yourselvs how badly he behaves. I will say for him, however, that he is nearly the only one of the controversialists over Universology who has ever shown the slightest desire to understand me or it and to restate its position with any fairness. Even he professes to know beforehand that it isn't science. Excuse this fling in the midst of a grave statement.

To resume. While, as I hav said, if forced to do what we hav no desire to do—to decide, beforehand, the whole mind-and-matter question, as to origins, priority, etc., dogmatically or as a theory—we Universologists should fall back upon nearly the statement made for us by Mr. Putnam, though statement is in no way essential to our general scientific purposes, we can just as well, and should by preference, for the nonce, assume the Agnostic position, and say that we neither know nor care which is first or last, what is eternal or what isn't, etc. It doesn't matter one fig, for our main purpose, whether it be assumed that matter is before mind or mind before matter, or whether one, or either, or both, is (or are) eternal or not; whether the one is the function of the other, or the other of the one; or whether each is in turn the function of the other. It is enough that they both exist, in some sense, and that we hav discovered a wondrous net-work of detailed relationship between them (the same which we find between all the departments of each).

Universology has come to stay, and it can adapt itself equally well to any one of the older theories with regard to the ultimate constitution of the universe—precisely because it is science, and science holds good, no matter what the general hypothesis may be in respect to the group of particulars which it classifies. We Universologists are in the fix of the inventor of a new machine, who has tested its work and who is desirous of explaining and introducing it, but who is met at the threshold by an old dispute which has been occupying the world for ages as to whether a perpetual motion is possible, or as to whether water power or wind or animal muscle is the right power to run machines by, or as to whether a machine must stand on the solid earth, or whether it may float on a raft, or even exist aloft in a balloon; those whom he addresses insisting that one or all of these preliminary questions must be settled by abstract argument before they will even look at the actual working of the new machine—which works, and will work, equally well whether a perpetual motion is possible or not, whatever the power applied, and whether the platform of the machine be the land, the earth, or the air. It is especially provoking to be met and balked by these preliminary, speculativ, and metaphysical questions, objected and urged by a set of men calling themselvs "Positivists" and the scientists par excellence, and who refuse for a dozen or twenty years to even look at the new science, because they know beforehand that it is all wrong, unless the preliminary questions hav all been argued out to the bitter end, and settled in favor of the side of each of them which these anti-metaphysical metaphysicians suppose at the present time to be the right one. In another decade they themselvs may be over on the other side. Meantime all that we want is to escape from the hulla-baloo, and be permitted to go on and demonstrate the latest and most important of all scientific discoveries. Still, we can't shake these bothering preliminary objectors off altogether, and hav to giv some time to the work of silencing their batteries, which in another sense is time utterly wasted. If they would simply consent to be sensible, we need hav no further discussion upon these impertinent if not absurd preliminaries; and they would spend their time, instead, in studying Universology, and criticising it, if they then could criticise it, from the inside vantage ground of knowledge, instead of standing outside and barking at it from the point of view of prior ignorance and prejudice.

So, on this high ground of a priori assumption, Mr. Putnam decides ex cathedra—not modestly, as befits his present view of the subject, uninformed as he is, but dictatorially — that, I am "not a scientific rationalist." What does he mean? He means, if I understand him, first, that I hav no true comprehension of Science; in other words, am not a scientist at all, under his present narrowed and crampy meaning of science. This is, namely, Objectiv or Outer-world or Material Science, conducted by the Observational Method—which we will call, for short, Objectiv Science. What this must mean, therefore, is that I am not a competent judge of my own work, for want of being versed in the Objectiv or Ordinary Sciences; while it is assumed that my critics are competent in that particular way. Now these personal comparisons are not to my taste; but when one is forced to them, one must not shrink from them. My own conviction is, and I believe it the unanimous opinion of my pupils, that I am pre-eminently competent on precisely the ground which Mr. Putnam and his school profess to occupy, and in a good degree do occupy; that I shall, for many years be my own severest critic—from the objectiv field of Science; and that he and his could not be doing better for themselvs than by coming assiduously into my school to hav their education completed, on their own ground. It is the same mistake on his part that I hav previously pointed out, if he would only take heed; that of supposing that a person cannot be this or that, because he is something else; whereas, he may be this or that, and also something else.

But to the advanced Universologist this whole assumption and objection is ridiculous and absurd. For him there is first and foremost (historically) Objectiv Science, the whole of what Mr. Putnum now means by "Science," taken bodily. Secondly, there is Subjectiv (Mental, Ideological) Science, which these Scientosilists tell us must be ruled out of "Science;" then there is Interjectiv Science, the new special Universological contribution, which givs the heretofore unknown marvelous detailed net-work of minute relationship between the Subjectiv and the Objectiv (between mind and matter); and in fine the Conjectiv, or Universology itself, as embracing all these. Of course, therefore, it is simply impossible for anybody to be a Universologist, except in proportion as he is first and foremost a rational Scientist in precisely Mr. Putnam's present narrow use of the term—i. e., an Objectiv Scientist. But what is the use of my repeating all this, what I hav said before and again? There would be no use, for those who do not wish to understand it—their minds being, it sometimes seems, fatally preoccupied; but some of the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER will gain a new idea from each new statement. The same answer holds good in respect to another half-concession and half-objection, originating with Wakeman and copied by others. Oh, yes! it is said, Mr. Andrews is the great language man. He wields the English language like a great master, none, perhaps, his equal; even his new language, Alwato, is probably all right, because we know that he is so competent in that sphere; but then in the Philosophy of Science, which is our domain, Mr. Andrews is always, and forever, and radically, wrong. What a pity he won't confine himself to the language business! Whereas, every advanced Universologist knows that the language and the philosophy fit each other precisely as the hand and the glove fit; that they inevitably stand or fall together; and that it is impossible to hav the one without the other. So, within the ring, this objection is the laughing stock of pupil and professor, as being an open confession of ignorance, and as a standing warning to themselvs against criticising what they know nothing about.

I cannot consume your space by a full answer to Mr. Putnam's later utterances on the Supremacy of the Reason; but allow me a few words. What he says of the incapacity of the human reason "to construct the universe," or even to construe the universe, if acting alone, or when too much withdrawn from Observation of outer phenomena, is all true, and is very well said. The fact that I am continuously affirming is that they are both indispensable. But that fact conceded, the question recurs, Which ranks the other in any given scale of comparison? To which I reply that while, in the scale of Nature's hierarchy, Objectiv Observation—the Fact—outranks the other, or is paramount, and so even from the point of view of the Natural Sciences; per contra that in the scale of Science's own hierarchy—as counter-posited to mere Nature, Reflectiv Reason—the idea—outranks its other, and is paramount. Then as to the still remaining question, Which of these two scales or hierarchies outranks the other in the Universal Hierarchy? that is a question for Universologists alone; and it is really just as much a folly to broach or argue it with non-Universologists as it would be to broach and argue a chemical question with non-chemists.

"However," adds Mr. Putnam, Mr. Andrews's "Supremacy is not quite so bad as this. He believes in conforming to the outward, to a certain extent at least." Yes, he believes in conforming to the outward to the utmost extent—to the extent of a minute examination of all the details of the outer world or cosmos, to a degree never heretofore thought of, even by Mr. Putnam, or those he calls "Scientists," or scientific rationalists — this being the fact which makes Universologists and Alwatoists so superior to them, upon their own ground. He believes—that is, I believe, or rather know, still further—(and herein is the core of the Universological discovery), that in this most minute, as well as in the broadest, conformity to, and prior acquaintance with, outer phenomena (in order to conform), we are at the same time conforming to the inward law of reason (in the same minute and the same general way)—by virtue of a newly perceived, subtle, and all-permeating analogy, which unites them. This is what we want to get the opportunity to show, and can never get it, because our critics, who should be our pupils, are in part full of preliminary questions which must be discussed, and in part know all about it beforehand.

"The method of Universology," says Mr. Putnam, is this: to get at the 'infinit reason,' and through that to the material universe." This is true only in half-part (or third), and shows only a partial comprehension of the method of the new Scientific Organon by the critic. The Universological method is equally, or just as much, the reverse of this, to get at the material universe by the closest observation, and through that to the ("infinit") reason. It is the duplex method which is the distinctiv feature of Universology; and the turning from the one to the other for tests and confirmations comes under our formula of TERMINAL CONVERSION INTO OPPOSITS, and makes the method really triplex. By reversing the poles in every case, we do for every problem in science precisely what the boy does when he "proves" his sum in arithmetic.

True, that as all the facts of the one world are the analogs in detail of all the facts of the other world, the human mind might, if it had infinit competency, get at all the details of each world by studying those of the other world; and this (or one-half of this) is what Mr. Putnam supposes we claim to be able to do. But we claim no such thing. We know and proclaim just the opposit. We know the weaknesses and limitations of the human mind as well as we know its godlike capacities. And because of those limitations it is indispensable to work our double-acting mental machinery both ways. Mr. Putnam will, I think, understand this statement, and correct his first crude impression of the matter.

Mr. Putnam repeats and harps on the phrase "infinit reason," and quotes it as if from me. I hav, to the best of my recollection and belief, used no such phrase. Does Mr. Putnam use that phrase, doubtless unconsciously, to foist on me a theological imputation, and so to invoke the odium theologicum? I hav not said a word of, nor implied any, infinit reason outside of "man himself," except as we find that same reason crystallized, as it were, in the outer cosmos. As a something which then permeates the two, making them like two halves of a mountain reft asunder by a convulsion, each giving a complete impress of the other, he may, if he chooses, call it "infinit" reason, but I hav expressly avoided the lugging in of this idea of infinity; and he, not I, must take the responsibility of it. Of course it was a mere mistake quoting it from me. It rested so in his memory. I do not for a moment suppose that Mr. Putnam would unfairly and purposely attribute to me what I had not said.

One further notice of Mr. Putnam on the special subject of his last paper—The Supremacy of Reason.

"How," he says, "does Science use reason? Not to bolster up any preconceived notions, but to discover the actual facts of nature and life." True. "It uses reason as the humble interpreter of the universe." True. "Reason must always depend on fact; therefore how can it be supreme? It is the fact that is supreme." Here I stop my admission, and rise again to explain. Of fact, of nature, of the universe itself, we know absolutely nothing, except as they are interpreted to us through our several faculties of investigation. These faculties are mainly, 1. Observation by the Senses; 2. Reason, critically reinvestigating Observation. The mistake of Mr. Putnam—a very natural one, but a mistake still—is in assuming that our Observation of Nature is Nature, which is not the case. It needs the joint action of all (or both) our faculties to tell us what Nature is. Observation givs us only a first crude report. Reason says: "Your report can't be correct, because its details are contradictory. Go back and look again, and make another and more cautious report. Behave yourself this time, and see that you make less blunders." The obedient Observation goes back to his work like a servant sent on an errand, or put to his task by a master, and does his work over again and reports and submits, and re-reports and re-submits his work to his superior, until the superior or supreme umpire in the whole process announces himself satisfied. Then, and not till then, the servant is allowed to rest. This is the true scientific use and office of this reason, the reason being absolutely paramount, Supreme over the other and assistant faculty of the mind. "He sayeth to one, Go, and he goeth, and to another, Come, and he cometh," and so is Supreme; not over "fact," but over Crude Observation, and all mere Observation in the survey of facts, which is a very different matter.

But now, it is true—and this again is what has deceived Mr. Putnam—that Reason, as the monarch of the mind, has faults of its own, such as pertain to monarchy, with its natural self-sufficiency and arrogance, and that it is apt to get impatient of the slow-going and short-coming service of Observation, and to cast itself loose from its necessary support by observation, and set up a supposed authority independent of such service; to strike out, in a word, "on its own hook," without waiting for the indispensable reports of the senses. It is then that the reason undertakes to make the world after its own pattern, without correction from observation; and to this usurpation of the reason Mr. Putnam is right to object with all his argument and eloquence. But he confounds the usurpation with the normal function of the Reason; which normal function is one, still, of supremacy, within the proper domain of science, over crude Observation and the action of the senses. Quite rightly, therefore, Mr. Putnam says: "The man of science most deeply recognizes this relation of human reason to what is," or rather, in this case, to what seems, to sense and observation, to be. "He does not reason out what he thinks ought to be; he observes and studies and reflects" (that is, uses his reason) "on nature" (or rather on his first crude impression of nature) itself, and however disagreeable the conclusion he accepts it (by and through his reason). "Man's reason," he adds, "is the loyal servant of nature [but not of our first crude conception of nature, here put carelessly for nature]; and only by the most absolute submission to nature [not to our first unreasoned view of nature] can reason achieve any triumph whatsoever; and to do this it must advance from fact to fact [from one sense-report of fact to another], and it cannot transcend the facts given to it in experience;" but it can and does constantly transcend our first crude impressions of the facts; and it is this which makes it the higher experience, and givs it its Supremacy. The "fact," I repeat, must not be confounded with the testimony of the senses; which is that which, only as corrected by the reason, will yield us the fact. The Universe must not be taken to be what the senses represent it as being; but that representation as revised and pronounced upon by this reason; which is thus the judge in the last resort, and so paramount and supreme—among the processes of investigation, the field of science, which is the matter in contention.

In a transcendent and ulterior meaning of the terms, I hav, then, no difficulty in admitting that Fact, Nature, Universe, are paramount over Reason alone—because we then mean Fact, etc., as embracing both Observation and Reason—and it is then merely saying that the whole is greater than any of its parts.

There is still another sense in which my critics are right in asserting the supremacy of observation and the senses; and this may seem to giv them much comfort; but if they will also admit my view (as affirmed on this occasion, for I affirm theirs also), and reconcile the two, they may make the most of it. It is true, then, that even among the means of investigation, Observation (with the Senses) is paramount over the reason, in the same inverse sense as that in which in republican countries (America peculiarly) the people are said to be sovereign, as against monarchy or their own elected rulers. All that I mean to affirm, then, is that the Reason is paramount or supreme in the sense analogous with that in which the monarch or the elected ruler is paramount, sovereign, or supreme over the people. This is the more cosmopolitan sense in which the term Supreme is used. Perhaps my readers and critics will begin to perceive that the question of The Supremacy of Reason is a more complex question than at first blush it seems to be, and that it needs the guidance of a higher and the supreme science to enable us to thread all its intricacies.

I am under great obligations, sincerely so, to Mr. Burlingame, Mr. Craig, Mrs. Macdonald, and perhaps some others, who hav taken the trouble to defend my "intelligibility." Mr. Craig has, it seems to me, hit upon the precise core of the whole difficulty. People at large are intellectually lazy. They do not want to be troubled by anything which will cost them any effort. Hence they call for easy lessons. I am, I believe, never accused of being unintelligible when I am discussing subjects with which other people are familiar. When engaged in expounding new and difficult subjects I do not expect to be understood by those who do not care to know, or who, caring somewhat, are still of that pulpy intellectual consistency themselvs, that they must hav their intellectual food "mummed" for them, i. e., chewed by some toothless old grandmother, who will benevolently fit it in her mouth to be put in theirs.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

Proposed Amendments to the League Constitution.

From Man.

There is a call from all sides to make the National Liberal League more social, more mutually helpful, and more educativ than it now is. It is claimed that Liberals should stand by one another in times of sickness, trial, and lack of employment, and that the local Auxiliaries might be the natural and appropriate agency to secure this result. Christians employ Christians. They patronize their own church brethren; and, as far as they can, boycott all who are not of their faith and order. This is why so many Liberals are silent about Liberalism or openly noisy on the other side, and support churches in whose doctrins they don't believe one word. Now, one remedy for this is to organize the Liberals so thoroughly, so numerously, and so cordially that they will entirely neutralize these church cliques and clans, and take care of each other efficiently and comfortably. We hav published articles in Man, and the general Liberal papers hav published many others, which point out this necessity. Indeed, it has been a complaint against the National Liberal League that it doesn't do just these things—that it comes short in just these important respects.

The managers of the League are perfectly willing to make trial of any plans that are feasible to import more humanity into the League, more providential foresight, more care for its members. To that end they hav framed and codified, out of all the suggestions that hav been made to them, all the articles they hav seen published, and all the demands of social, educativ, and co-operativ Liberalism, a series of proposed amendments to the constitution of the National Liberal League, which will be submitted to the coming congress at Milwaukee. In their rough shape, subject to amendment, they are as follows:

First, Social.—Every Auxiliary League is recommended to hold picnics, excursions, parties, dances, fairs, bazars, sociables, etc., as often as they can make them pleasant and profitable. These social gatherings should be held on Sunday whenever practicable.

Second, Educativ.—1. Every auxiliary shall commence the formation of a library and reading-room, either at its organization or as soon after as it can command the means to secure a few books, tracts, pamphlets, and copies of the Liberal journals.

2. Every auxiliary shall hold a few stated League meetings on Sunday during the year—not necessarily every Sunday, but as often as speakers can be procured, or interest in the attendance kept up.

3. Every auxiliary, where ten or more children can be got together, should establish a Liberal Sunday-school, and take every means to instruct, amuse, and interest the children.

4. Every auxiliary shall develop, instruct, and utilize whatever musical talent may be found in its members, and avail themselvs of music as far as possible, to make their meetings interesting and their Sunday-schools attractiv.

Third, Provident.—1. Every auxiliary shall make every effort, by standing committees or otherwise, to keep all its members employed—see to it that every member has work and pay enough for it to giv him a comfortable support. To this end, those out of employment should giv notice to the officers of his auxiliary and hav his wants stated at its meetings and posted on bulletins in its halls. If these are not effectiv, then to advertise them in the League organs, and Liberal papers. On the other hand, those wishing to employ labor should first giv notice in the same way at the local League meetings or in the papers, before employing elsewhere. And generally Leaguers should see to it and take special pains to keep League men and women employed, particularly those who hav been discharged for their Liberal sentiments.

2. Every auxiliary, when the number of members is sufficient, shall require payment of each member on joining, and periodically afterward, enough to make a benefit fund in which each member shall share by weekly appropriations whenever he or she is sick, out of employment or otherwise disabled from work.

Fourth, Co-operativ.—Every auxiliary is recommended to take subscriptions from its members to form a co-operativ fund with which to buy clothing, provisions, tools, and general merchandise at wholesale on the lowest terms; and then at its stated meetings, or oftener at special meetings, divide or dispose of its goods so purchased to its members at cost, or at the least advance per cent, beyond cost that will cover loss or incidental expenses in addition to the original cost of purchase.

Fifth, Support of the National League.—In order to provide an adequate revenue to the treasury of the National League, to enable it to carry out the requirements of sections 4, 5 and 6 of Article III. of this constitution, and to do other legitimate work of the League, every auxiliary is requested to contribute a certain sum monthly, not less than five cents per month from each one of its members, for the use of the National League. The amount thus collected shall be remitted quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October, by the secretary of the auxiliary to the secretary of the National League.

More Like the Truth.

From the New York News.

The Pittsburgh Daily Post, the New Orleans Times-Democrat, and several other Western and Southern journals, recently published what purported to be a letter from New York, in which it was said that the widow of D. M. Bennett, founder of the Freethinkers' organ, THE TRUTH SEEKER, intended to erect a monument to her husband's memory in Greenwood Cemetery, on which were to be inscribed quotations from Mr. Bennett's writings, "violently denunciatory of Christianity."

A News reporter to-day intended to interview Mrs. Bennett upon the subject, but she is out of town. Mr. E. M. Macdonald, who is the present editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, said to the reporter that he had seen the letter in question in several newspapers, and that as to the extent it purported to describe Mrs. Bennett's intentions as to the inscriptions to be placed on her husband's monument, it was a gross exaggeration.

Mr. Macdonald said that Mrs. Bennett had not yet selected the inscriptions to be placed on the monument over her husband's grave. A number of extracts had been collected from Mr. Bennett's writings, and the best of them would be inscribed on the monument. Mr. Macdonald said that in collecting extracts from Mr. Bennett's writings, Christian sentiment was not at all considered, as the principal aim was to select utterances of Mr. Bennett that would perpetuate his memory. Notwithstanding the fact that Christian sentiment in the matter was not thought of, the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER reasserted that he felt confident the cemetery authorities would offer no objection to the erection of the monument.

One of the officials of Greenwood Cemetery said to the News reporter that he had heard nothing about the proposed monument before, but that he would investigate the matter and see that there was no infraction of the rules governing the cemetery. The trustees hav the priviledge of forbidding the erection of any monument in the cemetery that they might consider in any way improper.

Mr. Holyoake Defends Himself.

From the Boston Investigator.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INVESTIGATOR, Sir: In early days, when I was first a student of social life, the name that attracted my attention most in the New Moral World was that of Lewis Masquerier. Little did I think that I should ever come to know the interesting American writer. When in later years he dedicated to me and my friend Dr. Hollick his remarkable volume on Homestead Reforms, it gave me great satisfaction, and when I came to America, I made a special visit to Brooklyn to see him; and afterward we went to Chautauqua Lake Convention together. I valued his friendship much. His courage, his zeal, and wondrous enthusiasm at his age, although he had suffered from blindness, filled me with respect and admiration of him.

When I wrote of American things and persons in the nineteenth century, I omitted some of which I ought to hav taken notice in order to mention his book on Homesteads. It would be well for the world if his Homestead plan was better acted upon. My friend, I was told, was not pleased with what I said. I was sorry for that, for I should hav been very glad had any writer in America, in a review of equally high standing among you, mentioned any book of mine, and caused the attention to be given to it that I caused to be given to Mr. Masquerier's book.

I see since that he has made strange charges against me, and that my valued, life-long friend, Dr. Frederic Hollick, has, with his usual, generous promptitude, written to you in my vindication. No human being who knows me will believe what Mr. Masquerier says of me. He is quite mistaken in what he says. He must hav been misinformed. He is too generous to invent things which are not true. I never received a pension from the government. My views—concerning which I do not keep silence—hav always made that impossible. The annuity given to me when I was ill, and, like Mr. Masquerier, was some time ago blind, was subscribed by the most advanced thinkers in England. Prof. Tyndall, Prof. Huxley, George Eliot, Mr. Jacob Bright, Mr. Darwin and two of his sons, Sir Charles Dilke, the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Harriet Martineau, Lord Amberley, the Rev. J. R. Green, the historian, were among them. Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, M. P., also rendered generous aid.

Are these the persons to giv tribute and honor and service to one who was capable of abandoning the principles of his life? As I had been to America once, and engaged to visit it again, in the interest alone of working-class emigrants, at my own expense, Mr. Gladstone directed that a portion of my expenses the second time be paid from the Public Service Fund; and Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of New York, aided me as generously. Had I selfish objects—had I been the servant of any company, the agent of any capitalists—would the eminent persons I hav named hav done this? Altogether I never received half the expenses I incurred.

As to Mr. Foote and others imprisoned, I never refused to sign a petition on their behalf. What I did was to refuse to insult them by signing a petition for "mercy"—but I offered at the same time to sign any other. When I was imprisoned, I never asked for "mercy," nor suffered any one to ask it for me. I remained in prison five weeks longer than my sentence, rather than take an oath on behalf of my own recognizances. I belong to no apostate or coward school of Freethinkers. I gave advice to Mr. Foote's friends, which would hav procured his liberation before this, had it been acted upon. I alone hav stood up for his honor and his freedom. All I hav further to say is, that I respect Mr. Masquerier for the courage and Liberalism of his long life, and regret that he should think me capable of what he has imputed to me.

GEO. JACOB HOLYOAKE.

A Christian Humbug.

Of the recent reported finding of ancient biblical manuscripts by a converted Jew named Shapira, the Independent sarcastically says:

Not all converted Jews carry a character above contumely. Ben Wade once described Judah P. Benjamin as a Jew with Egyptian principles. It has been asserted that Benjamin Disraeli was descended from the impenitent thief. There is strong presumptiv evidence that Shapira is a lineal descendant of Sapphira, and that he has retained her name. His first name we do not know. Probably it is Ananias. Like his ancestors he is a converted Jew. He resides in Jerusalem, the ancestral home of the family, whose reputation he maintains with singular conscientiousness.

Mr. Shapira has a shop in Jerusalem much frequented by travelers, to whom he sells "antiques." Some of them are probably genuin. Others are manufactured for him by a Jewish rascal named Selim, and we do not know how many other of his confederates. But this Shapira differs from other dealers in forged antiquities by his enterprise and ambition. He has had one great success, which makes the Berlin Museum the laughing stock of Europe. He sold to it, for a very handsome sum, on the recommendation of a thick-witted committee of Orientalists, a collection of forged "Moabite" antiquities, inscriptions, jars, images, and obscenities, which had been rejected as palpable frauds, even here in poor, ignorant America. Since then he has been casting about from some greater catch; and now he presents his eighth century B.C. Moabite Deuteronomy (!), and asks the British Museum to giv him a million for it.

We hav no patience to read or print the account of his "great discovery." It is as bad as "Wilford Hall," and as preposterous. That Dr. Ginsburg has the least bit of faith in the genuinness of the parchment leaves we do not for a moment believe. It would be dignifying a contemptible fraud too much to publish the specimens which hav been given to the press.

Let a few things be noticed. It was easy to recognize the other "Moabite" forgeries, because the inscriptions lacked congruity. The letters were good Phenician, but they belonged to the styles of different centuries. The forger had the alphabets, but he had them mixed. Now Mr. Shapira has learned better, and his manuscript agrees by the happy accident of its being of just the date of the Moabite stone, which is the only specimen of old Moabite extant. Happening to be of just that one date of all dates, it escapes detection by this palæographic test. But it is on parchment, and was found in the possession of the Arabs of the Moab region. Why did those wild, wandering Arabs keep it? They knew nothing about what it was. They could not read a word of the writing concealed even from scholars' eyes under black dirt. Where hav they kept it all these centuries? They hav no boxes to keep such a treasure in. Those Arabs are perfectly well known, and their habits. Such a useless bundle they would hav burnt with their camel chips for fuel. Then what an absurd text is this travesty on the Commandments? It is only the production of some rascal of a young German university scholar, Christian or Jew, who has abused Geiger or Wellhausen, and put into Hebrew, for the joke of it, an imaginary text. Then Mr. Shapira has hired some impecunious Jew to write it all off in the Mesha Moabite text on parchment; and then he has rubbed it, and scrubbed it, and torn it, and worn it, and dried it, and fried it, and soaked it, and smoked it, until it looks older and blacker than the clouted shoes of the Gibeonites. Those clouted shoes took in Joshua; but we do not believe that the British Museum will be deceived easily into believing that a dozen pages of parchment could hav been carried around safely for twenty-five centuries in the tents of wandering Bedouins.

If we could hav the ear of Mr. Shapira for a moment we would not crop it, as it was an earlier custom to treat those of his avocation—for he is an amusing fellow—but we would suggest to him that he has made an error of judgment this time. Nobody wants his Moabite commandments. They are not marketable. But there are some very desirable things just in his line which nobody could find so well as he. We don't refer to the lost books of Livy, for they are Latin, and he is not much on Latin; nor would we hav him seek the Greek desiderata, for Simonides has anticipated him there. But there is a fine field for him in Hebrew relics if he would only put his mind to it wisely. Why will he not seek and find—no one else could find it so easily—the Hebrew original of Matthew? It would be worth a million pounds to giv us the Ebionite gospel. Or what a discovery it would be to find for us in the bottom of Jacob's Well a parchment copy of the book of Jashar. We would go wild over it. Or, best of all, he might set his Bedouin to work about the talus of Mount Sinai and get the fragments of the tables of the law which Moses broke; or find somewhere about Jerusalem those duplicate tables that were lost in the ruins when ark and temple were overthrown. Really the field is large, and, what is more to the point, may be profitable. We hav no question that Mr. Sapphira would find ways to make these discoveries if he should set out.

The Greatest of Modern Discoveries.

When Tischendorf got hold of the manuscript of his version of the New Testament, he thought he had made a find that would not soon be equaled. The following facts show how easy it was for him to be mistaken. We take the account from the New York World, which is ahead of the rest of the papers in getting the facts in the case before the public:

Considerable competition has recently been shown by the discoverers of ancient manuscripts and the finders of ancient relics. The latter hav suddenly come to the front by the discovery of Noah's Ark in that part of the Armenian plateau still known as Mount Ararat.

The find was made by a party of Russian engineers who were surveying a glacier. An extraordinary spell of hot weather had melted away a great portion of the Araxes glacier, and they were surprised to see sticking out of the ice what at first appeared to be the rude facade of an ancient dwelling. On closer examination it was found to be composed of longitudinal layers of gopher wood, supported by immense frames, still in a remarkable state of preservation.

Assistance having been summoned from Nakhchewan, the work of uncovering the find was commenced under the most extraordinary difficulties, and in a week's time the indefatigable explorers had uncovered a section of what they claimed to be Noah's Ark, as it bore indisputable evidence of having been used as a boat.

At this point archæology could afford to rest at any ordinary period of the world and we should expect the luckiest finders to form a syndicate and open a bazar for the sale of relics.

But in our day antiquarian industry takes another turn. It isn't looking for merchandise so much as for testimony. We must not forget that the planting of the Cardiff Giant was not so much to make money as to establish the missing link.

The Noah's Ark Syndicate are only following the tactics of the antiquary who recently offered to sell an original manuscript of the Mosaic law signed by Moses to the British Museum.

They are trying to correct the record with facts.

With these principles in view, the reader must not be surprised to learn by the latest dispatches from our representativ, Mr. Benjamin, who is not going to Persia for nothing, that the engineers hav broken through the third compartment of the ark, and in the true spirit of the age hav discovered the original log kept by Noah and his sons.

Startling as this announcement is, it is backed up by the documents, which must stand for what they are worth without any comment of ours. Philology, ethnology, and archæology must fight it out for themselvs. A newspaper can only narrate the occurrence.

This document, which is written on the hide of what appears to hav been an ichthyosaurus, is in characters that make the cuneiform inscriptions look sick. The translations are hastily done, and, as we might expect, betray the Chaldean origin of the whole thing.

EXTRACT FROM THE LOG.

"November 11, 837 B.C.—All got in to-day. No signs of a shower. If it don't rain to-morrow I might as well giv up business. The women hav had a fight over their staterooms, as I expected. Mrs. Shem is in the bow. She couldn't stand the smell of the mastodons. What airs!

"November 17th.—Clouding up. The aquarium tanks in the steerage hav caused me more trouble than anything else. Yesterday a unicorn busted two of them with his horns. I suspect I've lost six or eight species of lizards, and posterity will never forgiv me.

"The crowd continues to groan at us all day, and want to know where the water is coming from to float this boat. That's a conundrum. It is not pleasant to be called an old crank by the population. Ham has been sampling my wines. He thinks I don't know it.

"November 18th.—Raining like [untranscribable]. The crowds are not so perfectly dead certain about the water. Six spotted megatherium stampeded to-day, and got overboard.

"November 19th.—Got off to-day. Took in gang-planks at 6:30. Rain coming down lively. Old boat goes round like a tub. Crowd very riotous on shore. Contractors wanted their pay. Gave 'em all forty-day paper. Some of 'em stoned us as we were shoving off. Herders who had driven in the elephant and rhinoceri were very abusiv. Ham foolishly struck one of them with his umbrella. Coming down lively now. Looks as if it would be considerable of a shower after all."

[Here a hiatus occurs, and it is the opinion of the translator that, when he got out of sight of land; Noah, who was a heavy drinker, went below and stayed there, leaving the log to Shem.]

SHEM TAKES COMMAND.

"November 20th.—Wet weather. Old man cranky as a [untranscribable—supposed to mean bedbug]. Drinks too much for a navigator. Keeps his best liquor in the snake department.

"Had a fight in the Ornithological Bureau to-day. Shem and Japhet struck; swore they wouldn't shovel guano any longer, rain or no rain. Boat leaks like a sieve. Had to plug it with Spitz dogs. Think the gnawers are all working through.

"November 25th.—All hands on sick list. Stock of liquors running low. Fine view from the cabin window. Collided with a megatherium at 4. Stove in the port bow. According to the weather-guage three feet of water fell yesterday. In the matter of fluids the water is altogether disproportionate. Old man is arranging the dove trick with an educated pigeon. It keeps him quiet."

Here the translation breaks off. Further pages will be given to the public as the Royal Persian College of Philology make them out.

Mr. Benjamin has been made Master of Arts and member of the Royal Academy by his highness, the shah.

Calvin and Ingersoll.

From the Independent Pulpit.

The clergy hav been seeking to weaken the force of our labors by calling us an Ingersollite. Some who do this call themselvs Calvinists.

The fame of John Calvin is due to the murder of Servetus, for his religious opinions, and the promulgation of that "dark and dismal" creed, called Calvanism.

The fame of Robt. G. Ingersoll is due to his superior genius and ability as an orator, and his fearless opposition to all forms of mental slavery and superstition.

We put in contrast the creeds of those two men, and leave the reader to decide which one of them is most rational in its construction, and which is least repugnant to reason, common sense, morality and religion. Calvin's creed consists of the following points:

1. "Predestination," which is, that God has chosen a certain number of the fallen race of Adam in Christ, before the foundation of the world, unto eternal glory, according to his immutable purpose, and of his free grace and love, without the foresight of faith, good works, or any conditions performed by the creature, as the cause of his election; and that the rest of mankind he was pleased to pass by, and ordain them to hishonor and wrath for their sins, to the praise of his glorious justice.

2. "Particular Redemption," which is, that Jesus Christ, by his death and sufferings, made an atonement for the sins of the elect only.

3. "Total Depravity," which is, that mankind are totally depraved, in consequence of the fall of the first man, who, being their public head, his sin involved the corruption of all his posterity; and this corruption extends over the whole soul, and renders it unable of itself to turn to God, or to do anything truly good; and exposes it to his just displeasure, both in this world and that which is to come.

4. "Effectual Calling," which is, that all whom God hath predestinated unto life, he is pleased in his appointed time effectually to call by his word and spirit, out of that state of sin and death in which they are by nature, to grace and salvation by Jesus Christ.

5. "The Certain Perseverance of the Saints," which is, that those whom God has effectually called and sanctified by his spirit shall never finally fall from a state of grace.

The following is Ingersoll's creed:

1. Happiness is the only good.

2. The way to be happy is to make others happy. Other things being equal, that man is happiest who is nearest just—who is truthful, merciful, and intelligent—in other words, the one who livs in accordance with the conditions of life.

3. The time to be happy is now, and the place to be happy is here.

4. Reason is the lamp of the mind—the only torch of progress—and instead of blowing that out and depending on darkness and dogma, it is far better to increase that sacred light.

5. Every man should be the intellectual proprietor of himself—honest with himself, and intellectually hospitable—and upon every brain reason should be enthroned a king.

6. That every man must bear the consequences, at least of his own actions; that if he puts his hands in the fire, his hands must smart, and not the hands of another. In other words, that each man must eat the fruit of the tree he plants.

We had rather be called an Ingersollite than a Calvinist, though we hav made no formal avowal of any creed whatever, feeling it to be our duty to accept the good in all of them, and to reject the evil.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE first fall meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club will be held Friday evening, Sept. 7th, at the German Masonic Temple, 220 East Fifteenth street. Col. Andrew H. H. Dawson, of Kentucky, will be the speaker of the evening. He will talk about the Liberal Club itself.

THE lecture tour of Messrs. Wakeman, Palmer, and Leland is changed somewhat from the announcement last week. After Rochester they will be at Buffalo Sept. 3d and 4th; Dunkirk, 6th; Erie, 7th; Pittsburgh, 8th and 9th; Salem, O., 11th; Cleveland, 12th; Toledo, 13th; Adrian, Mich., 14th; Jackson, Mich., 15th. We hear from Jackson that the Liberals there will continue the meeting the next day, Sunday, and one or more of the Wakeman party may remain over; but the others will go on, Saturday night, to attend the Illinois State Convention at Chicago on Sunday. From there the whole party may go on, on Monday, to attend the Iowa State Convention at Tama, for two days, Sept. 17th and 18th. Then to the League Congress, on the 21st, 22d, and 23d.

A PHILADELPHIA correspondent writes of the opening of the League in that town: "The 25th of August our League opened the season of lectures, readings, and musicales by securing the services of Miss El De Louie, lecturer and elocutionist, and J. E. Remsburg, whose subject, "Liberty's Apostle, Thomas Paine," was one of the grandest we ever listened to. His summing up, pro and con, and logical force, could not fail in convincing the most skeptical who listened of its truth and consistency. Mr. Remsburg's manner is particularly pleasing—quiet, earnest, intense, and fluent in speech. Miss Louie's poem was delivered with eloquence and feeling, and great richness of voice. The auditors were more than pleased, and anticipate a season of enjoyable reunions.

THE Newark Liberal League opened its meetings on Sunday, August 26th, with a lecture by John E. Remsburg, of Kansas. There was a full house. The audience keenly appreciated the telling points of the speaker, as he showed the futility of the claims of the church. He demonstrated that in every respect the church was a bar to human progress. Its terrible creed is based upon the most immoral conceptions. It is the foe of knowledge, for only by ignorance can its dogmas be believed. It is the foe of liberty, because only by limitations of the mind of man can its authority be maintained. All the great and magnificent achievements of humanity hav been done outside the pale of the church. The vast majority of criminals come from the bosom of the church, and only by the removal of this institution based upon immorality and superstition can the greatest perfection be accomplished. Mr. Remsburg's address was a logical and masterly effort. It was well delivered, and held the closest attention of his hearers. It was packed with good sense, and should be given before every Liberal League and society in the country. Mr. Remsburg is doing a noble and needed work by his faithful and eloquent services upon the platform, and he should be sustained and kept in the field by all those interested in our cause. Prof. Alexander Wilder was present at the lecture. He will speak for the Newark League next Sunday. Mr. Henry Hill, also present, is expected to lecture a week or two later.

GEORGE CHAINEY lectured before the New York Liberal Club on Sunday evening, August 26th. Though early in the season, the hall was well filled, and the repeated applause of the audience testified their enthusiastic indorsement of everything that the speaker said. His theme was, "Christianity vs. Humanity." He arraigned the former at the bar of human reason and hope, and showed that in its essential qualities of dogma and impulse it is a tremendous failure. It does not meet the manifold wants of humanity; it does not make us better or more joyful; its doctrins are harsh and cruel. It obliterates the glory of the present, and in the hereafter points only to a small body of the saved amid millions who are suffering the tortures of hell. Only in humanity do we find the providence that will save. Only when we quit God do we come to our real manhood. In that alone can we trust. Through that the future of the race will be made glorious. All that is best and noblest in men and women will assuredly triumph. The storm and clouds of superstition are passing, and the clear light of the coming day is seen, and the light that is now upon the mountain tops will penetrate and make fruitful the lowliest valleys of the world. Chainey's address was a brilliant and powerful effort, rich with poetry, and full of the most advanced thought. It was delivered in a most impressiv and eloquent manner. His oratory is full of dramatic force, and he is one of the ablest exponents of our cause. He now purposes to devote himself entirely to the Liberal platform, and we hope that his ringing words will be heard in every community. He presents the noblest phases of our movement, and kindles the heart as well as the head with the choicest hopes of the age.

THIS anecdote is told of Thad. Stevens: "While in Congress Mr. Stevens had a young man named Camp from Franklin county in a position. One evening Camp was taken suddenly violently ill of cholera morbus and died before morning. To an inquiry whether Mr. Stevens was present when Camp died, he replied that he left him about half an hour before, and that he then appeared easier. The doctor then asked whether when he left Camp was rational. The reply was: 'No, When I left him he was trying to pray.'"

Communications.

From Troas to Miletus.

Young Eutychus having recovered from his fall, and Paul having departed from Troas by land, the writer of Acts proceeds:

"And we went on board the ship and sailed to the port of Thesos; because there we were to take in Paul; for so he had bidden us, when he proceeded on by land. And when we had received him at Thesos we took him on board ship and proceeded to Mitylene (xx, 13-14)."

For Thesos the Greek codices hav Assos, and the Vulgate Asson. This is one of many curious variations in proper names that we hav to notice in the different MSS., showing how corrupt the text is.

The distance by land from Troas to Thesos, or Assos, or Assus, or Asson, is about twenty miles on the map; but by sea it would be twice twenty. The aged Paul is supposed to hav footed it, while his seven younger associates sailed around the cape.

"And from there the next day we sailed over against the island Chios; and again the next day we arrived at Samos, and stopped at Trogyllium; and on the following day we arrived at Miletus. For Paul had determined with himself to pass by Ephesus, lest he should be delayed there; because he hasted on, if possible, to keep the day of Pentecost in Jerusalem (15-16)."

"O ye Galatians! deficient in understanding," says Paul, "who hath fascinated you? . . . . Ye observe days, and moons, and set times and years. I am afraid lest I hav labored among you in vain." (Gal. iii, 1; iv, 10-11). Is it likely that the writer of these words was so anxious to keep the feast of Pentecost at Jerusalem, that he avoided stopping at Ephesus.

Miletus was thirty or forty miles distant from Ephesus; Trogyllium only half as many; but perhaps the road was rough from Trogyllium. "The site of Niletus," says Smith's "Bible Dictionary," "has now receded ten miles from the coast, and even in the Apostle's time it must hav lost its strictly maritime position." Perhaps so; but Paul was there eighty years or more earlier than any biblical critic has heretofore suspected.

If the second epistle to Timothy is genuin, Paul sent Tychicus to Ephesus, and left Trophimus sick at Miletus. And he was anxious about a "book case," with contents, which he left with Carpus at Troas; these he wanted Timothy to bring to him to Rome, and "especially the roll of parchments" (iv, 12-13, 20).

When the elders of Ephesus arrived, Paul made an affecting speech to them, which the writer of Acts reports as follows:

"Ye yourselvs know how at all times, since the first day that I entered Asia, I hav been with you, laboring for God in great humility, and with tears, amid the trials which beset me from the plottings of the Jews. And I shunned not that which was advantageous to your souls, that I might preach to you, and teach in the streets and houses, while I testified to Jews and to Arameans (Gr. Hellenes), as to repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Messiah. And now I am bound in spirit and I go to Jerusalem; and I know not what will befall me there, except that the Holy Spirit in every city testifieth to me and saith: Bonds and afflictions await thee. But my life is accounted by me as nothing, so that I may but finish my course ["with joy" interpolated in the later MSS.], and the ministration which I hav received from our Lord Jesus to bear testimony to the gospel of the grace of God. And now I know that ye will see my face no more, all of you among whom I hav traveled and preached the kingdom of God. I therefore protest to you this day that I am pure from the blood of you all [Gr. "blood of all"]. For I hav not shunned to acquaint you with all the will of God. Take heed therefore to yourselvs and to all the flock over which the Holy Spirit hath established you bishops (episkupah); that ye feed the church of God [Nestorian MSS., "Messiah"] which he hath acquired by his blood. For I know that after I am gone fierce wolves will come in among you, and will hav no mercy on the flock. And also from among yourselvs there will rise up men speaking perverse things, that they may turn away the disciples to go after them. Therefore, be ye vigilant, and remember that for three years I ceased not to admonish each one of you, by day and by night, with tears. And now I commend you to God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up and to giv you an inheritance among all the saints. Silver, or gold, or garments I hav not coveted. And ye yourselvs know that these hands ministered to my wants, and to them that were with me. And I hav showed you all things; that thus it is a duty to labor and to care for the infirm, and to remember the words of our Lord Jesus; for he hath said that he is more blessed who giveth than he who receiveth (xx, 18-35).

The reporter of Paul's speeches is generally believed to be Luke, but so far as appears from the book of Acts, Luke was not along with the party. How much of this particular speech is truly reported we cannot know; but we do know that most of the reports are very false.

The expression "free from the blood of you all" we suppose to hav a figurativ meaning of some kind.

In regard to the word "bishops" the translator of the Peshito says: "This is the only place in this version of the New Testament in which the word bishop occurs." And Dr. Murdock must also hav noticed that the Syriac version makes no distinction anywhere between an elder (presbuteros) and a bishop (episkopos), and seems to place a female elder (presbutis; plural, presbutera) almost on a level with the male elder or bishop. The same word in Syriac (kishishuta) answers for elder or bishop in the Greek (Phil. i, 1; 1 Tim. iii, 1-2; iv, 14; v, 1-2; vi, 17-19; Tit. i, 6-7; ii, 3). Episcopacy finds an unstable foundation in the Syriac codex. Not until the close of the second century did bishops begin to loom up above elders.

"The church of God which he hath acquired by his blood," or as the Greek version reads, "purchased with his own blood," is so objectionable a passage that the commentators are glad to find that the Nestorian MSS., hav "Messiah" instead of "God," and some of the Greek codices hav "the Lord."

The words of the Lord Jesus: "He is more blessed who giveth than he who receiveth," or, as in the Greek, "It is more blessed to giv than to receive," are not recorded elsewhere. Paul of course never heard Jesus say that, nor can we rely upon the reporter's notes that Paul said that Jesus said it.

When the apostle had ended his speech he knelt and prayed with the people. And they all wept while they embraced and kissed him, especially because he had told them they would see his face no more. And they accompanied him to the ship, which was probably nothing like so far from the town as it would be now.

FROM MILETUS TO TYRE.

From Miletus Paul and his companions sailed to the island of Coos (or Cos), thence to Rhodes, and thence to Patara on the coast of Lycia. Here they entered another ship bound for Tyre. Heretofore the stoppages from Troas to Patara hav been frequent; the rest of the voyage to Tyre appears to be made without stopping, passing to the right of the island of Cyprus.

At Tyre they found disciples with whom they tarried seven days. These brethren warned Paul by the spirit not to go to Jerusalem; but he heeded not the warning. So with their wives and children they escorted him and his companions out of the city, and at the seashore they all knelt and prayed and kissed one another (xxi, 6).

Infidel Philosophy.

DEAR READERS OF THE TRUTH SEEKER: These are my busy days. I hav little time for reflection, and less time to write; hence this fragmentary article.

In a former article I showed that the prophets knew no more about coming events than men do now; not as much, for with the increase of knowledge and the light of experience men are enabled to judge (though not unerringly) of the future by what has transpired in the past.

Return the people to their former state of ignorance, and prophets could again impose upon them as in days of old. Only in an age of ignorance and superstition can prophecies and immaculate conceptions obtain currency. The days of ghosts and witches hav passed by, and all supernaturalism will cease when science bears sway. Let the people believe in ghosts, and they will haunt us every dark night. If the people could be led to believe that an old woman could sell her soul to the devil, we should begin to hang witches. If it were possible for the people to believe that the gods could come down and hav intercourse with women, holy bastardy would be as common as in ancient time.

The truth is, there is not one out of a thousand who knows how many of these young gods hav been born, nor how much attention celestial visitors hav paid to beautiful young virgins. Gods can never be born, nor miracles wrought, only where the people are ignorant enough to believe such things possible. It is a strange fact that ghosts and devils and witches never appear to or trouble an Infidel.

The following is an abridged statement taken from the writings of Josephus, which is to the point, and givs one a peep back into the dark ages when it was believed that the gods could come down and cohabit with women. Those who would like to read the full statement will find the account in "Antiquities of the Jews." Book xviii, c. iii, v. iv.

"There was at Rome a woman whose name was Paulina, one of a virtuous life, beautiful countenance, and great modesty. Decius Mundus fell in love with her and offered her 200,000 Attic drachmæ to sleep with her. Her refusal only inflamed him the more, and he resolved to starve himself to death.

"A freed woman told him that she would entrap Paulina for 50,000 drachmæ, which money was given to her. The freed woman knew that Paulina was a worshiper of the goddess Isis, so she went to a priest and offered him the money to forward her plans. The priest accepted the money and told Paulina, secretly, that the god Annubis had fallen in love with her, and enjoined her to come to him. So she told her husband that she had a message from and was to sup and lie with the god Annubis. Accordingly she went to the temple, and when the hour for sleep had come the lights were put out, and the priest shut the temple—when Mundus leaped out from the most holy part of it, Paulina supposing he was the god. And when he was gone away the next morning she came early to her husband and told him how the god had appeared to her. She also told her friends. Her husband did not doubt her chastity, neither her friends, because they believed it to be an act of God; and she was a woman of so great dignity and modesty."

My Christian friend, this is the way young gods are made, and the only way that gods ever were made. It is just as much impossible for a woman to become impregnated by a god or ghost (either holy or unholy) as it is for a she elephant. But let the people be ignorant enough to believe in such flapdoodle hash, and they can hav gods born of elephants just as well as women.

Now there are a number of inferences to be drawn from the above statement.

1st. The priests of that day did not differ widely from the priests of the present day. Then as now they were willing to get money any way they could besides squarely earning it.

2d. The wonder is that after having received the money he did not cheat Mundus and hav the "nesthidings" all to himself.

3d. If the belief that the gods could come down and hav intercourse with women had not been general, the freed woman could hav carried no such plan into execution. Such a plan wouldn't work worth a cent to-day, simply because the people do not believe such things possible. The whole story shows the widespread belief that gods could come down and toy around pretty women the same as men. Moreover, Paulina did not sink in the estimation of her friends or her husband. On the other hand, they were all proud to think Paulina had received such mark of distinction. Neither did she sink in her own estimation, because she really believed that the god had condescended to lie with her. Ignorance makes all things possible. Bibles and divine revelations are the natural outcome of such mental darkness. Gods are born only to fools.

Josephus givs numerous instances of angels appearing to women. In one instance an angel appeared to a woman in the form of a bewitching young man, and appeared so often that somehow her husband came to think there was a strange familiarity between the heavenly messenger and his wife. Many were begotten by these divine visitors and believed to be of divine origin.

These heavenly hybrids are no new invention. The belief in their existence was common long before the great grandpaps of Mary and Joseph were born. It would save a great deal of scandal to the church and the clergy if the belief in these masculin messengers could be revived. But I will agree to sign over my claim to the territory which I hav pre-empted in the New Jerusalem, if any ugly, wrinkled old woman ever received a call from one.

Latterly these winged messengers are represented with very mild countenances, and clad in female attire. These hav behaved well, and as far as heard from hav done no damage. Formerly they were all beautiful young men, and appeared to pretty women. For the good of humanity it is hoped that they will never change sex again, for who could vouch nowadays for the conduct of he angels?

When we reflect on the ignorance of past ages, it does not seem so wonderful that the people should believe that gods could hav intercourse with women, nor that they should believe in angels, devils, and miracles, but the wonder is that thousands, in the full blaze of the light of the nineteenth century, should believe in these absurdities still.

Think of the thousands of innocent children, hear the ring of their merry voices, listen to the ripple of laughter; then tell me that a just God will damn these innocents! And yet there are those who claim to be intelligent who believe that God has set apart a portion of these unoffending children to be damned, and that a small minority were chosen before the foundation of the world to be saved, that nothing the elect can do will damn them, and that the others can do nothing which will save them. Assuming that God is just, a more unreasonable belief could not be conceived. A man naturally bad who is led to believe such a doctrin must become actually dangerous.

Just hear the ranting of one of these pious blatherskites, Richard Hill, Esq., who believed that he had been chosen to be saved before the foundation of the world: "Even adultery and murder do not hurt the pleasant children, but rather work for their good. God sees no sin in believers, whatever sin they commit. My sins might displease God; my person is always acceptable to him. Though I should outsin Manassus, I should not be less a pleasant child, because God always views me in Christ. Hence in the midst of adulteries, incest, and murder he can address me with, 'Thou art all fair, my love, my undefiled, there is no spot in thee.' It is a most pernicious error of the schoolmen to distinguish sins according to the fact, and not according to the person. Adultery, incest, and murder shall upon the whole make me holier on earth and merrier in heaven." Such was Calvinism fifty years ago. I hav heard such doctrin preached when I was a boy. Many pious cranks believe it still, although it is not preached as in former times. The people hav outgrown it. I had my hand on an old church book a year or two ago, in which this whole doctrin was written out. Think of all the good, the tender, the pure and virtuous, being damned because God so decided millions of years before they were born. The tendency of such belief is to transform men into monsters. And the tendency of a belief that God will damn a portion (and a very great portion, too) of the human family, however good they may be, is to destroy all sense of justice. But such has been the teaching of thousands of pious nincompoops. Oh, when will the world be rid of the blisters raised by the Christian religion? It has turned men into fools, and bigots, and tyrants. Oh, the deep-rooted superstition, even of the modern lights of Christianity, still eating their God and drinking his blood, and still washing away the sins of the wicked by plunging them under the water! Such superstition in the afternoon of the nineteenth century is enough to shame a Hottentot, and sicken a man-eater. But the sorriest thought of all is that there are seventy thousand men in this country who are willing to deal in the holy slush of such balderdash rather than work for a living.

My pious friend, these men tell you that they are interested in your welfare. Don't you believe them. They are not to be trusted with human affairs at all. They talk for soft couches and roast turkey; for exemption from work and taxation, and for your surplus earnings. They do not believe what they preach, or they would not be so alarmed when any one tries to get the people to think for themselvs, nor manifest such hatred toward him.

If you say a word against these superstitious notions you put the preacher's pipe out, and one word from the pious old ram will set the whole flock butting against you. Ministers, like the angels of old, never forget their visits to the sisters. Most of them ought to ram-shackled the year round.

Why should the Christian religion hav exemption from investigation more than any other system of religion? The minister does not get mad when you apply the test of reason to the Koran, or because you express a doubt in regard to the genuinness of the revelation of Joseph Smith, but he gets mad whenever he thinks of hard work. And he knows that investigation leads to doubt, and doubt to open denial and independence, and he knows when the people are freed from the trammels of superstition he will be compelled to sing the doleful song of "Root hog or die."

I hav said that the Christian religion has made fools and bigots and tyrants of men. Take the case of Pascal, one of the most intellectual men that France ever produced. He was for years committing suicide, believing that his torture on earth would insure him of heaven. For years he starved himself, refusing to take any food which was pleasing to the palate. He wore a leather belt around him with spikes turned inward until his body was girdled with ulcerated sores. And thus, amid his tortures and mortifications, died one of the greatest men of his time, murdered and befogged and befooled by the Christian religion. Wonder if God was any more comfortable in his heavenly quarters on account of his suffering? The case of Pascal is not a singular one. Thousands who hav believed that this world is all a fleeting show "hav made it only a wilderness of woe" by starving and tormenting themselvs until they died, believing that the more they suffered on earth "the merrier they would be in heaven."

There was the Christian hyena Cortez, whose teeth and claws and appetite for human prey were undoubtedly sharpened by the Christian religion. He was one of the most religious men whom I ever read of. Whichever way he turned his murderous columns they were headed by the cross. He overturned an empire, he murdered a great ruler, he plundered the people and reduced them to slavery. But he found the emblems of paganism, which he trampled under his murderous feet, and left in their stead the bloody flag of his religion. God must hav fairly squealed with delight over his doings in Mexico. Spain, Portugal, and Russia are three of the most Christian nations on the globe. And for brutality, cruelty, ignorance, and low-lived treachery they stand without a rival among all the nations which claim to be civilized. This shows the elevating, refining, and softening influence of the Christian religion.

Now compare such men as Spencer and Darwin and Huxley and Paine and Jefferson and Franklin with these Christian fanatics and pirates and murderers, and strike a balance in favor of Christian influence if you can.

My Liberal friends, think of these things, and when a pious, sniveling, whining sycophant tells you that all the great and good men hav been Christians, and that we are indebted to Christianity for our high state of civilization, giv it to him "sled-length." Ask him if Confucius and Solon and Socrates—the statesmen, the orators, the philosophers, and all the great and good men of ancient times, were also indebted to the teaching of the Christian religion. And if, as the Christians say, there is no way to reach heaven only through the blood of Christ, what is to become of the millions on millions whom God brought into the world before there was a savior, and of other millions who hav never heard of the cross since the reputed birth of Christ? Better a thousand times that the earth had remained a blank than that these untold millions should be writhing in eternal torment.

Now, my Liberal friends, be sure and attend the Rochester Convention and hear some of the grandest speakers on the continent. Get your spiritual strength renewed, and go home wiser and better men. I want to make your acquaintance. And when you see a man who does not look like anybody else, come right up and shake. That's me.

JOHN PECK.

The Irrepressible Conflict.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The controversy between Materialists and Spiritualists, which has been going on in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, is decidedly interesting, but it does not seem to hav led to any very definit conclusion as yet. It is possible that this is caused by a want of a proper understanding of the matter in controversy. I do not believe that there is an intelligent Spiritualist anywhere who claims that there is anything in the universe besides matter and its properties or attributes; we certainly know of nothing else. The question in controversy, then, is this, Do organisms remain imperishable, or do individuals hav an imperishable organic existence? I say yes; for the reasons following: If we study the constitution of matter in a common sense way, by leaving out all mysticism, we may come to conclusions that all can understand alike, whether they accept them or not. There is no controversy as to the existence of matter—all acknowledge this fact. We hav then only to study what matter does. It is no longer a mere theory that matter is in an atomic state; it was a theory when Lencippus first broached it, and when Democritus further perfected it by announcing that the atoms were ultimate; and it still remained a theory when the intuition of Epicurus discovered that these ultimate atoms were self-moving entities. But when Dalton, Davy, and others developed the science of chemistry, and by it demonstrated that compounds are formed by a definit arrangement of the atoms of the various substances in nature, it became an all harmonizing truth. I will here quote a few sentences from a late work on biology. The author says: "We hav ceased to abstract the activ qualities of material substances from the substance itself. We no longer figure the world to ourselvs as constituted by an extended substance, but in itself perfectly inert, ceaselessly incited and put in motion by an impalpable agent called force. The ancient divorce no longer exists; force is espoused anew to matter, from which, moreover, it was never separate, except in the brain of the metaphysician; there is no longer inertia in the universe. Behind all these phenomena is concealed an extended substance, never immobil, and which is its own mover. If we still often speak of forces, it is from pure habit or by pure artifice of language. In final analysis the idea of force may always be brought back to movements of an activ material substance."

We certainly know nothing of force except as we see matter in motion exhibiting force, because in motion; and as matter is its own mover, there can be no dead matter in the universe, for all self-motion is living motion; hence motion and life in the true conception of nature are synonymous terms. The motion of the worlds in space is but the transferred motion of the atoms of which they are composed. Youmans very aptly names these worlds the atoms of space.

Sensation, intelligence, and every other phenomenon of nature center in and are developed out of matter, or, in other words, are properties or attributes of matter. Matter is the all in all, and of all that is, I will here state a fact which admits of a demonstration, viz.: that matter changes its properties continually but its elements never, in other words, that matter is developed and differentiated by its own movement out of a state of organization as well as in it. The anatomy or histology of the nervous system shows it to be made up of cells and fibers; the brain and ganglions are composed of cells in which thoughts are formed, and through the fibers put us in communication with ourselvs and other subjects and objects of nature. Any other conception of nature requires an unknown something as cause, which necessarily leaves it incomplete.

Organism once formed must necessary be permanent, as I shall endeavor to show. The process of generation in the vegetable and animal divisions of organic nature are the same in principle, whatever the concomitants of either may be. It is a blending of two atoms of different polarities; that is, of positiv and negativ, or male and female. This blending of two atoms makes an individualized working force, which attracts other atoms suited to its purpose of development, whether it is an animalcule or a human being. In the process of generation there is no new life created, nor life does not enter the new being; it simply individualizes existing life. The perfecting of the individual from hence is accomplished by nutrition alone. There may be no manifestation of intelligence in the two atoms thus blended, but with the addition of atoms through nutrition and growth, intelligence soon becomes manifest. Thus shapeless or amorphous matter, by the blending of two atoms in generation, establishes a force capable of aggregating to itself other atoms, and of developing and differentiating them to the building up and maintaining of an organism of the most complicated structures and of the highest intelligence.

All organisms are positiv, otherwise they could not grow and develop. Being positiv, they must necessarily repel each other, and for this reason cannot destroy the organic integrity of each other; and as the conservation of matter is an assured fact, only single atoms are left from which nutrition must come to every organism, and among which they must forever exist, and to which they must always remain positiv, and so must, also, remain imperishable.

Cordova, Ill. J. HOKE, M.D.

The Inconsistencies of Protestantism.

AS STATED BY A CATHOLIC.

From Manning's "Shortest Way to Settle Disputes About Religion."

The only difference between the modern Freethinkers, as they make a separate sect, and the other forementioned reformers (Nestorius, Eutyches, Pelagius, Donatus, Luther, Calvin, Zuinglius, and the whole college of reforming apostles) is that Freethinkers are for a thorough reformation all at once, without giving quarter even to fundamentals, and so reform by wholesale what others hav only reformed by retail. So that I really see not how a member of any of the reformed churches can fairly undertake to confute a Freethinker, upon reformation principles, or without exposing his own weak side.

Suppose a member of the church of England should tell a Freethinker that he is bound to submit his private judgment to that church. He would certainly answer him that, by the same rule, Luther and Calvin ought to hav submitted to the church of Rome, and then the great work of the Reformation would never hav been heartily carried on.

If he should tell him, again, that there is a great difference between the virgin church of England and the corrupt church of Rome, the Freethinker would be apt to put this puzzling question to him, viz., whether, in the beginning of the Reformation, there was anything to make good this charge against the church of Rome but the private judgment of the Freethinking Martin Luther. For Luther for a long time stood alone, as Bishop Tillotson assures us, and as we shall see more at large hereafter.

Lastly. If the Protestant should tell him that a man by himself is more likely to err, and go astray, than a whole church—because thousands can see more than one—and that, therefore, he ought in reason to submit to the church established by law, the Freethinker would readily answer him that this is establishing a very dangerous popish principle, and building the authority of a particular reformed church upon the ruins of the whole Reformation. For, according to this principle, Luther, Calvin, and the other reformers, were wholly in the wrong in trusting to their own private judgment preferably to that of the whole church then in being.

If the Protestant replies that their private judgment was grounded on the word of God, the Freethinker will readily answer that he desires no more, provided he be but allowed to be himself (as Luther and Calvin were) the interpreter of God's word. For, in reality, whoever appeals from the church to the written word of God appeals effectually to his own private judgment; because he makes that the sole interpreter of it.

He will also answer him that numbers in religion, unless there be something else to support it, is no conclusiv argument for the truth. For, if it were, he ought to turn Papist rather than Protestant; since, if the matter were to be decided by polling, the Papists would carry it against all the Protestants in Europe, much more against the church of England taken singly.

Thus will the Freethinker stand his ground against any reformed church, and, upon Reformation principles, maintain the doctrin of Freethinking. But, surely, none of the reformed churches can hav the confidence to write seriously against Freethinking, or be hearty enemies to it, since they all owe to it their very birth and being.

Was not Freethinking the very mother and nurse of the Reformation? For, if Luther, and Calvin, and others, who reformed their reformation, had not been stanch Freethinkers, they would certainly hav submitted to the church whereof they were all members for many years; and then reforming would never hav come into fashion. But they thought their mother church was grown old and blind, and therefore would not trust her any further than they could see with their own eyes. So they all set themselvs to think freely. One thought one way, another thought another way. For they all differed in their way of thinking, and each one thought himself as able a Freethinker, and as capable of modeling a church, as any of the rest; which, at length, produced the different reformed churches of Lutherans, Calvinists, Independents, Brownists, Arminians, Anabaptists, Quakers, and the like. And is it then a wonder that churches which hav received their beginning from, and owe their whole creation and existence to, Freethinking, should at all times produce some members who, being men of wit and learning, should claim the first privilege to themselvs, and think as freely as their forefathers?

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT, - - - Proprietor.

CONDUCTED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 1, 1883.

The Character of Constantine.

A good deal has been written about this first Christian emperor, but it takes line upon line and precept upon precept to enlighten the Christian world, and it seems necessary to comply with the following request:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., August 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please to giv us through your valuable paper an authentic account of the reign and cussedness of Constantine previous to or about the time of the compilation and establishment of the Christian Bible? The Christians here dispute the character we giv him. If you will do us the favor we will hav it inserted in the Spiritual Light, published here, for the benefit of the unenlightened Christians.

An old subscriber, JOHN GRIFFITH.

Constantine's character and life form a huge blot upon the Christian religion. As the first ruler attracted to the new theology, we should expect if that theology was good he would be the same. Like attracts like. Scheming, ambitious men grasp a new movement only as it shows principles suitable for their purposes. We do not illogically assert that because Constantine was a thoroughly wicked man Christianity must necessarily be false, but we do contend that its attraction of such men, and the great proportion of criminals then and now found in its ranks, prove it to be utterly worthless as a moral force. Constantine was first drawn toward it on account of its easy scheme of salvation, and the facilities offered of escaping in the next world the penalties of crime committed in this. He had stained his hands deep in the blood of enemies, and even relativs, and the pagan priests had refused to assure him immunity. In their religion there could be no atonement for such sins as his. The Christian scheme, however, afforded the opportunity. He was promised complete absolution through the blood of Christ.

A glance at his career will be instructiv. We condense the facts from Truth Seeker Tract, No. 117, which we recommend Mr. Griffith to circulate among the scoffing Christians of his place.

"Constantine, son of Constantius Chlorus, emperor of Rome, was born in the year 272. When he was eighteen years of age his father, elevated to the rank of Cæsar, followed that fortunate event by the divorce of his wife. Constantine shared the humiliation of his mother. Entering the service of Diocletian, he soon signalized his valor in the wars of Persia and Egypt, and ere long rose to the rank of a tribune of the first order. Although early distinguished by the profession of arms, he showed but little inclination for study and the improvement of his mind. His talents, courage, and martial services rendered him a favorit of the army, and an object of jealousy to Galerius, the emperor who shared with Constantius the administration of Rome. Apprehending the sure and secret revenge of his imperial foe, young Constantine left the palace of Nicodemia in the night, and traveled with such diligence through Bithynia, Thrace, Dacia, Pannonia, Italy, and Gaul, as to frustrate any attempt of Galerius to overtake him. Amidst the acclamations of the people he reached the port of Boulogne, and joined his father at the moment he was preparing to embark for Britain. The result of the expedition was a victory over the barbarians of Caledonia. This closed the military career of Constantius. Fifteen years after he had received the title of Augustus, and fourteen years after he had been promoted to the rank of Cæsar, he ended his life in the imperial palace of York. The soldiers who had followed Constantius into Britain showed their esteem for their emperor by immediately saluting his son with the titles with which he had been invested. The throne had ever been the object of Constantine's ambition; and now it was his only means of safety. Receiving the acclamations of the western armies which had followed his father to Britain, he justified himself in usurping the imperial purple without soliciting it in the regular and constitutional manner.

"By his second wife, Theodora, Constantius had six children, three of either sex. These children claimed a preference over the son of the divorced Helena to the succession of their father. At this time Constantine was in the thirty-second year of his age, in the full vigor of both body and mind, while the eldest of his brothers was not more than thirteen years old.

"Soon after the death of Constantius, Rome became divided into hostil powers, and became the theater of revolt and war. Constantine formed an alliance with Maximian, one of the most powerful contestants for the throne, by the marriage of his daughter Fausta. After abdicating the imperial purple the second time, Maximian sought refuge in the court of Constantine; but when an incursion of the Franks had summoned the latter with a part of his army to the banks of the Rhine, the crafty Maximian spread a report of the death of his son-in-law, seized the treasure, and ascended the throne. Upon the first news of the perfidy of his father-in-law, Constantine returned by rapid marches to the gates of Aries, and left Maximian no time for the establishment of his authority, or even for resistance. He was obliged to withdraw to the neighboring city of Marseilles. Without delay Constantine immediately assaulted the city. The garrison purchased their pardon by delivering up the city and the person of Maximian, against whom sentence of death was pronounced, and who was allowed the favor of strangling himself with his own hands.

"At length, the deaths of Maximian and Galerius reduced the number of emperors to four.

"It was while marching to Rome to fight Maxentius, one of the surviving rival emperors, that, according to Eusebius, Constantine was converted to Christianity by a miraculous vision. This was the appearance in the clouds of the grand imperial standard surmounted by a large Greek R, with a cross, and certain Greek words which signified, 'By this sign thou shalt conquer.' This is said to hav happened in the year 312. It would hav been more consistent had this vision appeared appeared in Italy upon a day of battle, with the inscription in Latin instead of Greek. Maxentius was defeated and killed near Rome.

"At length only one rival remained, his brother-in-law, Licinus, emperor of the East; but gaining a complete victory over him at Adrianople, and having treacherously caused him to be put to death in violation of his imperial pledge of safety, Constantine was left the sole master of the Roman world. By the most treacherous, bloody, unscrupulous, and cruel course of conduct he had triumphed over all the rival claimants to the throne, and had at last attained the object of his ambition. Murder, assassination, and wholesale slaughter had marked his career. He had attained undisputed supremacy over the great empire of Rome, both in the East and West. And now he wished to offer an expiation for his crimes. He applied to pagan priests and pontiffs. They told him that in their religion there was no atonement for such guilt as his; but they referred him to the then obscure sect of Christians who undertook to guarantee complete absolution for the greatest enormities through the merits of the blood of an innocent victim. And so Constantine made an open profession of Christianity—but without becoming strictly a Christian himself, for at that time baptism was essential to any person's becoming one; and Constantine, probably with the hope that he might continue committing every act with impunity, delayed the act of immersion till near the point of death.

"The first legal enactment for the observance of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, was made by him. The edict was given A.D. 321, and was worded as follows: 'Let all judges and people of the towns (or cities) rest, and all the various trades be suspended on the venerable day of the sun (venerabile die Solis). Those who liv in the country, however, may freely and without fault attend to the cultivation of their fields (since it often happens that no other day be so suitable for sowing grain and planting the vine), lest, with the loss of favorable opportunity, the commodities offered by divine providence should be destroyed.'

"And as he must be master in everything, so he must be master in the church. Accordingly in 325 he convoked and opened the celebrated Council of Nice, the first general council in ecclesiastical history. He had murdered his father-in-law, had cut the throat of his twelve-year-old nephew; and the very year that he convened the first great Christian council he beheaded his eldest son, Crispus, and suffocated in a bath of boiling water his wife, Fausta. In the words of an old Gallic author, 'He loved to make a clean house.' And after having caused seven members of his family to be put to death in cold blood, after having steeped his soul in the guilt of every crime, from private assassination to wholesale massacre, he called together the Christian world at Nicea, and with the diadem upon his brow, covered with jewels, seated on high in a golden chair, proceeded to settle the orthodox creed and determin the will of God for the centuries to come. In answer to the call of Constantine, two thousand and forty-eight bishops, all of different sentiments and opinions, met at the town of Nicea in Bithynia. The main object of this council was to decide the dispute between Athanasius, deacon of Alexandria, and Arius, an Eastern schismatic, viz., whether Jesus Christ was God or creature, and to settle the canon of scripture. Of course this meeting of two thousand bishops, each intensely interested in having his own peculiar opinions prevail, resulted in a general quarrel; and to restore harmony, Constantine, as moderator, expelled seventeen hundred and thirty of the delegates, thus leaving only three hundred and eighteen to settle the vexed questions of whether God the son was the same as God the father, and what writings were the word of God. 'This was done,' says one authority, 'by placing all the books under a communion table, and upon the prayers of the council, the inspired books jumped upon the table, while the false ones remained under.' But this method seems to hav proved a failure; the majority began to mock, and the wrangling was fiercer than before. They were then submitted to vote, each manuscript being subjected to two ballots, 1st, Whether genuin, or written by the person whose name it bore; 2d. Whether authentic—that is, whether its subject matter was true.

"Out of fifty gospels submitted, only four, viz., Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, were admitted, and those by varying votes. Luke passed by only one majority vote. Had one more voter been kicked out of the council the Christian world would hav been minus an inspired book.

"Subsequent councils received as canonical books rejected at Nice. One council would restore a book thrown out in a previous one. 'Thus,' says a writer, 'were the "sacred writings," the "word of God," tossed like a battledoor from sect to sect, and altered as the spirit of faction might dictate.' As illustrating the spirit that actuated the 'ordained heads' at these councils, the following is quoted from Tindal, the great Christian writer: 'Indeed, the confusion and disorder were so great amongst them (the bishops), especially in their synods, that it sometimes came to blows; as, for instance, Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, cuffed and kicked Flavianus, patriarch of Constantinople, with that fury that within three days after he died.' And speaking of their doctrinal consistency, he says: 'For though they were most obstinate as to power, they were most flexible in regard to faith; and in their council complimented the emperor with whatsoever creeds they had a mind to, and never scrupled to recant what they had before enacted, or re-enact what they had before recanted.'

From the fact that from the Council of Nice (325) to the end of that century there were thirty-eight councils called to settle the matter of controversy between Arius and Athanasius, and that nineteen of said councils decided in favor of the doctrins of the former, and nineteen—precisely the same number—that declared in favor of the doctrins of the latter, the inference is that the authority of the fathers, after all, was not final in the establishment of the true faith.

"The Nicene council ratified the creed of Athanasius, and condemned that of Arius. Constantine gave his imperial sanction to this decision, and set the seal of the empire upon the books there declared by ballot to be the 'word of God.'

"He also issued an edict declaring that those who resisted the divine judgment of the synod must prepare themselvs for an immediate exile. Eusebius of Nicodemia, for his wavering assent, was disgraced and exiled. Arius was banished into one of the remote provinces of Illyricum; his person and disciples were branded by law with odious names; his writings were condemned to the flames, and capital punishment was denounced against those in whose possession they should be found,

"The emperor had now imbibed the genuin Christian spirit, which has been ever one of persecution and intolerance; and and the angry, sarcastic style of his edicts was designed to inspire his subjects with the hatred which he had conceived against the enemies of Jesus Christ. But notwithstanding his zeal for the propagation of the new religion, it does not appear that he attempted any penance or expiation for his unparalleled crimes and cruelties. It was at Rome that he had exercised his most savage enormities.

"In the jurisprudence of Rome the person of a citizen had always been considered sacred from the application of the torture. Through all the annals of tyranny, from the reign of Tiberius to that of the first Christian emperor, the last hours of a Roman citizen were secured from the danger of ignominious torture. But during the reign of Constantine there was no privileged exemption from the torments of the dreaded rack. Slaves and citizens, plebeians and princes, the dignity of age and the tenderness of youth, were alike exposed to the most cruel tortures; and the terrors of a malicious information, which might select them as the accomplices, or even as the witnesses, perhaps of an imaginary crime, perpetually hung over the heads of the principal citizens of Rome. He put to death so many individuals of rank, in addition to the assassination of so many of his friends and relativs, that Rome at last cried out against him; he was openly insulted by the populace in the streets; placards were put upon the palace gates denouncing him as the second Nero; his residence at Rome ere long became hateful to him, and he quit it forever. He proceeded to the East to lay the foundations of Constantinople.

"And so he commenced the building of Constantinople in 327—"by the command of God," he says in one of his rescripts. But it is probable if any God ever gave him a command, it would hav been not to assassinate his wife and son.

"A few years before his death the Christian emperor espoused the cause of the Arians; in fact, he became an Arian himself, recalled the banished bishops, rebuilt their churches, and favored the sect that had hitherto been the object of his bitterest persecution. At the mature age of sixty-four, after a short illness, Constantine ended his memorable career in 337, at the palace Aquyrion, in the suburbs of Nicodemia, whither he had retired for the benefit of the air and the warm baths. He had celebrated the thirtieth year of his reign. None of his predecessors since Augustus had ruled Rome for so long a period. His corpse was carried to the city which was destined to preserve his name and memory as its founder. His body was adorned with the vain symbols of greatness, the purple and the diadem, and was deposited on a golden bed in one of the apartments of the palace, which had been splendidly furnished and illuminated for that purpose. The demonstrations of mourning surpassed those practiced on any previous occasion. The empire was divided between his three sons, Constantine, Constantius, and Constans."

Constantine's life and work are thus shown to be intimately associated with the growth of Christianity. That it should be indebted to a wholesale murderer, a man to whom the commission of fratricide, theft, and rapine was a mere pastime, to be repented of just before death in order to get to heaven, is certainly an evidence that its springs are not pure. The river of blood that has flowed on down through the ages since has its rise among these mountains of Constantine's crimes. He set an example that has been closely followed. His method of determing what is "holy writ" commended itself to the ecclesiastics, notwithstanding the insurmountable objection that a vote taken subsequent to the fact cannot change it. A vote can only determin what may be done, not what has been done. Yet this council called by Constantine has been a pattern for all subsequent ones, and the council of revision even in our time hav gravely proceeded to vote on whether a certain book is inspired of God, as though their affirmation could change the fact.

In establishing the Christian religion Constantine nursed a viper that has proved poisonous to all governments cherishing it. In the middle ages governments were made and destroyed by the pope, and to-day the weakest nations are those most closely allied by statute to the church. Christ's declaration that he came to bring not peace but a sword, and Peter's ready recourse to that weapon, are typical utterances and acts of the church. Had Constantine, says Alberger, though frenzied with ambition and crimsoned with guilt, beheld the boundless ocean of gore which was destined to flow from an incorporation of Christianity with the civil power, and to roll its heavy surge over all future time, he would hav been more obdurate than a fiend had he not cowled his head in horror at the frightful vision, and dropped in mercy the pen already inked to inaugurate the tremendous catastrophe.

The present draws lessons from the past, and it is important that the truth be known regarding the past. Can any believe that the man who killed in one day forty-five hundred people who refused the rite of baptism, and paid twenty pieces of gold for every convert, is a man to be worshiped! It's a queer thing, this Christianity. Its savior was sold by a trusted friend for thirty pieces of silver, and in less than four hundred years a renegade pagan was paying twenty pieces of gold to all who believed the story. And in this again do the churches follow Constantine. They offer positions of honor and trust to her followers, and the heathen are converted with shirts and rum.

Considering all the work for Christianity done by this monarch, his life and career are of the utmost importance to the world, and it is equally important that his crimes should be known. He, instead of Peter, is the rock upon which the church is built.

Of Interest to Mr. Lacy.

In our last issue Mr. F. D. Lacy made the following offer to Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker in an "open letter." This lady is well known as a stanch Materialist, a cool-headed, big-hearted, clear spoken friend of mental liberty, residing at Snowville, Pulaski county, Va., and it was in reply to her criticism of Mr. Lacy's new book, "Nature's Harmony," in which he sets forth his Spiritualistic views, that he made this offer. Mr. Lacy is a believer in the philosophy and phenomena of Spiritualism, and a man of unquestioned ability and responsibility. He said to Mrs. Slenker:

"Now I propose to giv you an opportunity of witnessing these phenomena, and test the reality of the communications for yourself. I will direct you to where you can get the 'independent slate writing' done between two slates, with or without pencil, with communication addressed to you from some friend who has 'passed over,' in their own handwriting, in answer to some question you may ask, known to no other mortal except yourself, and done while you are holding the slate in your own hands. Would such a test be satisfactory to you? If so, it will not be long before you will look upon this matter as I do. This test is very common out here, and if you would like it I can cite you to a score of slate writing mediums, where you can witness it, and some not far from where you are.

"That you may be assured of what I state, I will say should you fail to get the demonstrations as I hav stated them (which you shall not fail in) then charge me up for your time and the expense of your trip, and with it I will sacrifice five hundred dollars for the good of any institution of charity you may name."

A friend of Elmina's has taken the offer up for her, and sent us one hundred dollars to defray Elmina's expenses in case the spirits succeed, providing Mr. Lacy will deposit a like sum to pay the same in case the spirits fail. We are to hold the money for sixty days.

Mr. Lacy made a very square and plain offer to get communications from departed friends under conditions in which fraud or sleight-of-hand work on the part of the medium would seem to be impossible Mrs. Slenker's friend denies that this can be done and to experiment is willing to pay one hundred dollars. If Mr. Lacy is willing to do the same, he is to forward a like sum, and Mrs. Slenker is to proceed with her investigations. If she gets the communications under the conditions promised by Mr. Lacy, she, by her friend, pays the cost. If she fails, Mr. Lacy foots the bill to the amount of one hundred dollars.

If Mr. Lacy accepts the offer (his own, in fact) some interesting developments may be looked for.

Peculiar Morality.

The successor to Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, has called a meeting of the clergy of his diocese to consider what action should be taken toward raising "at least some little percentage" on the debts of the late Archbishop Purcell, his predecessor. He says he does not yet see grounds for "pronouncing it an obligation of justice that the diocese should pay these debts, except for such loans as were made for purposes of religion, and such sums as were expended for works of the diocese."

This is a dishonest statement of the facts. It has never been claimed by the church that Mr. Purcell and his brother spent the millions stolen from the poor on their own account, or on account of secular work. They was used to build churches and prosecute church work. This is commonly supposed to be religious work, and under the archbishop's own construction of his duty should be paid. If Purcell and his brother appropriated a portion of the immense funds in their hands to their own use, they ought to hav been arrested. The failure to do this proves that the money was all spent for "purposes of religion" (and therefore should be paid back by the church), or that the church shielded a couple of rogues. The refusal to pay all the debts of these ecclesiastical dignitaries will place the "holy mother church" in a peculiar predicament when questioned as to the honesty of her record in this country. But it will be entirely in keeping with her tradition to swindle her poor dupes out of every cent of the debt, and and then anathematize all who complain. The threat of excommunication will keep shut the mouths of most of her children who suffer from her confidence operations.

Old institutions are crumbling, and the Catholic church cannot long escape the general religious collapse. As a matter of policy, therefore, it behooves her to pay this debt. The time will shortly appear when a few million dollars will seem cheap to save her reputation and authority. To an honest man's eye the church building erected by misappropriated savings of the poor cannot by any clerical thaumaturgy be made sacred.

Notes.

E. P. POWELL, of Clinton, this state, writes to a New York journal that "religious newspapers are not acceptable" to farm hands "unless they include a good deal of variety." That means, unless they leave out their religious, and put in matter of contemporaneous human interest. The time was when a farmer's library was comprised of the "Pilgrim's Progress," Pollock's "Course of Time," the Bible, and some weekly religious sheet which never by any possible oversight printed anything less than eighteen hundred years old. Now, and in the West especially, may be found in the farmers' homes the latest scientific works, good secular papers, and, in a growing number of families, Freethought journals. The last fifty years hav witnessed a vast change in this country in this regard.

MR. HEYWOOD'S trial has been postponed to the October term of court. The case was called at Fitchburg on the 21st ult., Mr. Heywood arguing his own motion for continuance. The presiding judge, Mr. L. Barker, treated him civilly, and District Attorney Gaskell rather favored than opposed the adjournment. Mr. Heywood writes us that a decided change of public sentiment in his favor has taken place in that part of Massachusetts since last May. Mr. Andrews's statement in THE TRUTH SEEKER, of which we circulated several hundred copies where Mr. Heywood thought they would do the most good, appears to hav had a good effect. The malignant persecution to which he has been subjected is repugnant to the better sense of the American people, and will ultimately redound more to the credit and glory of the victim than to his persecutors. Giv Comstock's society rope enough and it will hang itself.

IN a book recently published in this city entitled "Winter In India," the author, Right Hon. W. E. Baxter, member of Parliament, tells some truths regarding the work of the missionaries in that country which must be rather unpalatable reading for the pious who hav invested heavily in Eastern heathen. "There are," he says, "very few converts to Christianity in this part of Hindostan. 'Very, very slowly,' said a missionary of the London Society to me the other day, 'does the work go on.' . . . . The attitude of the higher class of natives who hav abandoned their belief in Hindooism is not hopeful as far as Christianity is concerned." He particularly attacks the established church in India, where there are four bishops and many clergymen supported by taxation of the heathen, and asserts that even the light duties of their sinecures are not discharged with any approach to faithfulness. In other words, they are swindlers. Mr. Baxter, who is a Scotch Presbyterian and consequently a hater of the established church, concludes his religious observations in this wise:

"Here let me say that nothing so much impedes the progress of Christianity in that country as the proceedings of certain high church dignitaries, who so thoroughly mistake the doctrins of our most holy faith, and misrepresent the teachings of their divine master, as to treat clergymen of other denominations as beyond the pale, and very much on a level with the heathen. Hindoo inquirers ask if it is not true that a certain bishop says that the difference between Presbyterians and Episcopalians is fundamental, and that another bishop withdrew the licenses of twenty-three clergymen because they would not conform to his ritualistic practices. Every one I meet deplores the mischief done by bigots of this kinds It cannot be for a moment doubted that, although the converts of the missionaries in Hindostan are few and far between, their teaching is shaking to its very center the whole fabric of heathen mythology. The upper and educated classes hav no belief in the gods of their fathers."

There is not much doubt that the Eastern peoples are shaking off their belief in mythological deities, but they appear very unlikely to make the error of substituting for many harmless gods one huge god who is the enbodiment of tyranny and fury—the tutelary deity of the Jews. Scientific Materialism and occultism spread much faster in India than does Christianity. At least, that was Mr. Bennett's experience.

JUST before the Rochester Convention the Christian Advocate woke up to exclaim:

"The Freethinkers propose to hav rare sport in their next convention. They advertise that a 'champion of orthodoxy, a clergyman, one of the best theologians of the Methodist church,' the Rev. Thomas Mitchell, of Brooklyn, 'will speak in defense of Christianity;' on which we observe, 1. That Thomas Mitchell is not a regular minister of our church, but a local preacher. 2. That for many years he has had little connection with our church, having been running an independent conventicle of his own. 3. That he holds some queer and unorthodox notions, for preaching which, if he had been a member of an annual conference, he would hav been submitted to investigation. 4. He represents no one but Thomas Mitchell. 5. We hope that no Christian will be drawn into the den by a device of this kind. A Christian going into a crowd of that sort to advocate the gospel violates every teaching of Christ, especially this: 'Giv not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you.'"

So much the worse for the church if none but an un-orthodox champion dare stand up for orthodoxy. But as Mr. Mitchell was indorsed by two orthodox churches the Advocate's disavowal counts little. This desertion reminds us of that little incident in Jesus's life where

"The devil leaveth him, and, behold, angels came and ministered unto him."

If Mitchell didn't find the convention angelic, he at least found men and women too well bred to call their opponents swine. The Bible has many texts, and we would call Mr. Buckley's attention to this one on the propriety of calling names. For his information we will say it may be found in Matthew v, 22:

"But I [Jesus] say unto you that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment, and whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca [an expression of contempt] shall be in danger of the council; but whosoever shall say, thou fool, shall be in danger of hell-fire."

A Forecast of the Convention.

As we go to press we note the following among the Associated Press dispatches:

"Rochester, Aug. 27th.—Delegates from various parts of the country are already arriving for the Freethinkers' Convention that begins here on Wednesday forenoon. The prospects are that it will be much larger than any convention of the kind ever held in the United States. Lectures will be given by T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, Wednesday forenoon, on "What Constitutes a Freethinker;" by ex-Rev. Samuel P. Putnam, of New York, on 'Humanity in American Poetry; and by ex-Rev. George Chainey, of Boston, in the evening, on 'The Clergy.'"

THE North American Review for September is at hand. Its list of contributions are: "State Regulation of Corporate Profits," by Chief Justice T. M. Cooley, of Michigan, showing how far, by wise legislation and by applying in the spirit of enlightened jurisprudence the principles of the common law, the harrowing exactions of corporate companies and monopolies in general may be restrained, and the interests of the people effectually conserved. John A. Kasson, M.C., writes on "Municipal Reform," and offers suggestions for the abatement of the evils of misgovernment in our great municipalities that will command the earnest interest of all good citizens, without respect to party. Richard Grant White treats of "Class Distinctions in the United States," a subject that is destined to occupy more and more the attention of the American people as great fortunes increase. "Shooting at Sight" is the subject of some pertinent reflections by James Jackson, Chief Justice of the State of Georgia. In "Facts About the Caucus and the Primary," George Walton Green unveils the tricks practiced by political managers in large cities. The well-known English essayist, W. H. Mallock, contributes "Conversations with a Solitary," in which he sets forth with much ingenuity the arguments adverse to popular government. The Rev. Dr. D. S. Phelan contributes an article filled with absurd ideas and dogmatic statements, on the "Limitations of Freethinking." Finally, Grant Allen, the most charming of all living writers on natural history, discourses on "An American Wild Flower." Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

Communications.

Notes from the Lecture Field.

That the friends of Freethought along the line of my appointments may know where I am and what I am doing, I send these hastily written notes. At the present writing I am in East Portland, where I lectured last night on the "Definition and Defense of Liberalism," showing as well as I was able that the term Liberalism, as applied to the religious thought and Freethought element inside and outside of churches, is simply a sugar-coated word, and in its true significance means Infidelity. To talk of Liberal Christians is about like speaking of white blackbirds, and Liberal Christianity is to my mind, as a term, incorrect, anomalous, and confusing.

To be a Christian is to believe the Christian creed, and to disbelieve the creed is to be an Infidel.

Unitarians are no more Christians than Jews are Christians.

Henry Ward Beecher is no more a Christian than Robert G. Ingersoll is a Christian. They are both good men, but moral goodness is not Jewish nor Christian, but human, and belongs to the race.

Infidelity, to my mind, is the proper word to designate all unbelievers in sacred lies, and we shall fight it out on that line although the word Liberal, denoting a larger freedom of thought, is more easy of digestion to weak stomachs who are just emerging from the shell of orthodoxy.

Since I wrote you from Seattle I hav spoken at Eagle Creek, giving the Fourth of July oration and three lectures, remaining over Sunday. Our thanks for myself and wife are due to our friends Wilbern McElsander and others for cordial reception and substantial support in our work.

Our next appointment at Corvallis found B. F. Hyland, a stanch friend of THE TRUTH SEEKER, at the depot with four carriages well filled with Infidels to meet us, and a right royal reception it was, and for audiences and generous support we note a marked improvement since our last visit.

And the town, although almost eaten up by religious superstition, givs many signs of mental freedom; and if God or that other fellow will only spare our friends Hyland and Wheeler a few more years, something good will yet grow up in Corvallis. Our hearty thanks are due to all who helped us to dispense the gospel of Nature in Corvallis.

Our thanks are due at Albany to Judge Mansfield and family for much kindness during our stay in their beautiful city.

Our next appointment found us at Salem, the capital of the state. Here we met Prof. Chaney, the old astrologer and war-horse of Freethought, also Denton Cridge, nephew of William Denton, a brilliant young man who bids fair to rival his uncle Denton for backbone and scientific attainment.

Many thanks are due at Salem to Col. Reed for the free use of his fine opera house for our lectures, and to friend Hawkins and others for kindness received, and especially to Brother and Sister Cline for true sympathy and cordial welcome.

At East Portland we had a large and most attentive audience, notwithstanding a large tent was in full blast showing up the prophecies and the beast with numerous heads and horns, and the great importance of getting ready to meet Christ when he shall come to make up his jewels. Well, I looked over the tent audience and thought if the jewels of heaven are to be made up of such a mass of ignorance and superstition, I am still willing to take all the chances on hell.

Our thanks are due here to our friends Crites, Hendee, S. M. Keenan, and others.

From here I go to eastern Oregon to speak at Pendleton, Island City, Somerville, Union, Baker, and Prairie City.

Please send as indicated in my private letter THE TRUTH SEEKER. J. L. YORK.

Ho for Rochester, Mitchell and Wakeman, Watts of England, Etc.!

It is evident that a large and enthusiastic gathering of Liberals will take place at Rochester on the 29th and thereafter. The signs are multiplying that H. L. Green is doing his usual masterly work, and all the lines are laid for a successful advance and capture of the enemy's guns. Let it not for a moment be imagined that this convention is merely for display. It is for thought and for action. Never before has the Liberal movement assumed such wide significance, and struck so many chords in human hope and aspiration. It does hold the golden promis of the future. More and more is this evident to all deeply thinking minds. The past must be remolded. The old ideals are being fast swept away; and with new conceptions of history come new conceptions of man's progress and destiny. As Mr. Wakeman nobly says, science is king; and it is as messengers of this new kingdom—the kingdom of man, the republic of the race—that we stand to-day. It is no empty word that we speak—it is the freighted gospel of humanity. Would that each Liberal might realize his responsibility and his social duty. It is not for ourselvs that this glowing thought of freedom is in our hearts and minds. It is for the world—for all the millions of the human race. The truth we hold is not too good for the humblest, the most ignorant man upon this planet. It can make him happier and better. It can make his toil more rich and beautiful, and this earth more dear and sweet to his burdened life. It can remove all horror from his path, and unfold, even for his lonely way, the most beneficent powers of nature. It is for joy, and peace, and comfort, and wealth, and growth, to every man and woman and child, that we now labor. It is for the consecration of humanity to its noblest effort that we would send forth the rallying cry and bring all our hosts into council.

I think this is to be a most eventful convention. In the first place there is to be a pitched battle between Christianity and Freethought. The champion of Christianity is to appear armed cap-a-pie. No doubt he will make a valiant display, and strike some savage blows, whether they hit the mark or not. He comes attested by the magnates of the church. He is a bold warrior, I guess, and it certainly will be worth one's while to hear and see this doughty disputant who dares to beard the lion in his den. Of course, he will come off with a whole skin; we shall not burn him at the stake; instead of that, we shall furnish him with a good square meal and a comfortable bed. If he fails, it will not be for lack of careful and neighborly attentions on our part. We shall do all we can to make him achieve his level best.

But the main interest of the convention will center in the reply, for the man and the opportunity will meet in fortunate conjunction. Of course, no other man is to be thought of than T. B. Wakeman, who by years of toil and study has made himself master of this many-sided Liberal movement, and revealed its "burning core" with the illuminations of his genius and learning. It will be worth one's pilgrimage for many a mile to listen to his noble presentation of our cause. That cause is not by any means to be learned in a day. All history contributes to its meaning. Every discovery of science is a part of its revealing beauty. Music, art, poetry, from the song of Homer to the greater song that is to come in the new and vaster struggles of the race, make known the greatness of the day that is coming. On the advancing forehead of our chosen orator this light has flashed, and we may be sure that every falsehood of our adversary will be made plain, and the truth that he may speak will be turned back upon him with crushing effect. We shall not win a barren victory, merely for applause and self-satisfaction; but we shall hav a statement of our hopes and aims, of the truth we hold and the impulse we feel, that will be of permanent value in the literature of humanity. It will be a memorable occasion, for in Mr. Wakeman, more perhaps than in any other, the broad and deep things of Liberalism hav found a most skilful interpreter.

Then on Sunday, the Lord's day, we are to hav Mr. Watts—and a lord's day we will hav of it with the valor of our British cousin. How he will chastise the "Philistines" of the church! We know what his metal is, and the service that he can perform. In him we shall find one of the best representativs of the Old World Liberalism. It is well for us to be thus reminded of the great movement that is going on across the water, to realize the hope, the energy, the boundless enthusiasm and courage that are in it. Mr. Watts has a grand story to tell us, and thousands of Liberals should perform a "Sabbath day's journey"—and several of them—to listen to his eloquent words.

Then there will be Chainey, and Leland, and Burnham, and Babcock, and others—a noble company; and thus all our brother Green's most glowing prophecies will be fulfilled, and the convention will be a most notable event. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Resolutions for the Convention's Consideration.

Mr. Lewis Masquerier has handed us a copy of the resolutions he forwarded to Mr. Green to be presented to the Rochester Convention. They read as follows:

WHEREAS, The institutions of all nations are founded upon creeds and laws that produce a parasitically religious and political priesthood, who, with the usurped power of rack-taxage, rentage, and percentage, are monopolizing more than each person's individual, equal, and perpetual or entailed right to a share of the soil, and who, also, are usurping more than each person's inalienable right to a share of sovereignty or the right to vote directly for the law and not for candidates, erroneously supposed to represent them; thus producing a landless and non-self-ruling people, while demoralizing and debasing them into pauperism, crime and misery, under an earnest or hypocritical delusion of an original depravity of man's nature.

Therefore, be it resolved, By the present Freethinkers' Convention of New York, that Liberal associations be organized in every township in New York, and that they also should be established in other states and nations.

Resolved, That the meetings should be held in the dwellings, shops, barns, sheds, etc., of the central places in the townships, during the afternoons of every Sunday; and that all earnest Liberals should welcome the missionary friends free of charge for entertainment and room for meetings.

Resolved, That a fund be established to enable lecturers without the means, to go around through each township or county in New York, with printed constitutions to aid in organizing societies, and with blank spaces to write in their names. I hereby tender the association one hundred dollars now in bank to aid the movement.

Resolved, That the object in organizing these Freethinking associations is to instruct mankind in the thorough principles and system upon which society should be founded, while the present partially civilized nations, with their erroneous office-holding governments, are incorporating, with the stimulus of large gifts of land, railroading companies, who, aided by canaling and shipping ones, are distributing by emigration a superior enterprising and laboring people upon the uncultivated lands of savage ones, resulting in the better culture and manufacture of their products; thus advancing civilization in art only, while producing such a monopoly of property and power that they are unwittingly preparing mankind for the last phase or form that the moral world can attain in the institution of inalienable and moral democracies, consisting of every human being's ownership and use of separate, equal, and entailed farmsteads, secured from all liability to become alienated by any tax, rent, mortgage, debt of any kind, wills, etc., forever. LEWIS MASQUERIER.

Mr. Lewis Masquerier has published an appendix to his "Sociology; or, the Scientific Reconstruction of Society," of which the Brooklyn Daily Advertiser says:

"This pamphlet throws an electrical, mental light upon the thorough principles of rights and wrongs, and is the most Radical treatis issued since Paine's "Common Sense." Paine's age was only ripe for our separation, and for the writing down of monarchies to the so-called constitutional republics, which this age now shows are only moderated forms of monarchy and humbug oligarchies, falsely called representativ governments. For the voting of candidates, even by universal suffrage, only confirms the already alienated sovereignty or power of government by the people.

He originates rights in the inseparable connection of man's organs with the surrounding elements, and classifies rights and wrongs like other great classes of things far superior to the partial one of Blackstone. He has developed, for the first time in the history of social science, the three great principles that must co-operate in the production of a perfect right. The author, Lewis Masquerier, has blazed out with a mental light upon the moral world along with the electric light of Brush and Edison in the physical."

One of these appendixes will be sent by us to every purchaser of his "Sociology" (price, $1), or it may be ordered separate for ten cents.

The N. L. L. Congress.

THE call for the seventh annual congress of the National Liberal League is as follows: All citizens of the United States who believe in the fundamental principles of our republic; separation of church and state, equality of all citizens before the law without distinction of creed, or race, or sex; justice for all and privileges and monopolies for none; the need of universal secular education, free speech, and a free press, as the basis of universal suffrage, are invited to join the National Liberal League, and to appear or to be represented in its seventh annual congress, to be held in Freie Gemeinde Hall, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, September 21st, 22d, and 23d, 283 (1883). The League has for its objects, and has sought to carry out the principles above stated by securing:

1. The total separation of church and state; this is the first and chief object of the League, and includes, among other things, the taxation of church property and the suppression of sectarian appropriations; and, as necessary to that general object, the League insists upon. 2. The protection of all citizens in their equal religious, civil, and political rights, without regard to religious belief or want of such belief. 3. The universal, secular, and scientific education of the people, so as to emancipate them from the prevalent superstitious "religions." 4. The impartial, secular administration and enforcement of the laws by secular authorities only, who shall be directly responsible to the people. 5. The inviolability of the mails and their impartial administration for postal purposes only. 6. A free press and no censorship by churches through amateur societies under state laws, nor through postal officials under United States laws.

Year by year we find that the above principles and measures are openly or covertly violated more and more in every state and by the general government, and chiefly through church influences. Any sect, church, or "religion" that militates against these principles, openly or covertly, directly or indirectly, is the enemy of American liberty and of the American people. The League is opposed to churches and "religions" only as they are opposed to liberty and to the rights of man. All American citizens, therefore, to whom these principles and objects commend themselvs, should rally to the National Liberal League, and make it the nurse and defender of freedom in every town and state as well as in the nation. In no other way can "the blessings of liberty," the birthright of American freemen, be so effectivly maintained. Hence, there is not a man or a woman on this continent whose worth, usefulness, and dignity would not be enhanced by giving attendance or aid to the congresses of the League. Never since the original League congress of 1876 has an assembly met having more important principles and measures before it than the coming congress. It meets to accomplish the fundamental purposes of the patriots of 1776. They will hav failed, unless the objects of the League are attained. To aid in this noble work it is only necessary to join, or to organize, an Auxiliary Liberal League in your neighborhood. For terms and mode of organization address the secretary without delay. All charter and life members of the League, and all delegates from local auxiliary Leagues, will hav votes in the congress. Each auxiliary is entitled to send five delegates its president, secretary, and three other members, to the congress. Annual members are entitled to seats in the congress, and to votes by permission of the congress. Combine, then, for the common defense, for general secular education, and for the firm support of the essentials of free institutions. Let it not be your fault if in the growth and prosperity of our people, their liberties and yours are frittered away and lost! T. B. Wakeman, president, N. L. L.; Elizur Wright, first vice-president; T. C. Leland, secretary, 744 Broadway, New York city.

Letters from Friends.

LA VETA, HUERFANO CO., August 1, 1883.

MRS. M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed please find $3 currency. My absence in the mountains must excuse my being so delinquent. The extra fifty cents you can, if you choose, apply to the Monument Fund; it is a sorry satisfaction to apply it to such a purpose, but regrets are late, now, and useless. I am glad THE TRUTH SEEKER still seems to flourish under its present able management, and was pleased to find it well known and gladly read in out-of-the-way mining camps in this state; a few back numbers I had with me being eagerly sought after. I wish you continued prosperity. Yours, E. H. BELCHER.

BRENTWOOD, August 7, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I like THE TRUTH SEEKER, and am one of those who highly appreciate the discussion that has been going on between Andrews, Putnam, and Wakeman. I not only read but study anything that either of these gentlemen write. Please don't haul them up too hard with your check-rein.

There is more truth in it than there appears, and I am glad to see THE TRUTH SEEKER giv a little head to this matter.

Wishing THE TRUTH SEEKER abundant success, I remain, Yours for the truth as it is in science,

WM. U. DAME.

CENTERVILLE, UTAH, August 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The inclosed I send you to ask you to please send me the pamphlet, "Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated;" also the tract, "Sinful Saints and Sensual Shepherds," for I lent the last-named to a lady the day I received it, and she has lost it or something, and I had not read it; so please send me another one.

I see many books in your catalog I would like, but I hav not the means to send for them, for living here among the infernal Mormon, law-breaking, lecherous crew I get a mighty poor chance to earn money or anything else.

I am glad Mr. Munn has written what he has in THE TRUTH SEEKER about them; but he has not told all, by a long way. These Mormons, as a sect, are a nasty, sneering, evasiv, make-game class of beings, and it is seldom you can get an answer from any of them to a question that is of any importance. And the leaders brag, and often hav said, that the United States government—nor all the powers of earth and hell combined—cannot put down polygamy. Oh, what a disgrace and reproach it is to the goverment to permit these Mormon scalawags to defy the law the way they are doing, and to fill the country with their legions of illegitimate children, and instill in them a hatred and animosity toward the government and all who do not believe in the infernal Mormon fraud! Here in this territory are many thousands more of males than females, and the nasty, lecherous scoundrels tell the poor, ignorant females there is no salvation for them outside the Mormon church. And the scoundrels make their ignorant dupes believe in the myth of a Jew Bible God, and that old Taylor has revelations from him; and that it is for them to do as they are told by the Mormon priesthood, and ask no questions—thus fettering the people from the exercise of their own reason.

I was here when the Mountain Meadows massacre took place, and I saw these people, and remember the diabolical and infamous teaching of Brigham Young, and others of his class, at that time. Truly those were times of terror here, and a man hardly dared to speak, or say his soul was his own. There was a "reformation" started here in 1856, and oh, what bloody, cutthroat doctrin was taught in those days!—and the infamous covenants made in that infernal Endowment House (I call it the sink-hole of iniquity), where they took their secret oaths! It would take a volume to write this vile Mormon record, and I am glad Mr. Munn has said what he has in regard to it, and I hope if there are any more of your subscribers in Utah who were here in 1856, and for years after, they will write about it, and let the world know the true inward workings of this vile institution. They would now, if they could, drive every gentile out of the territory, and cut the throats of all of us ungodly apostates. But I am glad those days are gone, and that the scoundrels dare not say and do as they once said and did here. We hav Uncle Sam's troops too handy for service if required. I hope the principles of Freethought will gradually hav such an influence on the minds of the people of this priestridden country that they may see the necessity of cultivating and exercising their own reason and better judgment, and let the myth of the Bible go. Yours for the truth,

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

WANTED, HONEST MEN TO JOIN AN AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUE.

CORVALLIS, August 1, 283.

MR. EDITOR: Friends of THE TRUTH SEEKER, rejoice! The seed sown two years ago by Dr. J. L. York has produced fruit. When his last lecture closed there was only one lady in the congregation, and he left here quietly, only the small voice remaining like yeast to work while we slept, until in the course of human events it was necessary for the doctor to proclaim salvation in the name of the most high to this be-christianed community. Therefore, the arrangements being perfected, I wrote to the doctor to come and I would meet him at the depot with a team, and that the other stables would send at least one team each to escort him and wife to their lodgings and welcome them to our priest-ridden town. He read it and looked up to his wife, saying, "Hyland is joking;" but it was no joke as they rolled into the depot. Here stood the teams plenty, and the finest lot of smiling ladies our town can afford—eleven in number—who greeted them with a hearty welcome. They were then assisted into the finest carriage our town affords, and escorted to one of our finest residences, that owned and occupied by Captain William Stevens. Thus we made a flurry, which was a more sure token of redeeming grace than heavy thunder is of refreshing showers, and surely the glory of God was made manifest with such mighty power that it shook Old Orthodoxy from center to circumference, so that its votaries, the egotistic bigots, congregated on the street corners and did nothing but curse and call the doctor and his supporters fancy names, such as Comstock hunts for but can't find among Infidels. Yet not a man of them dared say that he made one misstatement either on or off the rostrum, and he said plainly that the Christians' god was a myth, their Jesus Christ never lived, their holy ghost was only common wind, and as sure as the world was round there was no heaven above it or fiery hell below it. And he dared the entire clergy of our town to bring their congregations to the City Hall and attempt to prove a syllable to the contrary, and he would make the truth so plain that the most ignorant would cease to believe, and every place of worship would soon be placarded for sale or rent.

We raised the money to pay for our course of lectures from those who wanted to giv, discarding utterly the Christian practice of begging and passing the hat, and among those who wanted to giv were no preachers, no lawyers. Yes, Dr. Heslop prefers knowledge to belief, and in this violently Christian community knowledge is called on only after the multitude of believers hav failed. So, in addition to medical practice, our friend takes photos, and as Dr. York and wife had never seen their photos on one card, Dr. Heslop had the pleasure of first producing them also. Dr. York contributed $6 worth of his own to the cause, and I send one of each herewith, the two on a card especially to Mrs. Bennett, as she must appreciate those who contributed so much to Mr. Bennett's happiness on his return trip round the world. If others want them they can get them at 50 cents each of Dr. Heslop, Corvallis, Oregon.

Our speaker was paid by your correspondent and Hama Lewis, giving $10 each, and John Moore, Thos. Eglin, Capt. Wm. Stephens, and Mr. Wheeler, $5 each, with a large number of smaller sums. Then, to save expense, we had arranged for the court-house, but a new set of subscribers came forward and paid for the City Hall, so that salvation might be proclaimed in good style, and when the last Christian gun was spiked and the doctor must leave to proclaim far and wide that the good fraternity of man is at hand and fast superseding and replacing the kingdom of God that for thousands of years has degraded and benighted poor downtrodden humanity, Mr. Eglin, of the City Stables, said his horses were free, so we took a carriage and drove down the valley to Albany, the next county seat, and left our guests among friends. As we were enjoying our ride the doctor remarked, "Well, we hav had really a good time, but you don't know how the cold chills crawled up my back when thinking of delivering a course of Liberal lectures in your religion-cursed town!"

B. F. HYLAND.

XENIA, July 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: For thousands of years mankind hav racked their brains in order to find out how everything that is applied to their senses came into existence. The Bible theory of creation has at all times deprived man of the real cause of existence, providing there is a cause. Man would judge from what he can see, hear, and feel, that there was a cause, and that all he sees, hears, and feels is but the effect of some cause; reasoning from analogy, this theory would be correct; then, again, if there was a cause, that would not exist without another cause to produce it—and so on indefinitly. If matter ever had a beginning, there must hav been something to make it out of, also a maker. We see that matter undergoes changes; how does it force itself to undergo those changes? or is there something not yet understood that compels matter to change its condition and location? As far as man has any knowledge of nature (which includes matter) there is no change, except as that change is forced upon it by intelligence. Now the question arises, What is this intelligence?

It costs the people of the United States not less then 250,000,000 dollars a year to support a set of priests and ministers; and for what purpose? They tell us it is for the purpose of saving souls. And at the same time there is not one of the gang that can giv to any one an intelligent idea what the soul is. The only answer they can giv is this, It is the immortal part of man. They forget, or else do not know, that matter is just as immortal as the soul, never having had a beginning and will never hav an end. Now, the question arises, are they honest to take from the people their living, and never render any equivalent? They cannot even enlighten their dupes, and the more ignorant they keep them the longer they can fleece them. We often hear them prate about the spirit and the soul, and at the same time they are too ignorant to define either. The Materialists tell us that matter produced intelligence under laws; but if matter constitutes everything, there is no laws. The ministers tell us that intelligence produced matter out of nothing, and one position is just as foolish as the other. There is no evidence in the universe applicable to man's senses to prove either position. Should we view matter from an objectiv standpoint we must come to the conclusion that it was produced, but who or what produced them? It is a fact not to be denied, that no object ever produced itself; hence, as an object, it must hav had a producer. One man says that matter is endowed with the properties of life; grant it, but who or what is the endower? That is the question for the Materialist to answer. We hav no evidence that all things in nature are self-productiv. What givs to matter the power to reproduce? I say matter never had any such power. There is no man smart enough to prove that mattter produces memory, and there is no man smart enough to prove that something came from nothing. So we see that the Materialist and the Christian are both straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel. Let us look at another idea. Matter always existed and could never undergo a single change, were it not for some power back of or independent of it. I call that power intelligence, and that always existed. The physical man could not exist without the spiritual, neither could matter exist without intelligence, and at the same time intelligence does not create matter, as it has nothing to create it out of, but it controls matter. Matter does not create intelligence, neither does intelligence create matter; both always existed and always will exist. Intelligence can comprehend itself. Is it matter that instructs the object to reproduce, or is it spirit? One says that spirit is a result. I say it is not a result, but the direct cause of all the different manifestations in and through matter. Is it matter that makes clay into bricks and then puts them into a building? I say no; it is spirit or intelligence. The Materialist says it is law, and at the same time there is nothing in existence but matter, hence no space for law, as law is matter, if their theory is true. The ministers say it is God through law; if God is omnipotent and omnipresent, then he embraces all. Hence there is no law. One theory is just as silly to me as the other. I say that matter and spirit (or intelligence) always existed, and ever will. Neither has a distinct, separate existence, and it is by the action of intelligence upon and through matter that we hav all the millions of different manifestations in nature we see, hear, feel, taste, and smell. Should I feel like using my pen again upon this subject, I will show how spirit uses matter in order to produce what is called evolution in matter from the lower to the higher. I. D. SEELY.

NEWPORT, ME., August 15, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: There is no person living that has tried harder to school themselvs to be charitable to those who differ from them than I hav, and I think I would contend as earnestly for the rights of Christians or Infidels as for Spiritualists; but whether I am charitable or uncharitable, I tell you that I am sick and disgusted with the senseless clatter and nonsense of those who are determined to die; and I say with many others of my friends that I almost wish that the doctrin that "death ends all" might be true with them.

While my spirit is richly fed by the cheerful words of such writers as A. B. Bradford and others, I hav not an infinitesimal particle of love or sympathy with the advocates of eternal sleep.

Through all the long discussion on this subject in THE TRUTH SEEKER, I hav carefully read both sides, but I hav read the last article I ever will read on this coldest, and most cheerless of all beliefs that ever was advocated by man or woman.

If this life is all there is for mankind, then there is nothing whatsoever to liv for. If this life is all, stop the wheels of time, blot the sun out of the heavens, and wind up everything as soon as possible, for life here is a most miserable failure.

But if Spiritualism is false, if this life is all there is for man, even then it is the grandest, most elevating, most cheerful of all the teachings that ever has been promulgated for five thousand years.

Why? Because it cheers millions of otherwise desponding souls at every step they take, and if, when the time comes to depart, they die, they are never to know it, but hav been made happy all their days in this only belief that teaches the true way of life.

But I know that there is no death, that we shall liv on in a grand and beautiful spiritual world, where compensation for all will be the reward of all noble souls.

But is this all that can be said in favor of Spiritualism? Very far from it.

Go back thirty-five years previous to the advent of modern Spiritualism, and where do we find woman?

A slave, made so by the Christian church. But where is she to-day? Made free by this grandest philosopy the world has ever seen. Thousands of lectures hav been given by spirits through woman—and men too—without the least study or previous preparation, which hav thrilled the hearts and fed the people as no others hav done.

Spiritualism has done more to revolutionize the world than anything that ever came to our earth. Would any one pretend that L eral lecturers like Robert G. Ingersoll would get the grand audiences they do if th people had not been Liberalized by Spiritual lecturers?

Read the notices, and attend the Spiritual camp-meetings, and you will soon be convinced that Spiritualism is doing a grand work for the elevation of humanity. And yet Spiritualism is only in its infancy. It has hardly commenced its elevating work yet.

A word about spirit paintings and healing mediums and I close. I hav seen pictures painted while the medium was blindfolded, with twelve thicknesses over her eyes, and the medium who painted them was controled by two spirits at the same time; one controling the hand to paint, and the other spirit holding conversation with those standing near by.

There are thousands of healing mediums who are doing a grand work; one, among others, is Dr. Horace Field, of Dexter, Me., and the story he related to me last Saturday in his own office, and the confirmation by the girl herself the same day, filled me with more pleasure than I can ever express in words. A woman, a Mrs. Drake, of Athens, Me., was more than a half hour in telling me of the wonderful cure performed on her by Dr. Field, not long ago. And this Dr. Field was a farmer's son, never having studied medicin at all. But I am not the one to do justice to this greatest wonder of the nineteenth century. Spiritualism will yet redeem this world, and make it a paradise.

THE TRUTH SEEKER was never better than now, especially the editorials. SEWARD MITCHELL.

PINAL, ARIZ., August 11, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In response to your call to help spread the light, I inclose a list of twenty-five names; which I take the liberty to send without the knowledge or consent of the individuals concerned. Some are professed Christians. Some are indifferent, with scarcely any opinion pro or con, but from mere habit, and a desire to be on the popular side, lean toward the church. Others are Freethinkers, but timid about expressing their sentiments in public. I sincerely hope that all of these (and many others) may become regular subscribers to your noble gospel of light and truth, and thereby develop into true, upright, and self-reliant men and woman, casting off forever the cringing, superstitious fear of a "dread majesty in the skies." I make no pretensions to literary culture or scientific lore, hence I seldom write anything for publication. But I do a great deal of reading and thinking, that is, when I can snatch the time from mechanical labor to do so.

If you will allow me a little space, I would like to giv expression, in my imperfect style, to a few thoughts that impress my mind. Some of your correspondents ask, Should Liberals take part in politics? But why ask such a question? When we are confronted with the indisputable fact that the minions of the church, backed by capital, aided and encouraged by corruptible courts, and championed in the halls of legislation by truckling political hucksters, calling themselvs Republicans and Democrats (for some of whom the penitentiaty would be the proper place); when we see this motley crew working together in dead earnest, like beavers, with intent and purpose to undermine the foundation of our republic, by engrafting into our Constitution the name and principles of an imaginary being they call God, originated in the brain of crude and ignorant man; when we consider the underhand, persistent, and stealthy methods by which these parties work to accomplish their ends; and when we further contemplate the great mass of indifferentism which in politics and religion has no mind of its own, but is swept along with the strongest popular current—now, with all the above, and other symptoms visible, is there no cause of alarm that their efforts may be eventually crowned with success? And if so, what then? The death of liberty. Yes, this is their aim, and it is their only hope. If they cannot invoke the power of the law to uphold their declining god and his tottering throne, they know that he is doomed to fall, and their traffic in gawdology will vanish forever (may the day speedily come). While the great mass of the people sleep in fancied security, seemingly unconscious of transpiring events; and worse than all, even Liberals, able, talented, noble, high-minded men and women, capable with their eloquence (as it were) to raise the dead from their quiet slumbers (almost), how grevious, how sad the prospect, to behold this grand array of talent, this mountain of towering intellect, dividing itself into factions and devoting their time, their energy, and the valuable columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, to virulent discussion of an immaterial, undefinable, unprovable nonentity, an immortal soul (in short), a myth; while, at the same time, the allied enemy of Freethought, free speech, free press, and free government, is steadily advancing, step by step, already stretching forth his hand to grasp the outposts of liberty; first, the schools. next the press, and finally the government itself. Having been for years a silent but close observer of public affairs, I think I am fully warranted in saying that no true American patriot, no lover of liberty, of justice and equal rights to all, no one who wishes to see labor dignified, and the laborer respected, comfortable, prosperous, and happy, should any longer giv countenance or support to the Republican party (so called). As now organized, I am convinced beyond a doubt in my mind that the leaders of the party are in league with the money power and with the church to enslave the laboring and producing classes of this country, and establish in place of this republic, a moneyed and semi-theocratic government. To prove this, if I had time and space, I could show an array of acts and facts that point to such a result as surely as effect follows cause. But your columns will not admit of it in this article. In conclusion, let me say to Liberals of every shade of opinion: Cease your irrational warfare about mere opinions; let the soul and the future provide for itself when the proper times arrives (if it ever does). Turn about and face the real material enemy of liberty and progress. Giv your attention and your talent to this life, where they are so much needed, and learn to realize the fact that the great battle of human freedom has yet to be fought, either by the ballot or the bullet. Unite your forces, unfurl your banner to the breeze, inscribed with the nine demands of Liberalism, and in the language of the immortal Jackson, swear by the eternal, These must and shall be preserved!

I. A. BROADBECK.

POSTSMOUTH, August 10, 283

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $2.00 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for as long as it will pay for it.

I am in dead earnest a confirmed Infidel, and one of many long years standing, and hav many good reasons for being an unbeliever. I am proud of it. All that is needed for the advancement of the cause of truth and freedom of the mind here in this city of 17,000 inhabitants is a press and an editor, or at least a traveling lecturer. I could promis one free board say for one week, in case a hall could be provided gratis, which I fear could not be done, though there are a great many Infidels, Liberals, Spiritualists, and Freethinkers in our city. The clergy hav a recent secret organization here, the object of which is to injure, ostracize, and as much as possible persecute and discourage the Infidel element in opposition to their teachings, which they (the most of them) know to be false. It is this inquisitorial sort of persecution on their part that I am most anxious now in the decline of life to expose and break up, because I hav been, and still am, a marked victim of their hate, because, though not rich, I hav exercised the moral courage to dare to do, and, as far as I am able, to expose their selfish cupidity. Could not you influence some Infidel lecturer to visit our town, if only to see what could or might be done to further the good cause here? I could afford one comfortable lodgings for a few days while he is feeling round, and could introduce him to our leading advocates—A. McFarlin, local editor of the Portsmouth Tribune and Republican, now past middle age, and a gentleman in every respect; also our leading apostle of Spiritualism, Mr. C. W. Cotton, foreman and stockholder in a large hub and spoke factory here; old Mr. Jesse Appler, by the way, one of our noted readers and historians, and a chemist; Dr. J. M. Wright, physician and dentist; Hon. H. C. Towne, lawyer; H. W. Farnham, and, lastly, by name, occupation, etc., the worthy mayor of our city, John McFarland, known for many years as the "infant blacksmith," and weighing 208 lbs., and many other lesser lights, such as you humble servant. Will giv you a sample how persecuting and intolerant one of our old Presbyterian preachers here is—E. C. Pratt by name. One day, near the post-office, we met, himself opening the ball, and, as is common, one word breeding another. Among other things edifying and amusing and instructing to me, he told me that I was "in danger of hell-fire." I ironically replied that I knew it; would he be so kind as to tell me something that I did not know? Then he asserted that "I did not know how wicked I was." I replied that I admitted that fact also, for, being a farmer, I could not be expected to know much, but thought that if I kept on much longer in the hell-fire road, I would soon be as wicked as he was, and that I had always noticed that the habit of going on from bad to worse generally fetched up in the pulpit. Please do not infer from this that I am either bad or wicked. On the contrary, let me assure you, my dear sir and co-worker in this cause of mental liberty and Freethought, that it is my well-known probity, moral courage, high standing, and an opposer of all wrong, believing priestcraft to be the worst and most fruitful source of evil and degrading in its object and results, that caused me to be for many long years the center of their malicious treatment and most holy hatred. If they dared, they would send me to hell bareheaded and barefooted, and without the benefit of clergy, and in the love, name, and mercy of their orthodox god, pray for the power to do it. Although Infidel that I am, I believe the soul to be immortal, and that we in a future state or condition will take cognizance of and remember the "deeds done in the body, whether good or evil;" and in this, and this only, constitutes the source of rewards or punishments hereafter, if there be such; and any opportunity or omission to expose priestcraft would cause any honest or decent man to blush for shame that he did not fight and expose those sycophants and parasites who liv like vermin on the crests of lions and dogs. I am getting old now—66 years—and the older I get, the stronger and more convinced I am that reason, truth, science, and knowledge are all-powerful, and in the end will over priestcraft and error prevail, and their present progress givs me comfort in my declining years. Send THE TRUTH SEEKER to my address. JAS. H. FEURT.

P. S.—May you and THE TRUTH SEEKER liv forever.

BROOKLYN, E. D., August 29, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: With me it is almost sun-down, and at my octogenarian age I hav little more to expect of this world's ever changeful allurements to a better state of things, and, consequently, rest measurably contented with the prospect before me. I think you hav an equal portion of readers and subscribers to your valuable paper, Spiritualists and skeptics, and you honestly and wisely giv both parties a proper use of your columns. Permit me to address myself more particularly to the Spiritual portion of your readers, as it is only that class who can, from actual knowledge, fully comprehend or fully understand what I may say.

I wonder much that Spiritualists waste time and energy in argumentativ replies in attempting to convince the obtuse intellects of some of your "eternal snoozers" that there is something yet to learn. There are actually people so self-satisfied with the stormy condition of this world

> "That they would not serve God
> If the devil bid them."

Spiritualists hav lately had let loose upon them another "expose" by a J. W. Truesdell, of Syracuse, price $1.50. Spiritualism is bound to go under this time sure. In regard to spiritual exposures, so far, in this mysterious philosophy, my faith has survived quite a number. With regard to the acquisition of truth, in the early days of Spiritualism I purchased and read almost everything in that line that was invented and published. First there was the Rev. Toe-snapping Burrs; then came the Rev. H. Mattison, A.M., Methodist pastor in John street, New York city; then came Prof. Page, of Washington; then the Rev. Dr. Dodd, the mesmerist. However, in justice to this gentleman, I must state he afterward published a book retracting his former opinions and statements. Next came Commissioner Thomas Ewebanks, of Washington. Of the fifing round of such eccentricities as J. F. Coles—sometimes talking one way and sometimes another, I hav seen and heard much. In truth, I hav quite a library of spiritual exposures, but the singular feature of all this was, each new exposure either neutralized or contradicted the statements of all its predecessors.

I always wished to be right, but, tired out with chasing after these so-called rascally Spiritualists through outside channels, I found in my own dwelling I could obtain all the knowledge necessary to found a faith.

Now there is one peculiarity in the Spiritual philosophy which renders it different from all others, and that is, the wider, the more generous, the more humanitarian, the more unselfishly philanthropic embracing the grand unit principle, "love they neighbor as thyself," is entertained and practiced, the higher will be the companionship with the world's former benefactors. Hence "not every one who saith Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom."

Yes, here comes in the great soothing beauty of Spiritualism. According to old Christian orthodoxy there would be no salvation for Elmina, Tom. Winter, Putnam, Albright, T. B. Wakeman, Bob. Ingersoll, and hosts of good, righteous workers among your subscribers; Infidels who will not hypocritically avow their belief in "Jesus and him crucified." To hell this immense crowd of unbelievers must slide because they do not or will not believe in God's divine plan of salvation.

Now here looms up the great beauty of Spiritualism. It is a philosophy whose vitality does not rest on belief save in moral excellence of the highest humanitarian, philanthropic class, and embraces the whole brotherhood of man and in works practically carried out.

I sometimes allow my imagination to ramble into the depths of the future, and smile at the agreeable surprises our disbelieving "sophs" hav to undergo as they are ushered into this—to them—new and luminous domain. Perhaps tapping Ingersoll familiarly on the arm, Peter Cooper or our friend D. M. Bennett might exclaim, "Well, Bob, how is this for high?" D. BRUCE.

N. B.—Mrs. M. W. Bennett: Please accept the within $1.00 for the Monument Fund. Although as a principle I am opposed to the erecting of mortuary monuments, yet as it is, I do not like to be suspected of coldness. The labors of our old friend will in effect far outlast the purest marble or the hardest granit. D. B.

Poetry.

John o' the Smithy.

From McMillan's Magazine.

Down in the vale where the mavis sings
And the brook is turning an old-time wheel,
From morning till night the anvil rings
Where John o' the smithy is forging steel.
My lord rides out at the castle gate,
My lady is grand in bower and hall,
With men and maidens to cringe and wait,
And John o' the smithy must pay for all.

The bishop rides in a coach and four,
His grooms and horses are fat and sleek;
He has lackeys behind and lackeys before,
He rides at a hundred guineas a week.
The anvil is singing its "ten pounds ten,"
The mavis sings from a birken spray,
And this is the song that fills the glen:
"John o' the smithy has all to pay."

John has a daughter, rosy and sweet;
My lord has a son with a wicked eye;
When she hears the sound of his horse's feet
Her heart beats quicker—she knows not why.
She will know very well before the end:
She will learn to detest their rank and pride
When she has the young lord's babe to tend,
While the bishop's daughter becomes his bride.

There will be the old, old story to tell
Of tyrannous wrong in places high;
A bishop glazing the deeds of hell,
The priest and the Levite passing by.
And the father may bow his frosted head
When he sees the young bride up at the hall,
And say 'twere better his child were dead;
But John o' the smithy must bear it all.

The smith and his daughter will pass away,
And another shall make the anvil ring
For the daily bread and the hodden gray;
But the profits shall go to the priest and the king.
And over the wide world, day by day,
The smiths shall waken at early morn,
Each to his task, in the old dull way,
To tread a measure of priestly corn.

And the smiths shall liv on the coarsest fare,
With little that they may call their own,
While the idler is free from work and care,
For the best of all shall go to the drone.
And the smith complains of the anvil's song—
Complains of the years he has wrought and pined,
For the priests and rulers are swift to wrong,
And the mills of God are slow to grind.

But a clear, strong voice from over the sea
Is piercing the murk of the moral night.
Time is, time was, and the time shall be
That John o' the smithy shall hav his right;
And those who hav worn the miter and crown,
Who hav pressed him sore in body and soul,
Shall perish from earth when the grist is ground
And the mighty miller claims his toll.

Fell by the Wayside.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

Mr. Mulkittle sat on the front steps, softly humming a religious tune. The air came in cooling breath, and the birds twittered in the shrubbery. He had preached a successful sermon at his church, and a railroad capitalist who happened to be there congratulated the preacher when the services were over. This the good man considered a great compliment, and in pleasant linger his thoughts would turn the compliment over and over, that, with the flattered mind's eye, it might be viewed from all sides.

The boy sat on the hall floor scooping the "pink slush" from half a watermelon. Presently he arose, left his melon, and joined his father.

"What is a duel?" he asked.

"It is a fight between two men."

The youngster reflected for a moment and said: "Tell me about it."

"Well, when two men become involved in a quarrel, one sometimes challenges the other—that is, invites him out to fight. Then they take pistols, or whatever weapons hav been selected by their friends, and try to kill each other."

"An' if one man kills the other, what do they do with him?"

"As a rule, they let him go."

"Ain't it wrong?"

"Yes, it is very wicked."

"Did David and Goliah fight a duel?"

"Well, yes, a kind of one."

"Was that wrong?"

"No, for the Lord was with David."

"But if the Lord waster be with a man what does fight a duel, it wouldn't be wicked, would it?"

"Such a thing is impossible now."

"Why is it?"

"Because the Lord, in the olden days, had a chosen people, and was with them when they fought."

"Who was his chosen people?"

"The Jews."

"Did he like 'em better than he did the other people?"

"Yes."

"Does he now?"

"No, not now."

"Why?"

"Because—that is, they disobeyed him, or rather they wouldn't accept the savior."

"But if the Lord had wanted 'em to believe on him he coulder made 'em do it, couldn't he?"

"Yes."

"Then why didn't he?"

"Hush, sir. You talk as though you didn't hav an ounce of sense."

"I've got sense enough to wanter know, an' you ain't got—". He hesitated.

"Do you mean to say that I havn't got sense enough to tell you, eh? I'll whip you for your impudence, you little rascal. Come on here." And Mr. Mulkittle arose. He had taken but a few steps when he put his foot into the half of watermelon left on the floor by the boy. There was a sliding noise, and then there came an awful thump, as though a log had fallen. Then a groan arose.

"What's the matter out there?" called Mrs. Mulkittle.

"I'm dead!" replied the minister. "What the deuce do you suppose?" and in struggling to arise he stepped on a fragment of the rind, and struck the floor with his nose. Further restraint was impossible, and he howled, and when his wife came with the light he smeared blood across his cheek in an attempt to wipe his nose, and swore that the whole infernal neighborhood had conspired to destroy him. As he hobbled away, the boy remarked: "He didn't go by the straight road, and he fell by the wayside."

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett. Clinton Pl., N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By Prof. John Tyndall. 12mo. Cloth, $1 50

II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Esq. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

III. Foods. By Edward Smith. Cloth, 1 75

IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain. 12mo. Cloth; 1 50

V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

VI. The New Chemistry. By Prof. Josiah C. Cooke, Jr. of Harvard University. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Prof. Balfour Stewart. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. 12mo. Fully illustrated. Cloth, 1 75

IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M. D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

X. The Science of Law. By Prof. Sheldon Amos. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XI. Animal Mechanism. A Treatise on Terrestrial and Aerial Locomotion. By E. J. Marey. With 117 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XII. The History of the Conflict between Religion and Science. By John William Draper. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XIII. The Theory of Descent and Darwinism. By Prof. Oscar Schmidt. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XIV. The Chemistry of Light and Photography. By Prof. Vogel. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XV. Fungi: their Nature and Uses. By M. C. Cooke. Edited by the Rev. M. J. Berkeley. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XVI. The Life and Growth of Language; an Outline of Linguistic Science. By Wm. Dwight Whitney. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XVII. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By W. Stanley Jevons. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XVIII. The Nature of Light, with a General Account of Physical Optics. By Dr. Eugene Lommel. With 188 Illustrations, and a Plate of Spectra in Chromolithography. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XIX. Animal Parasites and Messmates. By P. J. Van Beneden. With 83 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XX. On Fermentation. By P. Schutzenberger. With 28 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXI. The Five Senses of Man. By Prof. Bernstein, of the University of Halle. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XXII. The Theory of Sound its Relation to Music. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXIII. Studies in Spectrum Analysis. By J. Norman Lockyer. Illustrated. 12mo. Cloth, 2 50

XXIV. A History of the Growth of the Steam-Engine. By Robert H. Thurston. With 193 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 50

XXV. Education as a Science. By Alexander Bain. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XXVI. Modern Chromatics, with Applications to Art and Industry. By Ogden N. Rood. With 130 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XXVII. The human Species. By A. de Quatrefages, Professor of Anthropology in the Museum of Natural History, Paris. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XXVIII. The Crayfish: an Introduction to the Study of Zoology. By Prof. T. H. Huxley. With 82 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XXIX. The Atomic Theory. By Ad. Wurtz, Membre de l'Institut, etc. Translated by E. Cleminshaw. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXX. Animal Life as Affected by the Natural Conditions of Existence. By Karl Semper, Professor of the University of Wurzburg. With 2 Maps and 106 Woodcuts. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XXXI. Sight: An Exposition of the Principles of Monocular and Binocular Vision. By Joseph Le Conte, author of "Elements of Geology," etc. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXXII. General Physiology of Muscles and Nerves. By Dr. J. Rosenthal, Professor of Physiology at the University of Erlangen. With 75 Woodcuts. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXXIII. Illusions. A Psychological Study. By James Sully. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXXIV. The Sun. By C. A. Young, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Astronomy in the College of New Jersey. With numerous Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XXXV. Volcanoes: What they Are and what they Teach. By J. W. Judd, Professor of Geology in the Royal School of Mines. With 96 Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

XXXVI. Suicide: An Essay in Comparative Moral Statistics. By Henry Morselli, M.D. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XXXVII. The Formation of Vegetable Mould, through the Action of Worms. With Observations on their Habits. By Charles Darwin, LL.D., F.R.S. With Illustrations. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XXXVIII. The Concepts and Theories of Modern Physics. By J. B. Stallo. 12mo. Cloth, 1 75

XXXIX. The Brain and its Functions. By J. Luys, Physician to the Hospice de la Salpetriere. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XL. Myth and Science: An Essay. By Tito Vignoli. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XLI. Diseases of the Memory: An Essay in the Positive Psychology. By T. H. Ribot, author of "Heredity." From the French, by William Huntington Smith. 12mo. Cloth, 1 50

XLII. Ants, Bees, and Wasps. A Record of Observations on the Habits of the Social Hymenoptera. By Sir John Lubbock, Bart., F.R.S., D.C.L., LL.D., etc. 12mo. Cloth, 2 00

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit-Life. Paper, 20 cents.

After Death; the Disembodiment of Man, The World of Spirit, Its Location, Extent, Appearance, Inhabitants, Customs, Sex and its uses there. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Price, $2.00.

After Dogmatic Theology, What? Materialism, or, a Spiritual Philosophy and Natural Religion. By GILES B. STEBBINS. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Agassiz and Spiritualism: Involving the Investigation of Harvard College Professors in 1857. By ALLEN PUTNAM, author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Spirit Works," "Natty a Spirit," etc. This sterling work combines in itself the characteristics of memoir, essay, and review. The matter considered is of vital interest to the cause of Spiritualism, and readers cannot fail of being pleased with the treatment which Mr. PUTMAN accords to it. Price, 25 cents.

Angel of Horeb. By M. B. CRAVEN. A Critical Review of Biblical Inspiration and Divinity. Paper, 10 cents.

Angel Voices from the Spirit-World. Essays taken indiscriminately from a large amount written under angel influence. By JAMES LAWRENCE, Dial and Transcribing Medium, and Reputed Author. Cloth, pp. 400; $1.00.

An Hour With the Angels; or, A Dream of the Spirit Life. By A. BRIGHAM. Price, 50 cents.

Answers to Charges in General Belief. By Mr. and Mrs A. E. NEWTON. Price, 15 cents.

Armageddon; or, the Overthrow of Romanism and Monarchy. By S. D. BALDWIN. Price, $1.50.

Baptism of Fire. An Autobiographical Sketch. By LUCIFER. Price, 30 cents.

Battle-Ground of the Spiritual Reformation. By S. B. BRITTAN, M.D. The latest and best defense of Spiritualism—at once a text-book and a vindication. An armory from which Spiritualists will draw weapons for years. Price, $2.

Better Views of Living; or, Life According to the Doctrin, "Whatever Is Is Right. By Dr. A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.

Beyond the Breakers. A Story of the Present Day. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. Finely illustrated. This story of village life in the West is, in its narrow and interior meaning, a profoundly spiritual story, through and by whose numberless incidents, scenes, characters, and narrations is illustrated the great truth of spirit-life and communion. Cloth, $1.50.

Beyond the Veil. Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. RANDOLPH, through the mediumship of Mrs. E. H. M'Dougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. Cloth, with steel-plate portrait of P. B. Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Biblical Chronology. By M. B. CRAVEN. Contrasting the Chronological Computations of the Hebrew and Septuagint Versions from Adam to Christ; Critical Essay on the Geographical Location of the Garden of Eden. Paper, 10 cents.

Bible in the Balance. A Text Book for Investigators. The Bible weighed in the balance with history, chronology, science, literature, and itself. With illustrations. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Cloth, $1.50

Bible Marvel-Workers, And the Power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words; together with some personal traits and characteristics of prophets, apostles, and Jesus, or New Readings of "The Miracles." By ALLEN PUTNAM. Price, $1.25.

Book on Mediums; or, Guide for Mediums and Invocators. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $1.50.

Buddhism and Christianity Face to Face. By J. M. PEEBLES. A Discussion between a Buddhist priest and an English clergyman. Paper, 25 cents.

Chapters from the Bible of the Ages. Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS. Price, $1.50

Christianity Before the Time of Christ. By M. B. CRAVEN. With Quotations from the Ancient Sages and Fathers, showing the Historic Origin of Christian Worship. Paper, 25 cents.

Christ and the People. By A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.25.

Christ, the Corner-stone of Spiritualism. By J. M. PEEBLES. 10 cents.

Civil and Religious Persecutions in the State of New York. By THOMAS R. HAZARD. Paper, 10 cents.

Claims of Spiritualism. By a Medical Man. Price, 25 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A Few Days in Athens. By FRANCES WRIGHT. Embellished with the portrait of Epicurus, the Greek philosopher, and the author. Price, 75 cents.

A Legacy to the Friends of Free Discussion. By BENJAMIN OFFEN, formerly Lecturer of the Society of Moral Philanthropists, at Tammany Hall, New York. Price, $1.

A Modern Symposium. Subjects: The Soul and a Future Life. By Frederick Harrison, R. H. Hutton, Prof. Huxley, Lord Blackford, Hon. Roden Noel, Lord Selborne, Canon Barry, Rev. Baldwin Brown, Dr. W. G. Ward. The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. By Sir James Stephen, Lord Selborne, Frederick Harrison, The Dean of St. Paul's, The Duke of Argyle, Prof. Clifford, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, R. H. Hutton. Utterances never surpassed by writers and all important subjects. Noted for their terse originality. Price, $1.25.

An Eye-Opener. "Citateur. Par Pigault." Le Brun, Doubts of Infidels. By ZEPA. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Antiquity and Duration of the World? By G. TOULMAN. 20 cents.

Apocryphal New Testament. Being all the gospels, epistles, and other pieces now extant attributed in the first four centuries to Jesus Christ, his apostles, and their companions, and not included in the New Testament by its compilers. Price, $1.25.

Apples of Gold. A story book for boys and girls. By Miss SUSAN H. WIXON. Price, $1.25.

A Short History of the Bible. Being a Popular Account of the Formation and Development of the Canon. By BRONSON C. KEELER. This is a splendid work, showing how the Bible was manufactured by the church and ecclesiastics. Limp cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients. By GILBERT VALE. 20 cts.

Astro-Theological Lectures. Rev. ROBT. TAYLOR. Price, cloth, $2.

Autobiography of Robert Cooper. Price, 15 cents.

Bhagavad-Gita; or, A Discourse on Divine Matters between Krishna and Arjuna. By J. COCKBURN THOMPSON. Price, $1.75.

Bible in India. Hindoo Origin of Hebrew and Christian Revelation. Translated from "Le Bible dans Inde." By LOUIS JACOLLIOT. Price, $2.

Bible in the Balance. A text-book for investigators. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Price, $1.50.

Bible Inquirer; or, Key to Bible Investigation. Containing one hundred and forty-eight propositions; with references to the most plain and striking self-contradictions of the so-called Inspired Scriptures. Also one hundred and fifty-two references to the most marvelous occurrences. Each quotation has a short description of its contents. By A. JACOBSON. Price, 15 cents.

Bible Myths, and their Parallels in Other Religions: Being a comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of Heathen Nations of Antiquity, considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations. 1 vol. Royal 8vo. 567 pages. Cloth, $4.00.

The object of this work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then to trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning. It contains quotations from nearly all the sacred books of heathen nations, and from other rare and valuable works which are not accessible to people in general. The chapters are so arranged that it is a perfect cyclopedia of reference. Years of research would be necessary to discover all the information it contains. It is a most searching investigation into the origin of Christianity. Every fact is verified by copious notes and authorities, so that it may be trusted as a thoroughly reliable work. It contains information which will be startling to many.

Bible of Humanity. By JULES MICHELET. Translated from the French by V. CALFA. 8vo. cloth, $3. This is a large epic in prose. The artist historian sings the evolution of mankind. He throws brilliant glimpses of light on the long course of events and works which he unfolds.

Bible of Rational Mind and Religion. Rational Religion and Morals. By THOMAS J. VADIEN, M.D., of St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3.

Bible of To-Day. By JOHN W. CHADWICK. This is a condensed result of the scientific criticisms of the separate books of the Bible. Price, $1.50.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. By KERSEY GRAVES. 35 cents.

Poetry.

An Appeal for the Freedom of the Press.

"Here shall the press the people's rights maintain,
Unawed by influence and unbribed by gain!
Here patriot Truth her holy precepts draw,
Pledged to the higher—the eternal law."

O ye who trust in earthly law,
Or gleaming bayonets in the fight,
Know ye the deeper powers that draw
Each nation on through slumb'rous night?
First from its nucleus, pale and dim,
The tribal star ascendant rolls,
Outburning toward creation's rim,
The cynosure of pulsing souls.

But wrong and ill like fire-mists play
Around its zenith's glorious hight;
It stoops, o'ermastered in Time's fray
It swerves its path to folly light;
If Power and Luxury and Crime,
With ribald jest and mocking scorn,
Drag down to vaults of centuried slime
The lowly Truth in manger born;

Shall this our glorious nation set
Where darkling Chaos heaves his wave?
Shall Wrong, in her entangling net,
The freeman's soaring mind enslave?
Shall Freedom doff her cap of snow
To own the Sinai Thunderer's sway?*
Shall Justice quail to whisp'rings low?
And all the pampered few obey?

Come! speed Loch Katrine's fiery sign
Columbia's hills and plains along,
Till Northern oak and Western pine
Shall trembling swell the slogan song!
Up! Though no trumpet's blast arise—
Though silent sleeps the rattling drum,
Clothed in another specious guise
The oppressor's close-ranked helots come!

Rise for FREE SPEECH! The hour is past
When Logic's hairs may safe be rent;
Discussion's right is downward cast
Along the social firmament.
Let Sin the charmed shibb'leth speak
Of titled arrogance and pride,
And meek (?) Religion turns to seek
Its voice from Reason's holier side!

Rise for FREE PRESS. Shall power outrank
The honest thought that printed flies?
Shall legal form and gold-piled bank
Be found for aye the shield of lies?
Let loose the printer's inky hand—
The cloud whence swift-winged lightnings leap—
No power of ill can light withstand,
No falsehood bide its cleaving sweep.

O brothers of the press and pen,
The cause is yours as well as theirs
Who braved embattled Error's den,
And quailed not 'neath their weight of cares!
Not to applaud the views they hold
We bid ye face the Ol'garch's frown;
Cleave for yourselves this serpent's fold,
Slow strangling Freedom's old renown!

Ye rich, who trust in arms of law
And bayonets in the coming fight,
Know ye a suffering people draw
Dark lessons from their blinded night?
Hold! ere ye call their Samson-arm
Philista's Dagon sports to crown,
Lest, stung to rage, they burst your charm,
And hurl your domes in vengeance down!

JOHN WILLIAM DAY.

* In allusion to the movement of the Protestant fathers looking toward the marriage of church and state by the formal introduction of Jehovah into the United States Constitution. The two estates—political and theological—are of different species; and the union of their representativs could be productiv of nothing but monstrous births, worthless in themselvs, but whose throes of parturition would shake from its foundation the fabric of our free government.

Words and Deeds.

From the Independent.

They do the least
Who talk the most;
Whose good designs
Are all their boast;
For words are dew.

They do the most
Whose lives possess
The sterling stamp
Of righteousness;
For deeds are true.

And if the heart
Be pure and good
The life will be
Just what it should—
Not dew but true.

JAMES H. HOADLEY.

THE RADICAL PULPIT.
Comprising discourses of advanced thought by
O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER
two of America's clearest thinkers.
Price. in cloth, $1

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!
JESUS CHRIST A FICTION
Founded upon the Life of
APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.
How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.
Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.
Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.
Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
Dr. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS
The Truth Seeker,
With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid,
FOR FIFTY CENTS.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

A WIFE WANTED.
An honorable, intelligent, middle-aged gentleman of fine personal appearance, high social standing, excellent habits, and affectionate disposition, but with little means, wishes to marry a good woman of suitable age and disposition who has means, and who therefore desires only true manly worth in her husband. Address EARNEST, this office.
12t24

LOVE AND CONJUGALITY.
Hints toward the true and felicitous in Love and Conjugality. Sexuality viewed from a higher ideal. New thoughts thereon, clearly presented, yet in unobjectionable shape. All in, or contemplating the conjugal relation should hav this essay. Sent on receipt of seven cents, postage, by S. G. LEWIS, GRASS VALLEY, CAL. 5t30

A REMARKABLE BOOK!
JUST PUBLISHED.
BOTTOM FACTS
CONCERNING
SPIRITUALISM!
The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.
Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.
Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
30tf Syracuse, N. Y.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S
SOCIOLOGY;
OR,
The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.
WITH AN APPENDIX
ILLUSTRATED.
Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1.
Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.
Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

WETTSTEIN'S
JEWELRY STORE,
ROCHELLE, ILL.
Established 1857. Beats the World.
There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.
Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.
If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.
REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.
GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.
OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
"NATURE'S HARMONY,"
Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint.
Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.
"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."
A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.
200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.
Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" 'The Declaration of Independence,' "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.
A Fabricated Account of
A Scene at the Death-bed of
THOMAS PAINE.
DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?
18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,
Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.
(W. STEWART ROSS.)
A very interesting biography of a remarkable man.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.
For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Birth and Death of Religions. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Christian and Deist. A Business Man's Social and Religious Views. Bold and trenchant blows against theology and inhumanity. Price, 1.00.

Christianity from a Scientific and Historical Standpoint. By WM. N. LAUREN, attorney at Law. Contents: Introduction, Unrevealed Religion, Old Testament Religion, Evidence in Support of Christianity, Alleged Failure of Christianity, Proposed Substitute for Christianity, Conclusion. 50 cents.

Christ of Paul; or, the Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor: Irenæus the author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By GEO. REBER. Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pp. $2.

Classified Bible Extracts; or, the Holy Scriptures Analyzed. By ROBERT COOPER. Price, 25 cents.

Confessions of an Inquirer. Why and What Am I? By JAMES JACKSON JARVES. Price, $1.25.

Cooper's Lectures on the Soul. In which the doctrin of immortality is religiously and philosophically considered. Price, 75 cents.

Cradle of the Christ. A Study in Primitiv Christianity. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM. Price, $1.75.

Cultivation of Art, And Its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. COOPER. 12mo, 48 pp. Price, flexible cloth, 35 cents; paper, 20.

Divine and Moral Works of Plato. Translated from the original Greek. With introductory dissertations and notes. Price, $2.50.

Doctrin of Inspiration: being an Inquiry Concerning the Infallibility, Inspiration, and Authority of Holy Writ. By the Rev. JOHN MACNAUGHT, M.A., Incumbent of St. Chrysostom's church, Everton, Liverpool, England. Price, $1.50

Elegant Extracts from the Bible. (Perhaps inelegant would be a more proper term.) Price, 10 cents.

English Life of Jesus. By THOMAS SCOTT. Dedicated to those who seek rather to know the truth of facts than to look on unhistorical pictures. Price, $1.50.

Epidemic Delusions. A Lecture by FREDERICK R. MARVIN, M.D. Price, 10 cts.

Essays on Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc. By CHARLES E. TOWNSEND. Extra cloth, 12mo, 404 pp. Price, $1.50. Sequel to Essays. By same author. Price, 75 cents.

WORKS OF PROF. DENTON.

Be Thyself. Price, 10 cents.

Christianity no Finality; or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity. 10 cents.

Common Sense Thoughts on the Bible. Price, 10 cents.

Garrison in Heaven. A Dream. 10 cts.

Geology; The Past and Future of our Planet. Price, $1.50.

Is Spiritualism True? Price, 10 cts.

Man's True Savior. Price, 10 cents.

Orthodoxy False, since Spiritualism is True. Price, 10 cents.

Radical Discourses on Religious Subjects. Price, $1.25.

Radical Rhymes. Price, $1.25.

Sermon from Shakspere's Text. Price, 10 cents.

Soul of Things; or, Psychometric Researches and Discoveries. In three volumes. Price, $1.50 per volume.

The Deluge in the Light of Modern Science. Price, 10 cents.

The God Proposed for Our National Constitution. Price 10 cents.

The Irreconcilable Records; or, Genesis and Geology Cloth, 40 cents; paper, 25 cents.

The Pocasset Tragedy. 10 cents.

Is Darwin Right? Price, $1.25.

What Is Right? Price, 10 cents.

What Was He? or, Jesus in the Light of the Nineteenth Century. Price, cloth, $125; paper, $1.

Who are Christians? Price, 10 cents.

Who Killed Mary Stannard? 10 cents.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.
Write for Catalogues and Terms.
10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
Price, $2.00. TRUTH SEEKER Office. 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

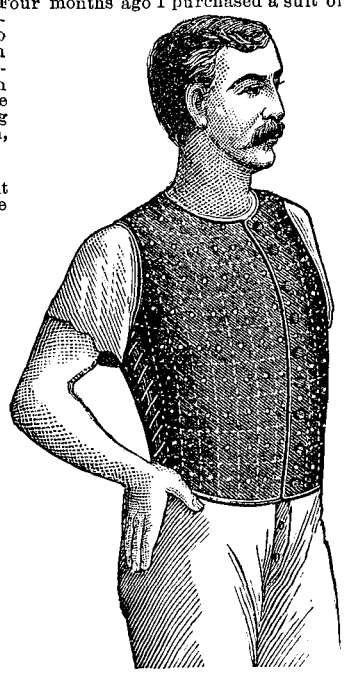
Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.



Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6t.15

DR. FELLOWS

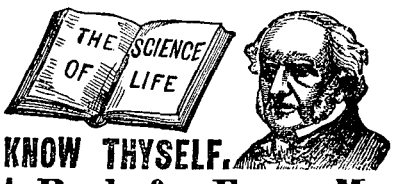
SHAKER DE HOPE

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,

As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by
my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
80 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

As every principal system of religion has found a necessity for a devil, as an adversary and an antagonist to the all-ruling power of good, so Christianity must needs follow suit, and it was, perhaps, fortunate for the founders of the system, inasmuch as their original inventiv powers seemed not to be of the highest order, that they were able to find plenty of models of devils already at hand, as well as all the other pagan dogmas of which the Christian system is composed, and which they so freely appropriated. —D. M. Bennett.

Frugality itself is a pleasure. It is an exercise of attention and contrivance, which, whenever it is successful, produces satisfaction. The very care and forecast that are necessary to keep expenses and earnings upon a level, form, when not embarrassed by two great difficulties, an agreeable engagement of the thoughts. This is lost amidst abundance.—Paley's Reasons for Contentment.

Toiling, rejoicing, sorrowing,
Onward through life he goes;
Each morning sees some task begun,
Each evening sees it close;
Something attempted, something done,
Has earned a night's repose.
—Longfellow's Village Blacksmith.

There is on all hands a growing repugnance to invoke the supernatural in accounting for the phenomena of human life, and the thoughtful minds just referred to, finding no train of evidence in favor of any other origin, are driven to seek in the interaction of social forces the genesis and development of man's moral nature. If they succeed in their search—and I think they are sure to succeed—social duty would be raised to a higher level of significance and the deepening sense of social duty, would, it is to be hoped, lessen, if not obliterate, the strife and heart-burnings which now beset and disguise our social life.—Tyndall on Man's Soul.

The variety of systems which men hav formed to themselvs on the subjects of morality and religion has often excited the ridicule of the skeptic and the libertin; but if, on the one hand, this variety shows the folly of bigotry and the reasonableness of mutual indulgence, the curiosity to which it has led them, in every situation to such speculations, however absurd, hav had on their character and their happiness, prove, no less clearly, on the other, that there must be some principles from which they all derive their origin, and invite the philosopher to ascertain what are these original and immutable laws of the human mind.—Dugald Stewart.

Infinit punishment is infinit cruelty, endless injustice, immortal meanness. To worship an eternal jailer, hardens, debases, and pollutes the soul. While there is one sad and breaking heart in the universe, no perfectly good being can be perfectly happy. Against the heartlessness of the doctrin of an everlasting hell, every grand and generous soul should enter its solemn protest. I want no part in any heaven where the saved, the rausomed, and redeemed drown with merry shouts the cries and sobs of hell; in which happiness forgets misery, and where the tears of the lost increase laughter and deepen the dimples of joy. The idea of hell was born of ignorance, brutality, fear, cowardice, and revenge. The idea tends to show that our remote ancestors were the lowest beasts. Only from dens, lairs, and caves—only from mouths filled with cruel fangs—only from hearts of fear and hatred—only from the conscience of hunger and lust—only from the lowest and most debased, could come this most cruel, heartless, and absurd of all dogmas.—Ingersoll.

One man's affection is to honor as his end; in order to obtain which he thinks no pains too great. Suppose another with such a singularity of mind as to hav the same affection to public good as his end, which he endeavors with the same labor to attain. In case of success, surely the man of benevolence hath as great enjoyment as the man of ambition—they both equally having the end that their affection, in the some degree, tended to; but, in case of disappointment, the benevolent man has clearly the advantage; since endeavoring to do good, considered as a virtuous pursuit, is gratified by its own consciousness, i. e., is in a degree its own reward.—Bishop Butler.

I venture to assert that the exercise of private judgment, faithfully gone about, does by no means necessarily end in selfish independence, isolation; but rather ends necessarily in the opposit of that. It is not honest inquiry that makes anarchy; but it is error, insincerity, half belief and half untruth, that make it. A man protesting against error is on the way toward uniting himself with all men that believe in truth. There is no communion possible among men who believe only in hearsays. . . . . Only in a world of sincere men is unity possible; and then, in the long run, is it as good as certain.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

It may be said that some dogmas still remain in politics, in religion, and in morality, but those who defend them claim no longer any infallibility, and those who attack them, however small their minority, need fear no violence, nay, may reckon on an impartial and even sympathetic hearing, as soon as people discover in their pleadings the true ring of honest conviction and the warmth inspired by an unselfish love of truth.—Max Muller.

The monster Superstition dies hard, and not one of us now living will see his death agonies. But we can hasten them. The superstitious belief in kings is dying. The superstitious belief in religious teachers is dying. The belief in omens and ghosts is fading away, and the disbelief in ghosts has for inevitable corollary disbelief in [the Christian and still more in the Jewish] God. The old belief as to the Bible is weakened and held in truth, as aforetime, only by salvation armies and Wesleyans. The belief in heaven and hell has of late undergone much modification. Where is it all to end? We hav grounds for strong, inspiring hope that the old order of things is passing away, and that the truer faith in earth and man, that has gladdened the lives of a noble few, is to make peace and happiness in the lives of many.—Dr. Aveling on Superstition.

Odds and Ends.

The old expression, "Shall you attend service?" is obsolete, and in its stead is substituted "Expect to 'take in' church to-day?"

A Pennsylvania clergyman is a pitcher in a base-ball nine. His gestures sometimes make the congregation duck their heads.

Ministers may forget their texts, forget their discourse, forget their hearers, and forget themselvs, but they never forget the collection.

The Florida Herald says chickens are scarce in Gainesville. Well, that is all right, the Methodist conference didn't want to go there nohow.

Nothing inspires a person with true religious sentiment during church service so quickly as the contribution box man with screechy shoes on.

It is just noticed that the girl with the dainty foot likes to climb mountains, while the girl with the graceful form may be found in the ocean's surf.

The debating society of a rural village has decided that it doesn't look consistent for a girl to be a member of church and wear powder on her hair to catch the young men.

A young woman in an Ohio town has married her brother's wife's father. When last seen she was busy with a compass and a dictionary trying to study out what relation she was to herself.

There is something very solemn in the sound of the Sunday church bells. It reminds hundreds of men that, although it is the usual time, the beer saloons set no free lunch on that day.

Dr. Crosby says "those who are engaged in amassing colossal fortunes belong to the dangerous class." We do not care to be referred to in that pointed way, and the doctor had better stop it.—Texas Siftings.

A Boston religious weekly feelingly asks: "Why do flies bite so much worse in church than anywhere else?" This is a difficult conundrum, but it may be that a man is harder to keep awake in church than anywhere else.

A young lady up in Spruce street refused to allow her sister to borrow the former's beau as an escort to a party, saying: "It is not good that the man should be a loan." She has not been a member of a Bible class for nothing.

A tramp reached into the pantry window of an out-of-town house, the other night, and tried to steal a pound of butter, but it was so strong it drew him in and whistled for the dog. The tramp vows he will never tackle any more country butter.

When a young man tries for three minutes in church to brush a sunbeam of his coat, under the impression that it is a streak of dust, and then looks up and sees a pretty girl laughing at him, he kind of loses the thread of the sermon, temporarily, as it were.

"If the public only knew how much work I put on my articles and how hard it is to write them," said a political editor, "I think they would read them with more consideration." "Yes," replied a bystander, "and if you knew how hard it is for the public to read your articles, blamed if you would write them."

"Mamma," asked a five-year old Whitehaller, as he returned from church on Sunday morning, "was Paul a doctor?" "No, my son," she replied. "Why do you ask?" "'Cause the minister said he told a man to take a little wine for his stomach's ache, and that's what pa says his doctor tells him to take whisky for."

The average salary of a Methodist minister in New England is $560, while Slugger Sullivan, of Boston, pockets several thousand dollars in less than an hour by knocking another slugger out in three rounds. The monetary inducement to become a pounder in a prize ring is much greater than it is to become an expounder in the pulpit.

Lake Moosehicmaguntiejobknahmakmajus, in Maine, is pronounced a popular summer resort. And we should think this was about the only way it could be pronounced. Another resort in that state is Mattaloonkpatapziscooskkeagjibbowacktogusbosseringaggwamunk, but very few people resort to the task of spelling it.—Norristown Herald.

"Can you put up a prescription?" asked a leading light of the Good Templars of a druggist's apprentice. "No, sir; I ain't got that far yet, and the boss has gone to lunch." "I'm in a hurry, and would like to hav this filled," said the customer, laying a prescription on the counter. "Oh, I know what that is," said the boy, brightening up; "the deacons of the church around the corner come here every Sunday and get it for the colic." And the boy handed down a bottle of spiritus frumenti and set a tumbler before the customer.

A gentleman was reproached by a prudish Christian dame for claiming to be a descendant of a celebrity of the Middle Ages. "The claim is preposterous," she said, "the Prince of C—— was never married." He was "stumped" for a moment, but, recovering his wit, asked, "You are descended from the posterity of Adam and Eve, are you not?" "Certainly," she replied, without the least hesitation. "Tell me, then, who was Cain's wife." The lady retired, muttering that the spread of Infidelity was threatening the country with ruin.

"God created everything for some wise purpose, didn't he?" asked a Boston Sunday-school boy of his teacher. "The creator did nothing without a design," solemnly responded the instructor. "Well, then, what did he create Sullivan for?" "I'm glad you asked me that question, Miles, for I had been thinking the subject over a good deal myself." "Hav you settled it in your mind?" continued the lad. "Not exactly," was the reply, "but I'm inclined to think God made Sullivan in order to giv Boston folks something to talk about after Ralph Waldo Emerson was dead."

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N.Y.

63 Broadway, Brooklyn, E. D.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost every form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H North, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

Ed. Hollenbeck, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and have been all right since."

J. T. Lisle, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

Mrs. C. A. Gould, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

Mrs. A. Bryant, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. Lange (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form, I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

Mr. Wilson, Dear Sir: Please send me a few circulars in regard to your curativ garments. I hav been telling several parties about them. I hav some friends who hav used them with great and pleasing results, and I would like to promote their use.

Yours, THOMAS W. BREWER,
Manasquan, N. J.

Mrs. E. P. Pleasants, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves lesgji ujto

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

BIBLE SERVICE. For Earnest Inquirers Only: Aiding poor sinners everywhere to confess the hellish torments that must enforce human progress in the near future; Also to vindicate the Supremacy of Gospel Truth—"King of Kings, and Lord of Lords;" and lastly to illustrate the joyous rescue and "glorious liberty" of God's people in the Holy War now impending, apparently between Capital and Labor, but infallibly between Christ and Antichrist. Send stamp for return papers.
Address, "REWARD," 710 Broadway, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The Liberal Hymn-Book contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 50 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of The Truth Seeker, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of The Truth Seeker know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

[Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city

THE

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a upernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE

BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES

OF

The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.

D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE

SECULAR REVIEW,

A JOURNAL OF

ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

Charles Watts, }
W. Stewart Ross, } . . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY

—OF—

RELIGIOUS CAPITALS

BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 36. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, September 8, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

It has been stated that an oyster can be crossed in love. And we don't doubt that it can be more easily crossed in that way than in a plate of soup at a church festival.

A New Bedford lawyer promises to close every illegal grogery in that city in six months and begins by causing the arrest of an activ church-member for renting a building to an unlicensed dealer.

The attempt to stop the running of Sunday street cars in St. Louis on Sunday has failed, the court holding that until it could be proved that the running of the cars was unnecessary there was no case.

There are now upon the Notice Paper of the House of Commons for next season three motions for Church Disestablishment—one for England, one for Scotland, and a third for Wales. Let them be carried!

Leadville clergymen are becoming very particular. One of 'em got mad at a funeral where he was to officiate, because the master of ceremonies notified him to begin by remarking, "Now, old hoss, it's your play."

A wicked young man in Georgia refused a Bible at a revival, and scornfully went home to his farm. There he was struck by lightning twice in five minutes. He at once went back to the meeting, accepted a Bible, and "got religion" by electricity.

The Deseret News, a Mormon journal, says that in hades water is not plenty, and baptism cannot be administered—least of all, baptism by immersion. But no one can be saved who is not baptized. Therefore, "the living may stand in the place of the dead, and receive the ordinance vicariously." This is "baptism for the dead."

Fans hav existed for at least 3,000 years, as representatioas of these wind persuaders hav been discovered on the tombs at Thebes. The friends of the deceased evidently knew in which direction the departed were going, and put on their tombstones pictures of the articles they most needed in the other world. It is supected that the fan itself was interred with the remains.—Norristown Herald.

An Episcopal paper says that the difference between the Unitarians and Universalists is that "the Universalist believes that God is too good to punish man eternally, while the Unitarian believes that man is too good to be so punished." This was Thomas Starr King's bon mot, which he made before he left the Universalists for a San Francisco Unitarian pastorate—only he put it better: "The Universalist believes God is too good to damn him, while the Unitarian believes he is too good to be damned."

A good story is told of a gentleman who did not belong to church, but occasionally went and usually contributed to the box. On one occasion seeing a miserly deacon approach, he inquired, "What do you propothe to do with the money?" "Giv it to the Lord," unctuously responded the deacon. "Well, thir," said the gentleman, "ath I think my chantheth of theeing the Lord are about ath good ath yourth, I prefer to wait and hand it to him in perthon," and he put his half dollar back in his pocket.

Bob Gimble is a colored man, and coachman to a certain Austin family. He is of Episcopalian proclivities, and among the other numerous things which he keeps is Lent. When the solemn season was raging last year, Bob carefully abstained from eating meat on Friday, and indulged in other ascetic frivolities. One day he unfortunately met Sam Pender, a colored Methodist, and gave him the cut direct. Sam was indignant at this treatment, and at once demanded an investigation. "Ise no explanation to gib," replied Bob. "Wiff my own eyes I seen you grease your boots wiff beef's tallow on a Friday. Youse no 'ligious principles distilled inter yer. Youse a Bob Ingersoll moke, an' if yer spokes to me agin on de streets, Ise gwine ter flop you on de groun' and stomp on yer, you ——"—Texas Siftings.

At the Adirondack camp-meeting the only items of interest to religious people are the knocking down of a young woman by a too earnest brother in the heat of debate; the affliction of another young woman with paralysis, and the congenial absence of musketoes. The belligerent theologian was promptly sat upon, the young woman with paralysis will die—a clear warning against going to camp-meetings—and the absence of the musical insect is not regretted. No conversions are reported thus far.

The following is almost too neat to be true, but it is printed in the Hull Gazette. Mr. W. Dawson, a cattle dealer and a local preacher, of Winterton, Lincolnshire, lately absconded, leaving large liabilities behind him, and forging, it is said, two gentlemen's names to the amount of £7,000. "The text of his last sermon, preached the day before he left the district, was Acts xx, 38—'Sorrowing most of all for the words which he spake, that they should see his face no more. And they accompanied him unto the ship.'"—National Reformer.

Puck's recipe for an orthodox sermon: Take fifty-five minutes of nasal tenderness of tone, one thought from the "First Principles" of Mr. Spencer and two from his "Psychology" and three allusions to the survival of the fittest. Stir gently till the whole begins to simmer. Then add rapidly the orthodox conception of good, seasoned beforehand with savage raillery, and two sliced compliments to the newspapers. Then cook up a tablespoonful of evolution until smooth, not brown, and strain into a Unitarian saucepan. Garnish the whole with prayers to the unknowable, and serve.

The amount of sexual immorality caused in this country [England] by hysterical revivalism, "class meetings," "all-night meetings," and other arrangements for saving girls, and ruining their bodies, is perfectly appalling. The last case which has appeared is that of a man named Sobey, and witness was given that "after attending Messrs. Moody and Sankey's services at Plymouth, he behaved immorally with" the girl who summoned him. He was a married man with five children. Ultimately the chairman said "the defendant's conduct was disgusting and horrible," and an order to pay 5 s. weekly until the child attained the age of sixteen was made. Debauchery seems inseparable from revivalist piety.—Annie Besant.

The Salvation Army came as advertised. Army! Forsooth an awkward squad would be a far more appropriate appellation. They paraded our streets, sang, played, spoke their pieces, thumped their tambourines, and departed. The only one of their audience, consisting of about forty men and boys, who seemed to take any interest in them and their doings, save that of mere idle curiosity, was one slightly inebriated individual who asked one of the women how long she had been crazy. This question elicited shouts of applause and laughter from the boys, and a harang more violent than eloquent from the woman addressed. Had they seen themselvs as others saw them, and known what a disgusting spectacle they presented, methinks they would hav stayed at their homes had they any such. To one unaccustomed to their antics it is hard to find anything of a religious nature in their doings. Scarcely a word of commendation can be said of their sad, misdirected zeal. The whole performance seemed like a burlesque on religion, and a travesty of the holiest of themes. Balconies, doors, and windows soon filled with spectators, curious to see and hear their wretched performances. No opposition was offered to the Army in any of their proceedings save to keep them off the sidewalks that pedestrians need not be impeded in their progress. A few copies of the War Cry were sold to some of our curious or charitably inclined citizens, but none save the inebriated individual above mentioned "took much stock" in their efforts. Let us hope that ere long they may see to what extent they hav gone and abandon their present distinguished mode of gaining notoriety, and return to a more decent if not so devoted a manner of life.—Fayetteville, N. Y., Recorder.

In the national museum in Tokio hav been placed some old paintings of the Virgin Mary and the infant Christ, after the style of the orthodox conception of the old masters who painted for the Roman Catholic church. These were probably brought from Spain or Portugal by the Jesuit priests who penetrated Japan. They are now used, however, to glorify one of the gods of Japan, who was not only miraculously conceived, but was born in a manger, according to Japanese belief. It is related that he suffered all the pains and penalties meted out to the reprobate wicked in the deepest dungeon in the prison house of King Yemmas, in Iigoko, or the hell of the Buddhists. The name of this self-sacrificing god is Yata-No-Iizo. How many centuries he has been in torture is a matter of conjecture only, as the period of his incarceration is not stated. It seems that in the olden times visitors were allowed to enter hell and view its system of torment.

If the black schoolmarm of the following account had never heard of John Jasper, the black biblical scholar, and the Bible, she would not hav acted in the brutal manner reported. It is a dangerous thing to put into the hands of ignorant, passionate, superstitious people like the negroes a volume which they believe to be the word of God. They hav not always the sense to discover its grossness, and the more religious they are the harder will be their course toward the exposers of their errors. If this teacher could hav flogged the author of the book as well as the poor devil of a scholar, it would undoubtedly hav given her even greater satisfaction. The dispatch is dated Athens, Ga., Aug. 19th; "Miss Julia Baxter, a colored schoolmarm at the log high school in Harmony Grove, yesterday flogged James Buchanan White, a coal-black pickaninny, nine years old, half a day, and then sent him home with a note to his parents requesting that they whip him. While the infant class in geography was reciting in that part of the book which treats of planetary motions and the boundaries of the milky way, it came the White boy's turn to answer a question about the motion of the earth, which he did by repeating an error of the book that it moved round the sun. Miss Persimmons, who is a graduate of a very select seminary for colored young ladies, under the auspices of the Rev. Mr. Jasper's church, in Richmond, Va., laughed immoderately at this blunder of the youth, and then hastily corrected it. When the lad described the rotation of the earth the teacher replied, 'The sun do move.' She would hav pardoned the absurd proposition about the earth's course if he had not further added that the earth was round. "Chile, if you keep on in dis way you'll nevah know nuffin, no more'n poah white trash. You'll nevah hav any culled culcha at all. Yoah too much like white children. I'll hav to whip you to make you learn." Miss Persimmons dismissed school and took the lad out into the school-yard, where she tied him to a hickory-tree with a cow rope. Taking a long, lithe whip about sixteen feet in length, technically called a black snake, she stood off a distance of eight feet, raised her glasses to her forehead, took off her petticoat, and swinging her long whip over her head laid two hundred lashes on the boy's back. The lad had been used to receiving about one hundred lashes every day regularly, so that he did not mind it very much till it got to the hundred and fiftieth lash. He was carried home on one of the school-house shutters. The affair created the greatest excitement. There was an indignation meeting in the Shiloh Baptist church. The matter was laid before the school commissioners of Harmony township, the trustees of the Peabody Educational Fund, and the governor of the state."

News of the Week.

President Arthur and party are on their way home from their Western trip.

Slade and Mitchell, the pugilists, hav declared off their proposed fight in Kansas, for fear of the law.

It is stated that the prospects are in favor of Ben Butler running this fall for re-election as governor of Massachusetts.

Seventy-five thousand deaths were caused by earthquake shocks and volcanic eruptions on the island of Java last week.

Persons by the name of Smith held a reunion in the village of Peapack, N. J., last week. There were 2,360 of them.

Nine men were arrested in Glasgow last Sunday, charged with having attempted to destroy property in that city with dynamite.

The blowing up of a steamboat on the Hudson river at this city caused the death of some fifteen persons, a clergyman among the number.

The new postal notes were put in circulation on the 3d inst. These notes are supplied by the post-office department in sums less than $5 for three cents.

Judge Hoadly, Democratic nominee for governor of Ohio, is seriously ill, and has gone to Philadelphia to place himself under the treatment of a physician.

An inventor induced the congregation of Trinity church, S. I., to assemble one day last week and witness an exhibition of a patent fire escape for people attending church. A deacon asked the patentee if he was not intruding slightly on the functions of the pas tor.

Reports from 115 special correspondents of the Boston Globe, at as many places in New England, show that the losses by the two months' severe drought will reach fully $1,000,000. Farmers, fruit growers, and manufacturers are the principal sufferers.

The New York Sun says that a number of the admirers of the writings of Thomas Paine in New Rochelle propose to organize an association that will for the future take charge of and guard from vandalism the monument on North street that marks the spot where the remains of the author of the "Age of Reason" were first interred.

Governor Crittenden, of Missouri, is reported to be seriously considering the question of calling an extra session of the legislature, either to amend the Downing Sunday law so as to make it apply to St. Louis, or to submit a prohibitory amendment to the constitution at the next general election. The governor says: "I am an anti-prohibitionist, but I feel that if the law is to be defied in St. Louis, and I hav to choose between lawlessness and prohibition, I am a Prohibitionist. Under such a provocation prohibition will carry the state by 50,000 majority."

One of the most horrible cases of religious lunacy of modern times is at present exciting the people of the eastern part of Erie county, Pa. Some time ago a well-to-do farmer named Knott, living on the shore of Lake Erie, attended a meeting of the Salvation Army at Franklin. He soon afterward became extremely religious. Last Sunday he planted a large wooden cross in the woods, and was proceeding to nail his eight-year-old son to it, having already driven a nail through the boy's hand, when he was interrupted and fled. At night he returned, knocked his wife insensible, took his daughter, 17 years of age, out of bed, bore her to the woods, tied her to a tree, and lit a fire at her feet, praying meanwhile that God would accept his sacrifice as an atonement for his sinful deeds. But help again arrived, and the fanatic was secured and the girl released. She was considerably burnt about the legs, arms, and sides. The experience drove her insane, it is feared permanently, and she will probably accompany her father to the madhouse.

Communications.

Illiberal Liberalism.

One of THE TRUTH SEEKER's facile and entertaining writers, after affirming the "bond of union" among Liberals to be the supremacy of this world and its affairs, takes occasion to add, "We will hav nothing to do with other-worldliness; against that we wage undying warfare; it is a barbaric sentimentalism utterly unworthy of modern civilization, and the true Liberal will hate it with all his mind."

This is rather strong language to use in condemnation of a sentiment, or barbaric sentimentalism, if you please, that is almost universal among mankind; and the gentleman asks a great deal when he demands that, in order to become a member of the noble company of Liberals, we must giv up one of the most cherished of human aspirations, and reconcile ourselvs to a theory of existence that is contracted and repulsiv, and which has not been proved to be any truer than the one he so scornfully lashes. He does admit that a "Spiritualist" may possibly be so slightly imbued with other-worldliness, and sufficently interested in the affairs of this footstool, as to entitle him to fellowship with Liberals, but the general tenor of his argument is shown in the words I hav quoted.

I quarrel with no man's opinions. It is probable that I do not differ greatly from Mr. Putnam in regard to a future or continued life, and I write this, not for the sake of controversy, but simply to point out, in the interests of constructiv Liberalism, the impolicy of so ruthlessly and unnecessarily kicking out of the Liberal army—which is small enough when all are mustered in—everything but the Materialistic element; or of trying to kill with ridicule the natural and accustomed hope of continued existence which a large class of Liberals entertain, when you confessedly do not know whether that supposed existence is a creation of imagination and desire, or a reality. While it remains as impossible to prove that the dissolution of the body is the termination of personal existence as it is to prove the continuance of life in another world, it seems superfluous and unwise to attack with the shafts of sarcasm and repel from the Liberal ranks those who are not ready to giv up the hope of a future world.

"One world at a time," is a nice sounding phrase; but what is meant is, one world only, then annihilation. That does not sound so pretty, and givs us pause. Mr. Putnam says he has no higher aim than "to revel in the hights and depths and grandeurs of this earthly scene." If he means that he has no desire for any other revel, or to continue his revel beyond the few years that he can expect in this world, then he is peculiarly constituted. If he were fifty years older than he is, and the period had arrived when the appetite for life is dulled, I could understand it; but he is now in the hight of his jocund revel, as any one can see in the article I refer to as well as in his activ form, and to such the idea of extinction is not usually pleasant. Ever since man was man he has felt a "secret dread and inward horror of falling into nought." Many hav arrived at the conclusion that there is no continuity of existence, that death ends all, but that conclusion is generally reached with sadness, seldom with indifference, less frequently with hilarious joy. Mr. Frederic Harrison, for instance, surrenders his belief in immortality with pathetic words of unconcealed regret; Professor Huxley speaks of breaking away from it "not without pain and grief;" and I recall no instance to the contrary of any thoughtful man, excepting Mr. Putnam. Says Socrates, "It would be wrong for me not to be grieved to die, if I did not think I should go to wise and good deities." When the final summons comes, how shall we wrap our cloaks about us and lie down to pleasant dreams when we entertain the belief that there will be neither dreams nor awakening? The idea of posthumous activity, or a corporate immortality in the race, as Mr. Wakeman puts it, is the best substitute that can be offered for the posthumous existence in which personal consciousness is the central element, and it is a grand idea, but it fails to satisfy the average mind; it failed to satisfy the mind that first built it up to take the place of a hope abandoned. How many of the men and women who rise this beautiful summer morning and engage in their several tasks or recreations with more or less satisfaction and contentment, would go about those occupations with the same lightness of heart if they believed that their life and consciousness would end forever with the setting sun; and who that reluctantly relinquishes a dear friend when relentless death claims him, would not feel a keener pang and a more incurable grief if there were no hope of reunion? I know this is looked upon as a selfish and barbaric sentimentalism, but I am not ashamed to own it as still lingering in my debased, or insufficiently elevated soul, or mind, or gray brain matter, or whatever you please to call the me.

It is not, I take it, the special business of Liberals to establish Materialism as the orthodox Liberal philosophy, nor to upset any form of spiritual philosophy. As individuals, they are supposed to be trying "to know the true in order to do the good;" as a body, their object, if I understand it, is the secularization of the state, the complete disestablishment of the church, and the protection of personal rights from the encroachments of either the state or the church. I see no reason why the wildest Spiritualist may not join the densest Materialist in working for these good ends. Even Positivism denies nothing regarding other worlds; it simply contents itself with the business of this, which alone is capable of demonstration. Devotion to the practical affairs of this world is not incompatible with belief in the existence of another. Some of the noblest work—many would say most of the noblest work—that has been done for humanity has been done by men and women who were animated by a lively sense of a world to come. It is true that people sometimes become so absorbed in the contemplation of a future existence as to neglect or pervert the duties of this life, but they are only exceptional cases. It is the constant complaint of the clergy that their flocks are too "worldly;" and, on the other hand, one of the principal charges of Liberals against the clergy is that they devote more attention to the good things of this world than their creeds warrant, or than is consistent with the interests of the people. The priests who sound the tocsin of hell, and point us to the other side of Jordan to play on a golden harp, seldom neglect to pass the hat when they hav finished the warning and exhortation; and it has been remarked as a singular coincidence that an offer of the church in the next town to go a thousand better on a preacher's salary is invariably followed by a call from the Lord to accept it. And if Mr. Putnam thinks there are any "Spiritualists" who are indifferent to a square meal, or whose Materializing penchants interfere with their eye to the main chance, let him reduce his theory to knowledge by inviting some of them to dinner, and then trying a post-prandial dicker with the most hungry looking of his ghost-seeing guests. After such an experiment Mr. Putnam will revise his opinion as to other-worldliness dulling the carnal appetite and destroying interest in mundane railroads and mowing machines and things. At least my experience is that "the 'lean kine' of Spiritualism" are not often left, to use the language of the unregenerate, to any great extent by "the 'fat kine' of Materialism."

It seems to me that the exclusivness, almost intolerance, that has been manifested on the part of the Positivists or Materialists toward the Spiritualists, notably in a late article in the Radical Review, is not only illiberal, but impolitic and destructiv of the practical objects of Liberalism. As we demand the largest mental liberty, let us also hav the largest tolerance of religious opinion. When a man puts his shoulder to your wheel, do not rudely decline his assistance because he is "hollow-eyed with looking for the ghosts of the dead," or because "he wants to be a spirit," and you don't. It is such inconsistencies and intolerance that giv point to the Christian criticism that Materialists are molecular mad, and that Freethought is the "war-whoop of the intellectual savage."

D. W. CRAIG.

Some Mistakes of Matthew, Luke, and Others.

Josephus used to be more popular with Christians than he is to-day. That celebrated reference to Jesus Christ was much harped upon, and old-fashioned believers regarded the "excellent Josephus" as a kind of patriarch, little lower than an Abraham or Jacob. The Bible and Josephus used to be vended in couples. The pious editors, commentators, and translators of Josephus praised him to the highest echo, never tiring of asserting his piety, learning, accuracy, and love of truth. Now the truth is that he is a very conscientious and truthful recorder of events. The learned and godly theologians hav committed themselvs too far to go back on him, but a more profound acquaintance with Josephus makes him a very embarrassing friend for Christians to lean upon. The famous DeQuincey ascertained this, and broke out into expressions of wrath, even going so far as to call him "that infernal liar and scoundrel, Josephus," "old Joe," "Joe the liar," etc., using attempts at heavy wit as astounding as the gambols of the donkey when, in imitation of the little dog, it jumped into its master's lap. DeQuincey's rage grew out of Josephus's account of the Essenes. "Why," says De Quincey, "if this account be true, these Essenes were Christians, and we would hav Christianity in the world before Christ and without Christ." He alleges that the whole story was invented by Josephus, the liar, for the very purpose of overthrowing Christianity, and he admits if such a story could possibly be true it must overthrow it. But it was a shallow invention of that scoundrel, old Joe, a pure fiction gotten up by him. Strange indeed that DeQuincey forgot to say that Philo, the Jew, who wrote before Josephus, and about the year 1, givs a long, detailed, minute account of the same people or sect. So perhaps Philo invented it in anticipation of Christianity, to destroy it.

But there are several important facts mentioned by Josephus throwing light upon Jewish events and history which are very embarrassing if we read them with the gospels, Acts, epistles, etc. He givs a very full account of the life of Herod the king, and of his sons and successors. One who reads it carefully will not be confused by reading in the testament about Herod the tetrarch. He is no more likely to confound them and other characters than he is to confound Charles I. with Charles II., or Napoleon Bonaparte with Louis Napoleon. The only difficulty about Josephus is the one common to ancient historians—he fails to giv dates; events he givs in their due succession, but dates he neglects. He takes us right into the daily life and household of King Herod; we see how politic and cautious he was, how for long years he hated his sons with a deadly hatred, desiring to hav them slain—studying how he might bring charges against some of them, yet ever afraid of the people. At last, when he knew he had no longer to liv, suffering under a loathsome disease, eaten up with worms, at last he lets loose and murders one of his sons, and then dies. On a night or two before his death there was an eclipse of the moon, says Josephus. This fixes accurately the date of his death within a day or two. This eclipse has been calculated back by astronomers innumerable times. It was on the thirteenth day of March, four years before Christ. Although this Herod held the government of Syria under the Roman Emperor Augustus by the decree of the Roman senate, yet he was perhaps the greatest monarch the Jews ever had, all things considered. He built the temple that is so much talked of, although it is supposed that it was built much earlier. He fought many battles; had been the intimate friend of Antony, and Augustus afterward received him as his friend. The events of his life are clearly exposed by Josephus. With great difficulty and by permission of Augustus after a trial, Herod procured two of his sons to be executed. After sentence was carried out their bodies were "by night" conveyed away. After reading these accounts it sounds strange to read in one of the gospels that Jesus Christ was born in the days of Herod the king, and that Herod out of some fear "sent forth and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem," etc. In all the history of the Roman empire such an event never was heard of. Brutal emperors might tyrannize over great citizens, but they let the common people alone. It sounds like the crude idea of ignorant persons who think kings go about cutting off heads. However, Herod is dead, and Archelaus reigns in his stead. After ten years he is banished. We will remember that Matthew says that when Joseph "heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea in room of his father Herod (who was dead), he was afraid to go thither" (ch. ii, 19). Josephus tells us why Archelaus was banished and then says (book 18, ch. i, Antiquities), "Now Cyrenius, a Roman senator, etc., etc., being sent to judge that nation, and take an account of their substance. Moreover he came himself into Judea which was now added to the province of Syria, to take an account of their substance, and dispose of Archelaus's property. But the Jews at first took the report of this taxation heinously."

So when we read in the second chapter of Luke that Joseph and Mary went up to be taxed, and this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was governor, and that Jesus Christ was born on the way, it sounds like a discrepancy in the testimony—one of those blunders that would discredit the oath of man, but becomes an unfathomable mystery in the word of God telling us of the miracle of his son's birth. Luke says (ch. iii) that in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Christ began to be about thirty years of age. If so, he must hav been born fifteen years before Tiberius began to reign, or fifteen years after Augustus died. This only adds to the confusion. Let readers try to settle it for themselvs. Bibles and Josephuses are in every house, and the exercise will impress the facts on their minds. A very little reading, criticising, and comparing will show to readers discrepancies perhaps never before noticed. I write this merely to call attention to a few.

I am aware that, to those who are not familiar with literature, questions of chronology are as mysterious as those about a horse's age are to those who are not versed in horse affairs. Yet almost any man can satisfy himself as to the time of Washington's life, and by tracing events backward he may be able in time to assure himself as to the true year 1 of the Christian era; at least sufficiently to enable him to judge. Priests hav tried to confuse the question of Christ's existence with that of Napoleon and Washington, and hav embarrassed many unlettered persons. Nor is it very far to go back. Eighteen hundred years is but a short time if we duly consider the matter. Our nation has existed but a century, and many of us can easily remember back half the time. By getting a clear idea of the time A.D. 1, and remembering when Augustus died, which is as easy to know as is any part of history, we may see the absurdity of many expressions in the New Testament. Christ was fifteen years old when Augustus died, as per Luke. Yet take notice that Paul makes appeal to Augustus (Acts xxvii, 1, and xxv, 21–25). It is remarkable what is said about Herod the king, in chapter twelve. By reading the chapter it is evident the king of Judea is meant. Yet although this was long after Christ's death, here we hav old Herod, who died

"eaten by worms" four years before Christ, a fact of which Josephus could not be mistaken. And yet this is the word of God. Colenso and other ministers of the gospel reject the Pentateuch because of the "mistakes of Moses," How about the mistakes of Matthew and Luke? HOLT.

Ideology.

THE WITCHCRAFT IDEA IN HISTORY.

Witchcraft is practical mysticism. The idea is a suspicion as to an imaginary attempt to pick the lock for which nature's order and laws hav provided no key. In the Bible it is "commerce with God, or the invisible world." It is only ideas of the unknown God, devils, or ghosts, that culminate in witchcraft. The light of science is from things known, and, like the central sun, it shines for all; while theories built upon phenomena believed to be mystical cast their dark shadows on the "few that are saved." All are fascinated by music, oratory, poetry, art, and beauty; but under the control of false ideas in Christianity we hav witchcraft, and millions put to death under this suspicion. False ideas, crystallized into an ism, culminate in bigotry, cruelty, proscription, persecution, slavery, witchcraft, suicide, and murder.

And how terrible Christianity has been in this regard will be apparent when we consider the millions it has put to death of its own victims, who were its own "kith and kin." It has actually slain millions of those whom Christianity itself had made witches and wizards. Mr. Bennett and other well-informed writers hav estimated the number of men, women, and children at nine millions who hav been by Christianity put to death on the gallows and at the stake. And Christianity, the witchcraft that perpetrated these bloody deeds, is in full blast among us to this day! The theory of two hundred, or three thousand, years ago is preached to-day, in spite of science, in spite of the ten thousand facilities that are everywhere accessible for better views of manhood and humanity. None but a mind bewitched with mysticism could read THE TRUTH SEEKER, or any Liberal paper, for a month without being convinced that Christianity is a fraud. Any one of the Freethought volumes advertised in THE TRUTH SEEKER from week to week contains moral dynamite enough to blow that mystical balloon to atoms in the sky. No one not bewitched by some phase of mysticism could ever imagin himself invested "by faith" with a capacity for seeing a personage big enough to fill illimitable space.

And it was in full view of this condition of things that our humanity stretched forth its right arm of justice and wiped out chattel slavery from all the churches and this nation, only a few years ago. This is what humanity did, at an immense cost of its treasure and blood—and, moreover, despite of Christianity and its God. Had this God and his own chosen people been allowed control in these United States, this nation would hav to-day been engaged in slave-breeding and slave-holding, with its auction-blocks for the sale of human flesh. And in Washington the chains of the slave would now be heard, with the orator's eloquence for liberty and equal rights in our Christian republic.

"Tremendously True," or False.—"If Christianity be true," says the priest, "it is tremendously true." Ah, indeed! And if it be untrue, what then? Why, it is a tremendous lie. A lie six thousand years long; a lie repeated in so many pulpits, and for so long a time, that no rule nor scale known to geometry or the scientific world can measure it. But thoughtful and scientific people began to hav some idea of a huge lie when all the prayers of Christendom failed in the death of Garfield. That hideous lie was significant. That was an experiment that the praying priests and churches had never anticipated. They scouted the idea of such an experiment when, a few years ago, it was proposed by Prof. Tyndall. But it is the scientific method, and it has proved how that old myth in the sky has always lied and failed. The Christian devil is the father of lies. Is there among all the nations of this planet any idea of a devil or hell-fire like that of Christianity? Any idea like the three gods in one, and each of them big enough to fill unbounded space? Is there elsewhere any idea of anger and wrath like that of the Christian God?

"Commerce with God."—As we shall see, this is Christianity and witchcraft; and it is an encouraging consideration that so vast a majority of the human race hav always and forever been opposed to Christianity. Humanity is a success. It is no failure, and never has been in need of any form of mysticism. The number victimized by theoretical and practical witchcraft may be said to be few, when compared with the entire race, and still they are becoming less and less. Or, it you say that the "suspicion" of witchcraft upon which the victims were put to death was well founded, I now invite you to the proof from the Bible that Christianity is itself witchcraft—nothing more nor less. Do not all Christians hav "commerce with God?" Do not all Mormons and modern Spiritualists "hav commerce with the invisible world?" This is witchcraft, and so determined by Christianity itself. It has no proof outside of its own self-created faith (Heb. xi, 1)—no proof of its dogmas, no proof of its creed, and done of any crime in those hung for witchcraft. Hence its dogmatism and drilling human ignorance and credulity, as that mountebank, Moody, is now doing in Boston. Has it any evidence of the sexhood of its God? any of his personal identity with which it holds an imaginary commerce? It is a conglomeration of lies that has put its own victims to death upon the gallows and at the stake. It renders its victims sick with the fear of hell, and then puts them to death to get rid of them.

The proof I now present against Christianity is stronger and more conclusiv than anything in the Bible in its favor. Christianity is the theory of which witchcraft is the practical. And here I refer you to that old barbarian book, Deuteronomy xiii, 10; 1 Sam. xv, 23; 2 Chron. xxxiii, 6; 2 Kings ix, 22; Mich. v, 12; Nah. iii, 4; Gal. v, 20. Now all commentators on the Bible are agreed that the witchcraft here threatened with death by the Christian God is nothing more nor less than "commerce with God and with the invisible world," in order to "reveal its mysteries." And it will be sufficient if I quote from Dr. Adam Clarke, the most learned and popular of all that hav attempted to interpret that old barbarizing book, for our benefit. His huge commentary, in six large volumes, now lies before me, for which I paid thirty dollars when I was myself a revival Methodist preacher. Dr. Clarke, in his notes on Exodus xxii, 18, says: "The term rendered 'witch' is from the Hebrew casaph—to reveal, uncover; and it signifies commerce with God; a person who professes to reveal hidden mysteries by commerce with God or the invisible world."

Now, it is easy to see how this definition covers the entire ground of mysticism, including all Christians, all Mormons, and all modern mediums and Spiritualists. Each of these classes certainly profess to hav commerce with the invisible world. Modern mediums offer their services to humanity as an "open door to the condition man enters at death." And Theodore Parker, who while he lived had no faith in any such revelation, said, as an off-set to Christianity: "Why, the modern Spiritualists hav been to the Christian hell, and they tell us upon their return that there are no devils there."

Moreover, notice how this definition of witchcraft interdicts the gospel of the New Testament. It forbids commerce with God and the invisible world, for revealing hidden mysteries—the identical thing that was done by Jesus and by all his apostles. The New Testament is replete with these declarations: "We speak the wisdom of God in a mystery." "According to the revelation of the mystery." "Made known to us the mystery of his will." "My knowledge in the mystery of Christ." "Great is the mystery of godliness." "As stewards of the mysteries of God."

And a column might be filled with similar quotations, showing that when Dr. Clarke's definition of witchcraft forbids commerce with God and the invisible world, for revealing hidden mysteries, it forbids the praying of Christians and interdicts the preaching of all the priests. Thus does Christianity use itself up. Its faith is self-created, and thus it is self-destroyed. Hence the identity of Christianity and witchcraft. In defining one you describe the other. What stultification! What monstrous inconsistency! And thus obfuscated by faith in mysticism, it has been for Christians, unlike all other classes, to put their victims to death for doing what they themselvs do. Those suspected of witchcraft protested that they were not witches nor wizards; nor did they know what witchcraft was—a delusion founded on the trances of Abraham, Daniel, Peter, and Paul, each of whom was obfuscated in a dreamy state of trance when they had "visions and revelations from the Lord." And Christianity—this same witchcraft founded upon a state of self-induced trance—metes out supreme contempt on mediums of the present day. How inconsistent and cruel this persecution is I can see because I know that the pathology and the psychology of the trance is always the same, as it is in dreams and fits, and in mental derangement. Hence it is monstrously inconsistent for any Christian or theologian to ridicule a modern medium in this regard.

These mediums I hav known from the beginning, and Christianity I hav myself preached, and I hav known what it is for sixty years. And it is my opinion that I hav seen many modern mediums far more "inspired" than St. Paul was when he is said to hav had "visions and revelations from the Lord." And I hav heard as good advice given by them as any found in the Bible, or ever heard from the pulpit. On account of these persecutions I can also see an inconsistency when Spiritualists take upon themselvs the name of Christians.

And now, while I say nothing more than merely to refer to the two cases that hav occurred under the auspices of Spiritualism of spirit babes reported born, as I refer to that "overshadowing" narrated of Mary. [Inquire of Mr. A. E. Newton and John M. Spear.] And I now call on any Christian layman or minister, excepting one named Joseph Cook, to tell me, through this paper, his opinion as to whether there was, or was not, something like "commerce with God" in that case of "overshadowing" narrated in Luke i, 26–30; and as to whether we should ever hav had any Jesus or Christianity without that bewitching process in that commerce with the third person in the godhead. The Bible speaks of four invisible personages—three in the godhead, and the old boss devil. And I call on any Christian who will do so to giv me his rule by which he can distinguish between these personages. How does he determin the sexhood and the personal identity of an indivisibility? and how does he prove as to what kind of intercourse anyone may hav had with the invisible world? How does he determin the number of invisibles, or as to whether there is one? and if more, how many? How can he make it to appear, if he is a Christian, that his commerce with God differs from that of a wizard?

"Inflated with Frenzy."—Dr. Clarke, in his notes on Lev. xix, 31, says: "A wizard is one who in his commerce with the invisible world becomes inflated with frenzy."

And, as an illustration, he quotes and emphasizes Virgil as follows:

". . . . . Invoke the skies,
I feel the rushing God! she cries.
While yet she spake, enlarged her features grew;
Her color changed, her locks disheveled flew.
The heavenly tumult reigns in every part—
Pants in her breast, and swells her rising heart.
Still swelling to the sight, the priestess glowed,
And heaved impatient of the incumbent God."
—Æneid, l. vi, v. 46.

During my twenty years in the Methodist Episcopal church I attended many a Methodist picnic, or camp-meeting, where I always saw more or less of what is described in the foregoing from Virgil. There is not so much of this "frenzy" manifested in revivals, or at the picnics, as there was fifty years ago. And yet they tell us that the ism is like "the word of the Lord"—it never changes. And if so, how are we to account for it that there hav been no victims hung for witchcraft lately? If any of my readers desire to witness the Methodist process of bewitching the people with their own ideas of mysticism, go to one of their picnics, where for a week they keep up the drilling with sermon, prayer, and song; or attend one of Moody's harangs.

I hope I may not be the only one left, now living, who attended the preaching of the "far-famed" John N. Moffit. He was an Irishman, and believed himself eloquent, as his manner of drilling was quite successful. I remember his meetings in Boston, and his suit for libel against Mr. Buckingham, editor of the Boston Courier, in 1824. His suit was a failure.

"Thou Shalt Not Suffer a Witch to Liv."—There it stands in that old Christian book—a collection of books on mysticism so old that nobody knows, or ever can know, by whom they were written, or when. And two hundred years ago what a terrible command was that to be uttered from the pulpit every Sunday!

". . . . . It is all one—
To be a witch, or suspected one."

And what a "suspicion" was that to become a panic in a church, a neighborhood, a country, and throughout Christendom! And this is Christianity's death warrant—the keystone to the Christian arch that supports the gallows it executes its victims on. And now, adopting the theological definition of witchcraft as correct, it follows that every Christian, every priest, every Mormon, every modern medium and Spiritualist, should forthwith be hung or burnt at the stake. LAROY SUNDERLAND.

Quincy, Mass., July 27, N.E. 108.

Something the Matter with the Mails.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: About three weeks ago (I cannot recall the date), noticing Elmina's request for copies of the Physiologist, and remembering that I had been a subscriber to that paper during a portion of its brief and checkered existence, I instituted a search among my effects and found three of the numbers desired. These I mailed to her address, together with a note stating that I had done so, and mentioning the papers which I desired in return. Not having received any papers or heard anything in regard to them, I was somewhat puzzled as to the cause of the delay. I had just decided to communicate with Elmina to ascertain if she had received my papers, when the postman came in and handed me my TRUTH SEEKER. Imagin my astonishment, upon glancing over its columns, to find a statement from Elmina to the effect that she had not received a single paper in response to her advertisment. It was evident from this that she had not received either the papers or the letter which I had sent her. Now, if only the papers had failed to reach her, I should at once hav come to the conclusion that Tony had confiscated them; but, with all his brazen audacity, I could hardly believe him capable of confiscating a sealed letter.

The letter and papers were properly stamped, and addressed to, "Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.;" and the question now arises, What has become of them? Who can tell? Anxiously yours,

THOMAS JOHNSTON.

Yonkers, N. Y., August 25, 1883.

THE ROCHESTER CONVENTION.

Three Times as Large as Any Other Gathering of Freethinkers Ever Held.

THE CONVENTION OPENED BY PRESIDENT BROWN.—CHAINEY ON "THE CLERGY."—D. M. BENNETT HONORED.—THE REV. MR. MITCHELL ANSWERED BY MR. WAKEMAN.—WOMAN REPRESENTED BY MRS. COLMAN, SUSAN WIXON, AND MRS. LAKE.

The convention opened on Wednesday morning, August 29th, at the Corinthian Academy of Music, one of the finest halls in the state, and which was made more beautiful with the decorations provided by the local committee. The stage was set with a large number of houseplants, and flowers covered the tables and the organ. At the rear of the stage were portraits of Thomas Paine, D. M. Bennett, and Robert G. Ingersoll, with the following sentences respectivly surmounting them: "The world is my country; to do good, my religion;" "Oh, for a revival of reason, truth, and common sense;" "Infidelity is liberty; all religion is slavery," each sentence being the utterance of him over whose portrait it was placed.

Two large American flags draped the back of the stage, and two additional mottoes decorated the walls, one an expression of Thomas Jefferson, "I hav sworn eternal hostility to every form of mental slavery over the human mind;" the other by Washington: "The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion." Music for the convention was provided by the "Plymouth Quartet"—Mrs. E. M. Deckusson, soprano; Mrs. S. G. Hollister, contralto; W. F. Brace, basso, and Philip Fried, tenor. Mrs. Brace presided at the piano.

Most of those in attendance from a distance arrived on Tuesday, and many far-away places were represented. People came from Colorado, Kansas, Arkansas, Missouri, and Louisiana, and came for no other purpose than to attend the convention. The opening day gave promis of what the week was to be—one of interest and importance in the history of Liberalism.

Upon the invitation of H. L. Green, secretary of the association, the little book entitled, "Notes on Ingersoll," which was written by Father Lambert, a Catholic priest, and which is designed to refute the great orator's arguments, was sold at the entrance to the hall during the convention. The Catholic Union used the following language in accepting the invitation:

"We believe we shall be an humble instrument in leading to the object of our desire by placing in the hands of all sincere and earnest searchers for truth a little book that completely annihilates the man, who, by pen and tongue, has done more to lead men from the truth than other man in these our days."

Mr. Green jokingly suggested that "hereafter, in return, Freethinking books and pamphlets will be distributed and for sale in Catholic assemblages." Ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, of Michigan, following up the idea, suggested that in return perhaps the Catholic hierarchy of Rochester would permit the Freethinkers to occupy their pulpits in that city next Sunday.

The convention was called to order by Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, N. Y., who appointed the following committees: Business, H. L. Green, of New York; W. S. Bell, Massachusetts; J. H. Burnham, Mich.; G. W. Baldwin, Pennsylvania, and John Ray, Canada; Resolutions, Courtlandt Palmer, Samuel P. Putnam, and B. Flinn, of New York; Mattie Krekel, Missouri; George Chainey and Susan H. Wixon, Massachusetts; Allen Pringle, Canada; C. B. Waite, Illinois; John E. Remsburg, Kansas; A. B. Bradford, Pennsylvania, and Charles Watts, England.

President T. L. Brown then delivered his opening address to the convention. His subject was, "Who Are Freethinkers?" and his text the following lines:

"The time has come to stand erect
In noble, manly self-respect,
To see the bright sun overhead,
To feel the ground beneath our tread
Unruled by priests, uncursed by creeds,
Our manhood proving by our deeds."

The following is a synopsis of the address:

To think and act as we are impelled is to be just and honest in both thought and deed. Then we represent thinking in its most honorable and acceptable existence. In all our thinking we hav no certain choice of what we shall think. Each and every thought is the inevitable result of some form or motion of matter producing it. Withdraw the blood from the brain and thought will cease. Thought, like digestion or respiration, wholly depends upon certain organs and their functions for its existence. When the blood is withdrawn from the lungs, stomach, and brain, then respiration, digestion, and thought cease. Thus does every motion as a function of each organ of the body end when the form is destroyed. Freethinkers, who hav analyzed the forms and combinations of the nearest objects, and plainly pointed out their relations and rational uses, not only save Christians from real evil, but make it necessary for them to more fully and correctly understand the material and immediate causes of disease and death. To free ourselvs from the actual evils of life is a better work than to pay priests and preachers for trying to save us from damnation, which, they say, awaits us in an imaginary existence if we do not believe. Health is holiness; the physical and mental health of the body will, as usual, control the moral worth of the individual and the race. It is the wisest policy to liv for this world until we know of another. To be knowing and just is to be able to care for this world until we know of another. To be knowing and just is to be able to care for one's self as never God or priest has done. Such a person is the Freethinker—the Infidel of this present age.

He is worth more to humanity than all the preachers and priests combined. All we really receive from the preachers and their zealous believers is an exhortation to believe in Jesus and in their creed as better than the practice of knowledge and reason. We can show that a scientific education will do more toward improving the deeds of mankind than the ignorant declaration, "I believe in Jesus." We will giv $25 for each crime committed by Freethought teachers of science, if the clergy will giv us $1 for each crime committed by the preachers and priests, rating each class according to its relativ numbers. We can show by the best of evidence that the more orthodox a man is the more liable he is to be a criminal. No one of sense will deny the criminality of John Calvin. When we find the Christian guides to holiness more criminal in proportion to their number than any class of persons whom they condemn, why need we be asked by them, "What substitute will ye giv in place of religion?" When the clergy and their zealous followers will depend upon the practical and demonstrable sciences, their crimes will be less and their morals will increase. To know and teach the truths of science improves any immoral person.

The morality and goodness of a Christian or an Infidel depend upon his deeds, not upon his dreams of the future. It is what we do, not what we preach, which makes us really good or evil. Labor is the basis of all good demonstration, and is far better than belief. The real ethics of Freethought lies in the perfect liberty of investigation, operation, independent action, and the fearless expression of all radical thought. Freethinkers grant others the same rights and privileges they claim for themselvs. The rights of individual thought are often denied by the ignorant vote of the selfish majority. "Believe or be damned" is the Bible phrase by which we can know a thinker from those who hav a substitute to think for them. A Freethinker would rather know and be damned than know and be saved a believer. "I would be damned if I do believe" is the Freethinker's idea of an honest salvation. Educate the people, and prayers will not be needed for the good of the preachers. They are the honest thinkers who grant every possible opportunity to others to investigate and know for themselvs. The doubters and Infidels hav, after working nearly three hundred years, prevented the believing Christians from continuing to murder each other for daring to differ on religious doctrins. A brave thinker or an advanced talker subjects himself to the creed-bound criticism of such guides to holiness as Joseph Cook and T. DeWitt Talmage. Those pleaders of the Calvin faith are now gathering in the last rotten folds of the Presbyterian predestination net. How much of the Golden Rule do you recognize in their Bible phrase, "Believe or be damned?' Priests and preachers invite damnation as their Christian method of getting an easy living without sweating their brows. The time has now come for the sinners to giv them an intellectual sweat as to their moral relations to society. In the village of Owego, in this state, not long since, an intimate friend of the Baptist minister there asked him why the people did not attend church as much as usual. He replied in a lower tone of voice, "They now know more than they did." That minister told the truth. Preachers are now about the only persons who wholly disobey the command, "Six days only shalt thou labor;" they work the most on the seventh day—unless away on their summer vacation. We hold that in proportion as we increase our knowledge of the forms and motions of matter, we make it equally possible to improve our moral and secular worth. Selfishness and ignorance hav been, and are still, the principal causes of crime and cruelty. The history of the Christian religion is but the record of infamous murders committed by the ignorant zealots of superstition. Our great duty is to do for the believing Christians and their ignorant followers what God and his preachers hav failed to do. By knowledge and example we will make it sinless and popular, as well as profitable, to be an activ Freethinker and laboring unbeliever. For eighteen hundred years the world has been cursed, damned, and robbed by priests and preachers; and what harm is there in now trying to improve their Christian conduct toward poor worldly sinners. Will you help us to educate the people to do without religious myths, damning creeds, and non-producing priests and preachers? I think, if there is a God, he can save us, if necessary, without careworn and expensiv help. I hav found it wise and good for me to let them wholly care for themselvs.

The address was enthusiastically received, and the speaker was frequently interrupted by applause. The quartet gave excellent music, and H. H. Hall, of Bradford, sang "In the Sunny Long Ago." The convention then adjourned until two o'clock.

At the afternoon session, after the singing of "America" by the quartet, Jay Chaapel, of Brighton, delivered an address on the "Trio of Reforms." The speaker said that the professions of theology, law, and medicin were all sadly in need of reform. Ministers, and indeed the whole fabric of Christianity, are shams. Lawyers and doctors are the legitimate offspring of Christianity, and bid fair to outdo the church in their evil effects upon society. Freedom of thought and freedom of action are as necessary in one sphere of action as another. Advocates of freedom hav been the grandest men and women that ever lived, and yet for centuries they hav been objects of scorn on the part of the enemies of true liberty. The present age was distinguished for the triumph of mind over physical evils. The history of the church is a record of ignorance, devastation, and bloodshed. The church has opposed with the bitterest contempt scientific efforts which tend to advance and ennoble humanity. The churches still continue to keep up the semblance of the persecution of the past. One must be entirely free from any belief in religion before he can stand out in the broad sunshine of freedom and reason. Lawyers did not deal out justice, but often connived with each other to cheat their clients. He advised all who desired justice never to become clients of a lawyer. The speaker illustrated his points with many instances in his own experience, and the address was greeted with enthusiastic applause.

After singing by the quartet, Mr. S. P. Putnam delivered an address upon "The Spirit of Humanity in American Poetry." Following is an abstract of his remarks:

What is poetry? None can answer this question fully, for in poetry lies the supreme mystery of existence. It is the deepest and highest of all things. In humanity itself as the highest nature do we find the grandest poetry because therein do we find the grandest and most varied life. That poetry has ever been the grandest which has been most touched with the spirit of humanity. The poetry of theology has no permanent value only as it has expressed in symbols the mighty passions of the natural heart. The conception of humanity as a vast organism with a life beginning in the far ages and growing with each successiv generation—this is a modern conception, and has found but little definit expression in poetry. While all of our great poets hav been liberal and rational respecting the creeds of the past, they hav not been possessed by the spirit of science. America has not yet produced an all-comprehensiv and philosophic bard, although in the wise and lofty Emerson we hav one almost on the verge of becoming such a new Shakspere. The most original of our poets are Bryant, Poe, Walt Whitman, and Bret Harte. The poet must recognize the demands of science. Nothing that poetry has conceived can equal the truth that science has discovered. The infinit constellations hav become our laurels, and the flowers at our feet are most beautiful when we trace their living beauty with the multiplied eyes of science. The progress of science would be a most poetic theme if we had the power to translate into music the magnificence of its achievements. The poet must also recognize the infinit in man. The greatest poets are those who hav recognized the all-pervading unknowable. The poet must also recognize the moral element. He must perceive the duality of existence. He must see that in our human earthly relations there are two eternally battling forces—good and evil. The greatest of poets hav not been altogether optimistic; they hav felt the still sad music of humanity. They hav realized that all was not brightness and beauty; that in the joy and glory of being there was evermore a tragedy. We giv ourselvs to the good, not because we know it will triumph, but because it is the dearest part of ourselvs. The poet of the future must also be the poet of labor, for labor in the hereafter will become musical, and the poet must voice its music. Labor shall hav its armies as gay, as glittering, and as beautiful as the old-time chivalric hosts. The greatest bard is he who can understand—not the soul of an archangel, but the thoughts of him who digs and delves in the street. The noblest singer is he who with deft fingers touches the harp of our homeliest joys, who awakes the music of the humblest tasks, who roams not amid palaces to gather the jewels of his deathless crown, but amid the cottages, the daisies, and the sweet fields, where grow and glisten the harvests of our common work.

There was a larger audience present in the evening than at either of the previous sessions of the convention. A recitation entitled, "Our Father in Heaven," was read by Miss C. Fannie Allyn. George Chainey followed with his lecture on "The Clergy." The speaker said:

There are about 75,000 men and a few women who come under the head of my lecture. Their business is to help the omnipotent. Whether there is a God or not he does not need their assistance. There are always more needy ones than we are able to assist. If there is a God it is his bounden duty to help us, and not our duty to serve him. It is from this position that I propose to view the subject. It is not against the minister as an individual that I speak, but the ministry as a profession. Our savage ancestors feared two kinds of foes—the seen and the unseen. The pre-eminent man was selected as chief or king. But they imagined that the caves and caverns were all infested by these unseen foes. The people were ready to be the abject slaves if the spirits would be propitious. Those who mediated between these unseen foes and the common people were rewarded with the greatest wealth. Thus was the priesthood born. These priests established many trivial ceremonies. They delivered to the people the offspring of their excited imagination. Their privileges made them corrupt, and they became hypocrits. In this country we depend upon the power of the people, yet we are most grievously priestridden. We despise the name of "king," still our property is taxed to support the spectral offspring of fear. Christianity in meaning is the offering of humanity to appease a villainous and bloodthirsty god. Every prayer-meeting is a nursery of hypocrisy and cant. All worship is the stammering of the blanched lips of fear. The fairest blossoms of piety conceal the deathly bloom of fear. These 75,000 ministers are employed to keep alive a slimy, serpentlike superstition. Every priest is a salaried servant in the carnival of death to teach men to be ignorant of the revelations of science that they may be wise. I would take from the clergy their priestly functions. I would withdraw them from the service of ghosts. I would admonish them to keep men from real hell. Many still believe in heaven, hell, and the devil, and I do not deny their right to do so. Many a slave has hugged his bondage as a divine blessing. The consolation of religion is self-deception. Think of men thanking God for sending their mothers and fathers to hell. It is like gathering nettles for roses, to expect to gain comfort from the Christian religion. The real intellectual leaders of the world now no longer consider the church worthy of a thought.

Two powers are destroying the force of the church. The first is the onward march of science; the second is humanity—the natural instinct of mankind and the revolt against the teaching that a curse is a blessing. For the present I am willing to confess that the clergy are a necessary evil. Thousands clamor for their services. But that should not prevent us from striving to make their services unnecessary. The world distrusts the ministers and regards them as spies. The men who succeed in the ministry, in the popular sense, do so by the sacrifice of truth and by dishonor. They must smile on saint and sinner alike until they become morally color blind. It is hard for a minister to leave a church, even when he knows that such is the call of duty. Those who sit in the pews are in part to blame. They should employ their ministers as teachers, and not as attorneys to plead their cause with the Almighty, thus putting a premium on insincerity and hypocrisy. The ministers would be happier and better and manlier men if they would engage in some other business. To accomplish this result we must substitute science for theology. What we want in the place of the church is the school-house sustained by all the devotion that has been sacrificed to the church. When we respect ourselvs we will cease to pray. Museums, free parks, telegraphs, telephones, gas, railroad, and labor, progress and development—these are the apostles in which we believe. Let all these be accessible to the people, not in the misty future, but in the living present. To do this we unlearn all that the church teaches. The ministry stands as a hindrance to improvement. Again, we do not want ministers to keep up the custom of call-

How many domestic troubles hav been caused by the intermeddling of the clergy. We do not need them to officiate at weddings. The idea is preposterous that the blessing of a priest is superior to love. The New Testament regards marriage as merely a convenience, and admonishes believers to subject their love to God while it prates to them about saving their souls. A wise marriage is in obedience to all of nature's laws. It is nonsense to speak of marriages being made in heaven. All laws in reference to marriages should be made as if there were no such thing as a minister in the universe. By associating marriage with the law the law is degraded. Again, the ordinary funeral service is a mockery of grief. It demands a resignation we cannot feel. The priest in this relation is a relic of that barbarism which hired mourners to walk the streets and howl. To him who has rightly lived, loved, and thought, it makes no difference whether death is an endless sleep or a new birth. Why should we fear to die? From our standpoint, death has no terrors. To us it is merely eternal rest. To crumble into dust, or to reappear as the grass, is far better than to wail in hell or to fold our hands in any orthodox heaven. Most city churches nowadays are merely places of amusement. In this capacity they are doing a good work. There will soon be a place for the legitimate Sunday theaters. When we become thoroughly educated we will recognize that there is more good in Hamlet than in an orthodox sermon. The church depresses while the theater inspires. When the theater is entirely developed we will discover that we hav solved the question, "What will you giv us in place of the church?" It is also said that the clergy stand in direct relation with the sentiment and fine feeling of mankind. But we will content ourselvs with nature, whose beauty and majesty may well satisfy us.

When asked in regard to the infinit we will reverently answer, "I do not know." The last objection to what I hav said is that morality is centered in the clergy. Nothing is farther from the truth than this. There are two kinds of morality, artificial and natural. The former only is the product of religion. This may keep a man from blacking his boots on Sunday, though he be ready at any time to blacken his neighbor's character. But natural morality is our individual inheritance; it is the love of right because it is right. Christianity takes sides against morality when it requires a man in his prayer to defame his own character. A creed which demands that a belief in the unknowable is necessary to morality is in itself inimical to morality.

Judge Arnold Krekel, of the United States court of Missouri, spoke of the necessity of education as a preventativ of crime, as prisons were but hotbeds and nurseries of crime. H. H. Hall then sang "Let To-morrow Take Care of To-morrow."

"Natural Principle—The Supernatural Faiths; Which?" was the subject of the address of Professor Pope, of Ohio. The professor said:

It is said that "the mills of God grind slow," consequently only after ages of free and positiv thought comes the reign of positiv speech and action. It seems as though the curtain was about to drop on the first act of the tragedy of life; the second we inaugurate to-day. I dedicate the thoughts and sentiments I am about to enunciate to the world; because my Liberalism is bounded only by the whole world; all things and beings in which there is life. Is it not written that when the creator, God of the Bible, that huge stumbling-block in the universal highway of Freethought, had completed his six days' work, and after his review of the same, he pronounced all things very good? And who would not? Had a part of these works been the product of a competitor, it is somewhat questionable if the same verdict would hav been rendered even by a God. Notwithstanding, ye Samson annihilator's of the gods in the ranks of Liberalism and everywhere, spare, oh spare this one, for as an example of liberality based in selfishness of liberality and illiberality commingled, where can you find his superior? Seriously do we as Liberalists practically accept all things, all men with their various idosyncrasies, because the mind makes the man and the brain reports the mental status of each human and animal. Is this our absolutism of ethics, politics, and Liberalism? As the sands in my hour glass are numbered with the earth I grow more and more Liberal, seeing that causation rules supreme, being only a part of the infinit whole. I must accept all things as very good. Human policy, the secret spring of all human action, the antagonizer of principle, givs evidence of a sickly virtue to-day. Theological faith leads you away from the natural light. Bring it to the light and what is it? But there is a subject behind this that pays large dividends, larger than human policy. Of what value to suffering humanity is this devoid of moral principle —Christianity is supernatural or it is not almighty to save. Christ so far has proved a curse rather than a blessing, because of the darkness behind the sacerdotal robes. No atonement is necessary, for God through his prophets said: "I, God, create the evil." Why demand an atonement for his own blunders? Denying, as a philosopher, that Christ and Christianity are supernatural, I ask what is Christ and what is Christianity? The unseen is the superior. In searching after internal characters, we find that there is both protection and profit. Jesus only announced the natural law when he said: "I and my father are one." Everything in nature has its character. Jesus had his, and has been held up as a self-sacrificing individual—going about doing good, without regard to character. Jesus is the man; Christ is the angel of light within. I hav nothing to say for Jesus, but I would say a word or two for Christ. That which draws me to the man of sorrows is Jesus weeping over Jerusalem. The simple natural story of the gospels is not of Jesus. It is the manifestation of a higher good in the flesh not only through the medium of Jesus, but of a hundred others also. The worship of the outward through the creeds exist as the antipodes of Christ. Christianity is described as simply goodness and love. If God is goodness, goodness is God; if God is love, love is God. But these are natural qualities of the human being. This is not the character of the theological god or the god of Moses, but of him who expired on the cross. May we expect to exchange the present personal for the past impersonal God? We are educated to worship a personal god. I do insist as the practical worship of principle must be the worship of gods personal and many. The golden rule, the highest principle of nature, comes to us teaching good, not from Jesus, but because constitutional in nature, a crystal from the pure waters of life. What ministers hav explained the supernatural? We must go to science to do it. The religious teacher knows that conversion is only the control of the higher faculties over the lower. Given the conditions, and any individual may be compelled to renounce his higher and return to his lower nature. Friends, Liberalists, may we not hope that there shall come to us master-builders erecting the new temple of truth?

A song entitled "Life" was then sung by Mr. Hall.

J. H. Burnham, of Michigan, spoke on "The Law of Valuation," introducing his remarks by referring to the constant changes of values of articles of traffic or exchange:

So long as fictitious values are attached to these articles, so long is there danger of financial panic. These facts illustrate the points on which I wish to speak. That force which controlls 300,000,000 people is a matter of interest. He who occupies the pontifical chair of Rome is a phenomenon that demands some explanation. It is desirable to get at the law of valuation that moves so many people. This excites the discussion of the value of the Christian. Everybody speaks of three terms: fact, law, and principle. Facts are objects of thought possessing qualitativ and quantitativ value. Is it possible to hav a fact without these principles attached to it? This is putting things on a basis of human relation and narrowing down the broad field of speculation, only considering objects about which we can think. Without quantity and quality, I cannot conceive of a basis thought. Yet, by doing this, you are throwing down a vast amount of imagery, occasioned by attempting to arrive at something that lies beyond quality and quantity. Facts are related, and it is law that connects them and makes them what they are. Taking the facts and the law, we are on firm ground. In the third place is the astounding word principle. I cannot understand what people mean when they speak of the principle of things. The very moment when you use quality and quantity with law this explains all things clearly, and their condition, the principle, is that which makes things what they are. Now, fact, law and principle, lying back of the fact, undiscovered, you may reasonably call the subject into question. Christian facts are depending upon an infinit spirit without body and without parts for its principle behind the facts and the law. Take this away and you hav nothing unless we can vouch for the unvouchable and swear that the uneternal is eternal. Nothing can be presented to consciousness if quantity and quality be wanting. If such a being does exist back of the Christian religion it is impossible for humanity, on account of its limitations, to find him out. But conceiving all this to be so this would not explain the scheme of the Christian religion followed through 1800 years. In dealing with the various articles of commerce the intrinsic value is ascertained, and then you are dealing with certainties. In the light of the scheme of the Christian religion has it ever been placed upon its intrinsic merits. Can you conceive of such a scheme placed on its real value becoming popular. The interest of poor people was at first appealed to. From a mansion in the skies, promised the poor people of Palestine, a change was made to something wholly outside of this. Divine interventions are only the methods of fraud. The scheme being without merits an effort to create merits outside of and above it is created. Christianity is the emptiness of a shadow with nothing real in it. Ministers do not now talk of the doctrins of the church. The only line of argument for a Christian today is the assumed basis of civilization. The Christian scheme is divine, but in placing it before humanity its advocates take all of divinity out of it. The popular pulpits are only those where you find the Infidel behind it. We do not hope to win except on the ground that we are human and that our fathers and children are human and we are confident of bringing out a higher standard, a higher code, than anything divine this will be formed from the experience of the past. The world is growing better every day, and that is what we are getting at. We are all human, and the code will be found in the eternal principles of human justice.

Mr. Burnham was frequently interrupted with applause.

The morning session closed with the singing of John Hay's "Little Breeches."

The afternoon session was opened at 2 o'clock by the singing of the quartet, consisting of Messrs. Fried and Brace and Mrs. Dickinson and Mrs. Hollister. President Brown delivered an extempore address on "Analysis." Taking man; he is composed of oxygen, hydrogen, carbon, nitrogen, lime, sulphur, chlorine, etc., principally made up of gases and ghosts, so that man is principally made up of ghosts. If the light and heat of the sun were removed, man would decompose. Correct habits hav more to do with health than the best prayer of any Christian. We are working that our children may not liv on stimulants and then say God hav mercy on our sins. God is said to be a spirit—breath—you breathe in a breath, a spirit, a gas, a ghost, and if you apply the word holy to ghost, you breathe in the holy ghost. Is there anything about oxygen to call it holy or about carbon to call it devil? Shall we neglect these things of which we are composed and say God help us? Of all our work the greatest is that which prevents crime and disease. That's our work as Freethinkers. There is nothing in the universe that cannot be brought down to the two terms, form and motion.

Mr. C. B. Reynolds, of Rochester, whose contributions to THE TRUTH SEEKER hav attracted no little attention, followed with a memorial address on the late D. M. Bennett. We print the address nearly in full:

MR. PRESIDENT, LADIES, AND GENTLEMEN: This grand assembly of intelligent men and women givs cheering evidence that must inspire the most timid of faint hearts with the conviction that the cause of universal mental liberty is marching on to glorious victory.

We are assembled to do honor, not to some creature of accident called general, whose soldiers' courage gained grand victories of which he claimed all the honor and glory; not to some cunning political trickster, some glib stump speaker, whose scheming gained him political prominence, and his party rewarded with positions of honor and emolument; not to some clerical mountebank who, while denouncing actors, resorts to all the antics of a clown and the ranting exaggerations of circus side-showman, in endeavors to draw the crowd to witness his Sunday buffoonery. But this occasion is solemnly devoted to doing honor to the memory of a simple, unassuming citizen, a pure, loving, gentle, noble heart, a brave and thoughtful mind; one who dared not alone to think for himself, but had the courage to publish his convictions; one whose life was self-sacrificingly devoted to the promotion of the best happiness of his fellow-creatures. We are assembled to express our veneration of the memory of that honest man and model truth seeker, D. M. Bennett; and in the name of liberty, justice, and truth, to protest against and denounce the unscrupulous usurpation of power and malicious and vindictiv persecution on the part of the church, of which he was the victim. And let us be mindful that but for such brave, fearless souls, our meeting of to-day had been impossible.

Macaulay says: "The authors of great reforms are always unpopular in their own age, and pass life amidst abuse, calumny, misrepresentation, persecution, and danger. It is therefore for the interest of the human race that the memory of such men should be held in reverence. To go on the forlorn hope for the truth is a service of peril. It is easy enough after the ramparts are carried to find men to plant the flag on the highest tower. The difficulty is to find men ready to go first into the breach."

That peerless and illustrious champion of liberty and Freethought, Thomas Paine, for the expression of his convictions of truth, through that grand and most efficient eye-opener and thought-awakener, "The Age of Reason," had let loose upon him all the fury, malice, hate, and slander of the church. His great services in behalf of liberty and the republic were forgotten, and to-day the very name of Thomas Paine will send into spasms of terror the learned doctors of divinity, and all the other narrow, little-minded "old women" of both sexes in the church, alike in Europe and America.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, with the inspiring eloquence born of a grand and noble soul devoted to the cause of universal mental liberty, has stirred the hearts and awoke to thought the masses of intelligent people. He has shattered the iron chains that bound honest souls in a purgatory of fear; plucking them as brands from the burning fires of hell, and restoring them to hope, to self-reliance, and to love of reason, truth, and justice. Panoplied in the invulnerable armor of his pure and nobly useful life, the hissing venom of hate and the fiery darts of malice assail him in vain. The church has utterly failed to answer any of his arguments, but they do not fail in impotent rage to rail upon and denounce him.

And so with our model truth seeker, D. M. Bennett. He was by the machinations of Christians cast into a dungeon, because in his search for truth he dared to question one of their trinity of gods—asking plain, simple questions that neither gods, priests, nor ministers could answer.

By his sufferings the pathway of other truth seekers is made easier and less dangerous. With a courage, persistency, and patience equaled only by the heroic sages and Infidels of old, he has excavated a broad road through the flinty rocks of superstition, and by the fire of his indomitable courage and the power of his pen has frightened away the giants and hobgoblins that lurked in the dark and treacherous passes; so that to-day we can pass through in peace and safety.

All hail the trinity of freethought—Paine, Bennett, Ingersoll—a trinity not of imaginary gods, but true and noble men. A trinity of able exponents of Freethought, torch-bearers of the light transmitted from the Infidels of the past. But for this true and glorious trinity of men, to hav assembled to denounce the wrong-doing of the church, to honor the memory of one of her victims, to hold a convention in behalf of universal mental liberty, would hav insured us the loving ministrations of old Mother Church, who would hav consigned each one of us to the tender embrace of the dungeon, the torture, the gibbet, or the stake.

All honor to the noble and heroic trinity of Freethought! Thanks to them, we dare assemble for the openly avowed purpose of doing honor to an Infidel.

Many faint hearts are afraid and ashamed to be classed among Infidels, but this is because of lack of knowledge of what Infidelity really is and the great service it has rendered to the cause of human liberty and the promotion of human happiness.

When acquainted with the principles of Infidels; when these poor, timid, faint hearts learn of the lives and the pure teachings of the grand array of noble souls, whose names must be ever dear to every honest lover of science, liberty, and humanity, just pride will take the place of coward shame.

Infidel is a term of contemptuous reproach applied to all who venture to step aside from the popular current of belief and dare to think for themselvs.

Who are Infidels? Honest truth seekers who fairly and dispassionately weigh the evidence, reject the error and evil, and gladly accept and cherish all that is true and good.

Freethinkers believe in the equality of men—and the equality of women with men. Their religion consists in doing justly, loving mercy, and earnestly endeavoring to promote the happiness of their fellow-creatures. Their only creed: "Put yourself in his place," "Do as you would others should do to you"—a golden rule taught by Christna, Confucius, Pittacus, Socrates, and Sextus centuries before the birth of Christ.

They believe Infidelity is liberty, all religion is slavery, and long for a revival of reason, truth, and common sense.

All that is good or of love—in the Bible or any other book—Infidels heartily indorse and accept, and all that is of evil or hate they denounce and reject.

The devotees of every system of religion the world has ever known hav looked upon all others as Infidels who do not embrace the faith they embrace, and worship their god, after the same fashion as themselvs.

Brahmans regard all as Infidels who do not embrace their creed.

Chinese think all Infidels who do not worship their god.

Mohammedans pronounce Infidels all who do not bow toward Mecca and say, "There is but one god and Mohammed is his prophet." Jews regard Christians as Infidels. Christians regard Jews as Infidels.

Roman Catholics despise Protestants as heretics, and pronounce all Infidels who dare to differ with holy Mother Church, or refuse to acknowledge the infallibility of the pope and the immaculate conception.

Protestants rail at and accuse of being benighted Infidels all who do not denounce the pope, believe in the resurrection of the dead, and that one and two make one.

Each and every denomination are quite sure they alone are God's own especial chosen people, who alone hav all the truth, and they lament, and tell their god in their prayer all about the perverse blindness, wicked errors, and wilful ignoring of the plainest Bible teaching by all other Christians.

Infidelity is simply a struggle for liberty; in the language of the greatest of Iconoclasts, "Infidelity is liberty, all religion is slavery."

In every period of the world's history, there hav been a few brave souls who hav dared to speak out their honest convictions; and for the destruction of all such, the church has always used all the power she possessed. She has planted the seeds of discord everywhere; and the sacred fires of family and kinship hav given way before the floodtide of superstition. Fire and sword hav consumed millions of innocent people whose only crime was honestly expressing their thought.

D. M. Bennett refused to believe that which was contrary to reason, truth, and common sense. He could not accept as true or of divine inspiration all he read in the Bible; and for daring to express his opinions he was persecuted by the church, cast into prison, and is still defamed and vilified even in his grave,

(Continued on page 572.)

Communications.

Off-Hand Talk.

There are before me several copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER of recent issue, for which in part I am indebted to your courtesy and generosity. Well, I thank you for your good will, but being like most people, selfish, why, I am best pleased with that which does me most good, viz., the light you send.

Now please giv me credit for being frank with you, and I know you will when I tell you I was once a—was once orthodox, and the above-named virtue is of recent possession, which, by the way, I find a rare jewel indeed, far above price. And I know that had I possessed and used it in all things years ago I should not so long hav groped my way in darkness.

Is it not strange, Mr. Editor, that one can become accustomed to almost anything—can be taught to like, or at least tolerate, the most glaring frauds and monstrosities? Byron's prisoner of Chilon, who learned to love the very chains and shackles which enslaved him, was not a myth, a fabrication, but a character true to life. For there hav been, and there are, thousands of men and women who hug and pet the clanging chains of superstition which so surely and so securely bind them. Yes, bind them in a dungeon where light and liberty are never allowed to enter.

Now, my former associate orthodox friends would curl a lip at this kind of talk, and I will tell you why. We were from our childhood taught that religion is light, is love, is truth, is a foretaste of the pleasure, peace, and happiness to be forever enjoyed in the "sweet subsequently" (as a friend in the "Rockies" puts it). But experience and investigation show me that these claims are without foundation, every one of them.

The civilization of the world is indebted, not to Christianity, to religious men and their teachings, but to science, to philosophers and scientific men, and their writings and teachings. To say that the clergy hav been these scientific men would be too huge a joke for us to stand all at once. So religion must haul in her banner so far as the claim of light is concerned.

Is it love? No. It is a kind of a "fellowship one with another" of the same kind or class.

"I've been there myself," and I know about how much truth there is in the assertion that religion is love. I'll tell you what it is; it's the most selfish, egotistical thing imaginable. And, if you please, it is also a jealous, green-eyed monster.

I am on the stand now, and I make oath that my observations and experiences in the church, during a connection with it of six years, fully bear me out in the above assertions. There is no class of persons so quarrelsome as Christians. At least, such has been the case in neighborhoods where I've lived.

And they can hate—oh, my! They must get this quality "from on high" instead of the other (love). But, they tell us, "man is very sinful, prone to err," etc., and that the bad will crop out occasionally. Well, my Christian friends, I must say that in the aggregate these croppings are simply enormous, and one is always "in luck" if he happens to "strike you" right.

But, in the next place, religion is not a fact. It is not a thing of reality. It is a fraud and a humbug. That on which it is founded—its backing—its fountain head, "givs it dead away."

I reach the above conclusion thus: Casting aside the veil of reverence, which from childhood has been before my eyes, obscuring the truth and light, and using just a grain or two of common sense in connection with a little "good book" reading and those six years experience.

I'm still under oath, Mr. Editor; I call attention to this fact, not for your satisfaction, but for the good of some who may read these lines.

The "good book" tells me that its author—the Christian's God—has existed from all eternity; that he is the very essence of truth, mercy, love, goodness, etc.; that he is ever the same (don't ever get old and blind and lame), and that he oversees and superintends all the affairs of this world, and particularly the Christian's affairs. Formerly he aided and abetted the Christian in nearly all his enterprises, "gave him much slack line." But he has "gone back" on that a little late years, and so we hear even the Christian use expressions like the following: "Legitimate enterprises." Yes, there is a limit to what the Christian may do now. But what I wish to call especial attention to is the superintending business above referred to—"interposition of divine providence"—"prayer-answering God," etc. Said "good book" tells the Christian that he is not only watched over, both day and night, by this god, but even all the hairs of his head are numbered (think of an inventory of all the so-called Christian hairs, from Adam to the present! What a nice little volume it must be!); that this great being knows all our trouble, our sorrows and our wants, and that he is graciously waiting to help us in each and every thing wherein we need help, if we will but look to him for assistance. "Ask what ye will in my name," "Seek and ye shall find," "Knock, and it shall be opened unto you," etc.

Now, the Christian, like his sinful brother-man, is not above want, and never has been, and for thousands of years he has gone to this god for supplies.

In the years long agone (if we are to believe this good book) the Christian usually got what he asked for. And from all accounts, we should judge he usually lumped off his petition thus: "O Lord, giv all other people into my sacred hands, together with their possessions and household effects. I wish to plant the men and amuse myself for a time beating brains out of little children; after which I'll see what I can do toward fitting up quarters for the women; see how many I can lodge under one roof, and the more the greater glory will I giv unto thee."

Now, I know the Christian of to-day offers no such petition; but his wants are numerous, and his prayers are without number. He is continually asking—asking for this, that, and the other thing, and he says he gets what he asks for, when he asks in faith, just as did his ancestors. (How glad I am that his wants are different from those of "ye olden" time cranks!) But I beg pardon. It's all a lie from beginning to end. I used to believe all that rubbish, and I was as sincere as it is possible for a man to be. I can produce by the score men of unquestionable veracity who saw me taken into the church, watched over me during my connection with it, who will tell you they never in the least doubted my sincerity or piety. And I used to pray, too. My father was poor, and I had to work hard every day; but that mattered not; when prayer-meeting evening came round I went to church, through snow, rain, and mud (we lived in the country two and a half miles from church); nothing in that line kept me at home. On several occasions I well remember I was the only one out, and held meeting alone. Yes, while the storm dashed on the roof and against the window-panes, there, all alone, I besought this God for such things as I felt I most needed. And I hav often buried myself in the deep woods to say my devotions; and what did it all amount to? I'm still on the stand, Mr. Editor, and I here make oath that I never got anything I asked for, so far as I know, and my trouble was all for naught. Furthermore, I never knew of any other petitioner meeting with any better success, and I've been intimately associated with as good Christians as there are in the land. To say that God answers prayer in this enlightened age, surely requires all that commodity usually denominated "cheek" possessed by a full-fledged crank.

Why say a thing is so and so when all experience and reason say it is not so? Why all this ado and fuss about invisibles—invisible God, his invisible answers to prayer, etc.? We're no longer a whole drove of idiots and fools! Giv us something tangible—something within the bounds of reason and sense, my Christian friend, if you expect us to gulp it down and ask no annoying questions about it.

McDonough, Del., Aug. 20, 1883. B. S. E.

The Cowardice and Intolerance of Professing Christians.

It will be conceded by all worthy to be called men and women, that moral cowardice is mean. Further, that all who skulk from criticism and refuse to reason with those opposing their opinions are cowards. The clerk who sneaks his books from those having a right to examin them, or in any manner baffles investigation, betrays a combination of cowardice and dishonesty. He shuns the light from his conciousness of evil deeds.

This true principle has an extensiv application. Persons holding to unreasonable opinions—to unjust principles and absurd dogmas—will seldom consent to reason concerning them. If they should, they are strongly tempted to conduct the process unfairly, or refuse to acknowledge when fairly beaten and receive the truth. Failing to start out with a radical desire to know the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, they fail to accept the true means of obtaining it. He who begins aright is half done, while he who begins wrong is never well done but by rubbing out and beginning anew. This truth should be well considered by all of us, and especially by professing Christians. Instead of rejecting or shunning criticism, they should invite it; not only is it their duty to be tolerant, but to solicit the reason of such as maintain opinions at variance with theirs. To prove, however, that this is just what they will not do, one or two of many instances may be cited.

Some years since I repaired to a Quaker meeting held in Cincinnati. As these peculiar people do mean morality and kindness by their religion, one of like principles may conscientiously spend a quiet hour once a week in their worship. On that occasion a stranger spoke in favor of reforming a few, at least, of our fashionable wrongs. As the meeting broke I gave him my hand and invited him to dine with me. I learned that, after the manner of Bunyan's Pilgrim, he had left his home to try and make the churches and the world better, and at the same time earnestly seek for eternal life. Renting him a little room wherein to eat his bread and rest of nights, he would work faithfully through each day to induce his fellows to cease doing wrong and learn to do right. A month previous to this he was passing in front of a large Methodist church in which a congregation was assembled, listening to and more than a few joining in what they call altar services. Being a member and a preacher of that body, Mr. Snyder—the name of my new friend—went in, proceeded to the altar, and knelt in prayer. Repeating it to me, I can giv it nearly verbatim:

"O Lord, thou knowest that these mourners are oppressed with a sense of their sins and hav come hither to get their load off and to see how to be saved. Some hav probably been swearing, cheating, gambling, and breaking thy holy Sabbaths; others hav been striving for filthy lucre, living in vain style, lording it over their fellows, oppressing the poor, dressing in the most silly and unhealthful styles, gormandizing on the most unhealthful food, chewing and smoking poisonous tobacco, and dosing with the filthiest drugs—regular and patent; drinking the most abominable liquors, and thus on the broad road to ruin. Then, O Lord, thou knowest that these ministers, stewarts, and leaders, here to instruct them, do many of the vile things disgracing these sinners. They gormandize, swill down strong teas and coffees, chew and smoke the filthy weed, drink their adulterated wines, ale, and beer." By this time the cry of "Take him out!" drowned Snyder's voice, and two stout men siezed him, and bearing him to the door, gave him into the hands of a burly policeman, who cast him into prison, and the next morning, for disturbing a religious congregation, he was doomed to thirty days' hard labor, to pay a fine of so many dollars. If it be said that Snyder was wrong in that he intruded upon a religious service, it may be replied that being a Methodist he surely had the right to pray, and they the right, not to put him out vi et armis, but to answer his prayer by an appeal to facts and reason, or by a counter prayer.

Besides there is at hand another yet stronger instance of intolerance enacted in the same denomination and occurring near where I now write.

Twenty years ago, a Liberal man and his wife were visited by a minister and leading member and persuaded to attend their meeting in progress and take part. The sermon was preached from the text, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." Then followed exhortations and solicitations for persons to speak. At last the lady, thus urged to attend and take part, rose and said she believed there was a spark of light in every one's heart which if cherished and cultured would grow in virtue and wisdom. At once the preacher called her to order for saying aught at variance with his sermon and the church's creed. Remarking that she thought she was in a land of freedom and a community willing to hear, at least one invited and urged to speak, she sat down. Her husband then rose and at once the minister commanded them to sing him down. That not succeeding, two or three strong men siezed him and then her, and dragged them out, tearing off her shawl costing thirty-five dollars. The man thus abused had donated some two hundred dollars to build the church and sheds for the attendants' horses.

Failing to love knowledge we liv in ignorance, failing to love truth we liv in error. This leads to an unhappy life, and, should the religious dogmas be true, to an unhappy death and miserable eternity.

How much better to liv for knowledge, to be truthful, to court investigation, honest and brave, at all times. This will soon displace discord and strife, putting instead harmony, union, and all the enjoyments of life. W. PERKINS.

A Day at the Flint, Mich., Spiritualist and Liberal Camp-meeting.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: We looked in upon, and partook of the good spirit of the Flint camp-meeting one day, Tuesday, Aug. 21st, and as S. B. McCracken, secretary of the association, remarked, it "seemed good for one to be there." The atmosphere was generally harmonious and pleasant. But, after all, the Spiritualists of Michigan seem to be wedded to their idols, and almost oblivious to the great fight that must be fought against the legion of orthodox theology—and won—to save even them the continued right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of their happy reveries with the spirit world; for, as Mr. Burnham, the Liberal lion of the Saginaw Valley, in his grand speech on that day, which we had the great satisfaction of hearing him utter, truthfully remarked, the monster of religious bigotry is to-day more thoroughly and better organized than were the armies of Napoleon. And the fight must come—yea, it is now upon us, and there must be no surrender if it takes, as he said, a hundred years to completely subdue the monster; it must and shall be done! that the spirit of the Declaration of Independence our fathers penned and left for us to work out is to be saved, and manhood and true humanitarianism secured. The serpent of theology is as yet only scotched, and is still fearfully powerful and lively in most sections of his great slimy body. Oh, that all would work as do Mr. McCracken, Mr. Burnham, and the gifted Prof. Peck, and Mrs. Lake, his wife. The professor is a host in himself, both in song and speech, and never fails to get his work in with grand effect. While the Spiritualists of this state are star-gazing and in a great sense indifferent to the anxious work and desire of the true Liberals for organization and union of the factions to meet the armies of oppression, the sordid legislators pass, to their particular detriment, laws like that alluded to in the following:

"The law enacted by the legislature and approved June 6, 1883, makes it unlawful for any person to practice medicin or surgery, or any branch of the same (except dentistry), in Michigan without compliance with certain requirements. Those who hav practiced in the state five years, and are actually practicing when the law takes effect (three months after approval), and any graduate of any legally authorized medical college in this or other country shall be authorized to practice after compliance with certain requirements of registration. These requirements demand the filing of a sworn statement with the county clerk (on or before September 6, 1883), setting forth the length of time the applicant has been in practice, the name and location of the medical college (if any) whence he graduated, the length of time he studied, and the school of medicin to which he belongs.

"The act does not prohibit any student or undergraduate from practicing with and under the instruction of any person legally qualified to practice medicin or surgery according to the provisions of the act; but such student must file a statement with the county clerk as in the case of a regular practitioner. The student's statement must include the length of time he has studied, with whom and where, whether the study has been done with some physician or at a medical college, and also the name and residence of the physician under whom he is practicing or intends to practice. These statements are all to be recorded by the county clerk in a book to be provided for that purpose, and he is to receive fifty cents for recording each statement.

"It is made the duty of the supervisor, at the time of making the annual assessment in each year, to prepare a list of all physicians and students within his jurisdiction, together with all the particulars indicated, and return it to the township, village, or city clerk, and by him recorded in the book in which are kept the records of the local board of health. No physician or surgeon (except dentist), or midwife, who fails to comply with the provisions of the law can collect in court for services rendered after the law goes into effect.

"Whoever advertises or holds himself out as authorized to practice medicin or surgery after the law has taken effect, without having first complied with its provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to a fine of not less than $5 or more than $50 for each offense."

So. Rockwood, Mich. T. S. ANDREWS.

Progress in China.

From the Scotsman.

Like snakes in Ireland, progress in China is generally supposed to be non-existent, immobility in the Celestial being considered equally ineradicable with the leopard's spots and the Ethiopian's skin. This, however, is not the opinion of those best acquainted with the past history and present doings of the Chinese. Their rate of progress is not ours, they move more slowly; but then the vastness of the body to be moved must be taken into account. China is nearly as large as Europe, and contains a much larger population, every third man in the world being, it is calculated, a Chinaman. Their progress in the past has been most marked; thus the Chinese appear to hav been among the earliest, if not the very earliest, of the human race to emerge from barbarism. They hav a literature older than the days of Moses, and astronomical observations that go back at least to the days of Abraham. Comparing their early progress with that of European nations, they were clothed in silk robes when our savage ancestors still painted their naked bodies. They invented printing, and had printed books about the middle of the tenth century, 500 years before the time of Caxton. Gunpowder and the mariner's compass were Chinese inventions long before they were known to Europeans. Lieut. H. N. Shore pointed out in a recent paper read before the Society of Arts, that in the matter of canals, the utilization of carrier pigeons, the artificial culture of oysters, fish, and poultry, and in the satisfactory solution of the great sewage question, the Chinese hav been before us in time, and, in some of these at least, are still ahead of us in results. Their progress in the past cannot be gainsaid; it may, however, be contended that they hav now reached the limit of their capacity, and that no further progress need be anticipated. This, to say the least of it, is exceedingly unlikely in a people acknowledged by anthropologists to be the biggest brained race in the world, while facts are against it, for signs of progress are not wanting among the Celestials of the present day.

The most striking and significant of these is their progress over the globe. Until comparativly recent times, China was a world within a world. It was as nearly as possible self-contained, its Buddhistic religion being the only thing it is known to hav borrowed from abroad. The Chinese knew almost as little about, and cared about as little to visit, the outer world as they would had it been a different planet. This is totally changed now. From the chief ports along the Chinese coasts a constant stream of emigration flows, and has flowed for many years, with the result that, next to ourselvs, they are now the greatest colonists in the world. The climate of further India, Siam, Malaya, and the vast chain of islands, great and small, extending from Sumatra to Australia, suits the Chinaman admirably, and these are being gradually peopled by this oblique-eyed Mongolian race. Rangoon, in British Burmah, contains 10,000 of them; Singapore, the great commercial capital of Malaya, has 80,000 out of a total population of 95,000. Java has 160,000; while the Straits Settlements, according to a recent traveler, "are now virtually Chinese colonies under the British flag." They are not merely numerous in the Malay Archipelago, they are also influential, the commerce of those regions being almost entirely in their hands. In Australia they hav obtained a footing, and can make fortunes at the gold diggings by working over again the refuse heaps of the European digger. That they are no mean competitors in the industrial race is seen in the restrictions put on their entrance into the Australian colonies. They hav made their way to all the chief groups of islands in the Pacific Ocean, and hav now become an influential element in the population of the Sandwich Islands, where they are fast superseding the indolent nativs. They hav crossed to the New World, and are gradually spreading eastward from California and the Pacific slope. Here they hav shown themselvs able, and, to judge from the persecution they hav been subjected to, more than able to hold their own against the Americans in the labor market. The United States owes to them the construction of the Californian section of the great Pacific railway; and if M. deLesseps should ever succeed in cutting his canal through Central America, it will most probably be by the aid of Chinese muscle. Chinamen are now also found in the West Indies and British Guiana; while it must not be forgotten that they are spreading westward from China into Thibet, Mongolia, and Asiatic Russia. Many of the Chinese return to their own land to spend the evening of their days, where, no doubt, the sight of their wealth forms a stimulant to further emigration, while their accounts of Western civilization, with its telegraphs, telephones, and locomotivs, must gradually prepare their countrymen for the introduction into China of those improvements in communication. It is as a great colonizing power that China has a very special interest for this country, the reason being, as was recently stated by Sir Rutherford Alcock, that, "taking their numbers and our own, it did not require to carry one's views very far into futurity to see that there would be eventually two races which would occupy the greater part of the world—one was the English-speaking race, which had already filled North America and stretched into the Australian continent and the surrounding islands, and would very soon count up to 200,000,000, and the other was the 400,000,000 of Chinese."

A Freethought Lecture in Buffalo.

From the Buffalo, N. Y., Express of August 27th.

A not numerous but highly intelligent assemblage of ladies and gentlemen at Kehr's Hall yesterday listened with interest to an hour's lecture upon "Religion and Morality and the Sunday Laws," by W. S. Bell, of Boston, Mass. Liberty and morality, he said, were fundamental questions not fully understood by the people at large. Very few could giv an intelligent definition of either. Ask what is a fanatic and the reply would be, "Why, a fanatic is a fanatic." Morality is morality. We are advised to conform to moral law; but there is no moral law to be formulated. It might be said there is no musical law, but music would still remain to please the soul and senses. We hav a moral nature upon which we must rest as individuals. Each man usually is a law unto himself. In all things which relate to morality he must be a free agent. It will not do to legislate in the matter of morality. Law will not make men moral. Arbitrary Sunday laws did not make men better. The Freethinker had as much right to his method of observing Sunday as the chapel-goers next door. The stern common sense of the people decrees that one day is as good as another. It used to be bad for a man if he did not belong to the church. Now the world is suspicious of a man who proclaims too loudly his claims to Christianity. So-called morals were public opinion, and public opinion was generally wrong. It has ruled and kept men down. It was against Jesus, Socrates, and Galileo. It was never the true standard. People did not dare to think and act for themselvs. Men followed their leaders, and, like sheep, leaped over imaginary barriers. Every man who had made his mark stood out alone in his individuality. The time was when woman was the mere property of man. The marriage fee was the purchase money. But women were beginning to kick at the injustice, and refuse to acknowledge the word "obey" in the marriage service. Those who did swallow the word ignored it in fact.

The speaker made a strong plea for the equal rights of women. He also denounced the tyranny of the caucus system. Both parties bought and sold; the loaves and fishes were the object of both. He urged independence in politics, which sentiment was applauded. Every man should possess himself and do his own thinking; and the disposition to do that was growing. It was better, perhaps, to be conscientiously wrong than right by formulated rules. Liberals were for the right for its own sake. They needed no incentiv to do right. No man needed to be rewarded for appreciating the true and the beautiful. Incentivs of reward for well-doing were the destruction of morality. Liberals were not destructivs, but constructors. They did not honor their fathers and mothers that their days might be long in the land, but for the love they found in their parents; if they were unlovely human nature revolted at honoring them.

The speaker referred to the awakening of the workingmen to their rights. They produced the luxuries and beauties of life of which they hav so little enjoyment. He prophesied the triumph of reason, justice, and right over superstition, prejudices, and creeds. Hell had been taken from the New Testament and hades substituted. It took away the idea of fire—or only enough for comfort. Hell had been taken out of the Testament by the people who would no longer endure it in their bibles. The church was being saved by the forethought of the people. They rejected the most fiendish idea that ever tortured the brain of man or racked the heart of woman or child. It was true, as Guizot said, that the church always ranged itself on the side of despotism. The speaker denounced the Comstock law and similar repressiv legislation. He deplored the evils of rum drinking, but urged that men could not be forced to be temperate by means of laws. There had been prohibitory laws in fifteen states, and in ten of them they had been repealed, and in most of the others they were practically dead letters. There should be equal rights for all. The speaker continued in this strain to the close. He is a pleasant speaker and a good many of his telling points were applauded.

Good Works Brought to Light.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER Sir: I see you solicit information in regard to contributions of Liberals for charitable purposes. I accordingly send the following, which I take from Vol. I. of "History of Woman Suffrage." In 1859 Charles Hovey, of Boston, at his death, left by will a large investment, the annual income of which, about $8,000, was to be expended for the promotion of various reforms, according to the judgment of the committee which he named in his will. The following is Article 22 of the will: "I particularly request that no prayers be solicited from any person; and that no priest be invited to perform any ceremony whatever over or after my body. The priesthood are an order of men, as I believe, falsely assuming to be reverend and divine, pretending to be called of God. The great body of them hav in all countries been on the side of power and oppression; the sooner they are unmasked the better for humanity. As I hav hitherto borne my testimony against slavery, intemperance, war, tariffs, and all indirect taxation, banks and monopolies, I desire to leave on record my abhorrence of them all." EVA A. H. BARNES.

Clara, Pa.

Pennsylvania State Liberal Convention.

This convention will be held at Lafayette Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa., on Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 8th and 9th, E.M. 283 (A.D. 1883).

The object of the meeting is to effect an organization, not only of all the Leagues, but all the Liberals in the state of Pennsylvania.

Able speakers hav been engaged for the occasion, amongst them T. B. Wakemam, president, and T. C. Leland, secretary, of the National Liberal League; Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, of New York; Mrs. Dr. J. H. Severance, of Milwaukee, Wis,, and others.

The preliminary meeting will be held at the League rooms, Maltby Hall, 76 Fifth Avenue, at 10 A.M. Sept. 8th, and adjourn to Lafayette Hall, corner Wood street and Fourth avenue, in the evening.

Music, and all the accessories necessary to comfort and convenience will be provided. Liberals! "rally round the flag." G. W. BALDWIN, Pres.,
HARRY HOOVER, Sec.,
Provisional Committee.

Help the Needy.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKERS: I've made no report of funds received for Mrs. Tuttle since the death of our friend Daniel, simply because none hav been received worth while reporting. But cold weather will soon be here and I hope you will then remember the widow. The aged ones who are beyond work must be cared for by those who can do it. Mr. Tuttle left a book called "Truth" as a legacy to the world. I am asked to sell it for his widow's benefit. Of all publishers to whom I've sent a copy not one has yet reported in favor of the book. It is vituperativ, pessimistic, harsh, and rebellious to our government. But as a curious specimen of mingled truth and error, some of you may desire to read it. Price thirty cents, and the proceeds to go to the widow.

Hacker is receiving very little now. He writes that he needs pants, hat, and boots, and also money to pay store bills. To-day I send him three yards of our best dollar cassimere, and wish I could do more so as not to be compelled to ask your aid. It is unpleasant for me and for Eugene, and for Hacker himself, but can we hav the old couple starve? Funds sent me for Hacker and Tuttle will be promptly acknowledged and forwarded. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., Aug. 25, 283.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

Mrs. Mary W. Bennett, - - - Proprietor.

CONDUCTED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 8, 1883.

Brutal Journalism.

The London Times, published in New York, is among the journals which hav relegated fact to the limbo of their index expurgatorius, and which exclude all allusion to Freethinkers except when it is desirable to slander them. On Wednesday the aristocratic individuals who buy the Times got the ensuing for their money:

"It is predicted by certain Freethinkers that a new conflict between Freethought and Christianity is close at hand, the immediate cause of this conflict being the monument which it is proposed to erect in Greenwood to the memory of the late D. M. Bennett. Mr. Bennett during his life-time was the editor of an Infidel paper wherein the orthodox rules of grammar and spelling were treated with almost as much contempt as the editor expressed for the Christian religion. Mr. Bennett was also addicted to obscenity as well as Infidelity and served a term in prison for the offense of circulating obscene literature.

"If the surviving admirers of Mr. Bennett choose to erect an ordinary gravestone over his remains in Greenwood no one will make any objection. They intend, however, to make his proposed monument an enduring expression of his peculiar views by decorating it with sentences taken from his works. The managers of the cemetery could not reasonably object to a tombstone bearing the name of Mr. Bennett, the dates of his birth and death, and perhaps the date of his commitment o jail; but they will certainly object to a tombstone bearing such sentences as, 'There ain't no God;' 'My works ain't no more obscene than Moses's,' or 'D—n Anthony Comstock.' Mr. Bennett's admirers are already denouncing the bigotry of Christians who may find fault with such tombstone inscriptions, and avow their determination to test in the courts the right of any man to put blasphemy and bad grammar on a tombstone.

"We may admit, for the sake of argument, the inalienable right of Mr. Bennett's friends to record on Mr. Bennett's tombstone his peculiar views, but even then it does not follow that such a course would be either wise or kind. The presumed object of a monument is to do honor to the person in memory of whom it is erected. It should therefore be a monument which the ghost of the departed one could contemplate with pleasure. Now, either Mr. Bennett was right in the belief that he had no soul and was not immortal—in which case no monument could giv him any satisfaction—or else he is at present a greatly astonished ghost. In the latter case, would he take any comfort in knowing that extracts from his writings were displayed on a conspicuous tombstone? He must know in his ghostly condition that he made a terrible mistake in regarding himself as one of the beasts that perish, and he must bitterly regret the blasphemous and indecent rubbish that he wrote in his life-time. If he is at present in circumstances which prevent him from personally visiting Greenwood, more recent ghosts who may see the monument will describe it to him and tauntingly ask if he still believes that 'there ain't no God?' Beyond any doubt people in the other world speak and write grammatically—else it is a mistake to call our existence hereafter a higher existence. Youthful and ill-bred demons will derisivly shout at Mr. Bennett his frank but lawless sentences, and he will be cut by all the educated and decent people in purgatory.

"It would, of course, be delightful in the estimation of the professional Freethinkers to inscribe Infidel sentiments on a Greenwood tombstone, but if it is to be done there should be no pretense of honoring Mr. Bennett. If Mr. Bennett is still permitted to swear, he will certainly shock the ghosts about him when he learns of his admirers' intentions. Since the friends of Mr. Bennett can relieve their minds in a comparativly inoffensiv way by writing with a piece of charcoal on the back fences of their respectiv yards extracts from Bennett's works, why should they insist upon exasperating his ghost by giving to his folly the publicity of a tombstone?"

The foregoing is thought to hav been produced by the editorial writer on the Times who takes upon himself each day the responsibility of saying something funny. He is Alden, the humorist. In this case he has mistaken falsehood for wit. His statements, taken categorically, are at variance with fact. The first sentence contains the first misstatement, the next one the second, the following the third, and so on; but if the reader understands at the outset that each statement made is exactly the reverse of true, he will get a fair idea of the facts attempted to be set forth.

A counter-statement might be begun by saying that the prediction spoken of was not made by any Freethinker; it is the prophecy of some imaginativ scribbler who writes New York letters to country papers. No Christians hav as yet found fault with the selections (which hav not been made public) to be placed on the monument; consequently such Christians hav not been denounced; and the matter of contesting the right of inscription in the courts has not been contemplated. Mr. Bennett never expressed a belief that man is destitute of a soul, and he believed in immortality. These facts go to show that the Times had no knowledge of what it pretended to state. If the matter contained elsewhere in its issue of the 29th is equally unreliable as that we hav quoted, the four cents we applied to the purchase of it hav been squandered.

We bear the Times no especial ill-will. It is dry and stupid and dull and snobbish, and has nothing but its malignancy to make it occasionally lively—yet its orthography is in the main correct. It is stilted, stuffy, slushy, and slanderous—and yet grammatical inaccuracy cannot be charged against it. It has several suits for criminal libel now pending against it in this state—nevertheless its orthodoxy has not been questioned. It defends monopoly, corporate powers, and political thieves—yet the atrocity of unbelief in the teachings of the Christian superstition cannot be laid at its door.

Then what are the faults of the Times when we consider its virtues? What is slander as a failing when compared with Infidelity as a crime? Lying may become a beatitude when grammatically accomplished, and libel is justifiable, if not commendable, when the printed untruth contains no error in spelling.

The Times has slandered the dead and belied the living; has made its contribution of calumny and ridicule toward the monument to one of the bravest and best of men; that does not alter the fact that if it hav the merit of conservatism to rely upon, it has no spot. Its lack of principle is fully atoned for by its typographical accuracy, and a close adherence to the grammatical vagaries of Richard Grant White will compensate the world for its want of interest.

We hav heretofore considered the Times well-meaning in its stupidity. It now appears that its sordidness is that of the brute.

Notes of the Convention.

Never before in the history of Freethought in this country has there been such a brilliant and commanding gathering as assembled at Rochester last week. We giv a good report of a portion of the proceedings. The length of the meeting and the multitude of speakers renders impossible the publishing of all in one issue.

The citizens and business men of Rochester responded freely to calls for contributions to the preliminary expenses of the convention, and when the members arrived they found the beautiful Academy of Music all prepared for them, decorated in the most artistic manner, and a quartet of singers engaged who would do credit to any opera. Their rendering of the song, "Cover Him Over with Beautiful Flowers," at the conclusion of Mr. Reynolds's eulogy of Mr. Bennett, was exceptionally fine and pathetic. The elegance and comfort and general arrangements—in short, the success of the convention—were due to that whole-souled Liberal of Liberals, Elias H. Gault, one of Rochester's best citizens. His geniality and urbanity, backed by shrewd business tact and extensiv acquaintance, enabled him to secure contributions that would hav been refused if solicited by any other. Some $350 was raised for hall, singers, etc., by him and his friends before the convention assembled. He was aided in his labors by that brave and respected Freethinker, Clement Austin, a veteran in the cause. To the artistic skill and taste of C. B. Reynolds was the convention indebted for the beautiful mottoes that adorned the walls of the hall, and the decorations and drapery. The floral display was due to the liberality of John Keller, Hiram Sibley, Nelson Powell, and the artistic labors of Mrs. Gault and Mrs. Austin. The splendid bouquet with which Mrs. Gault decorated The Truth Seeker book stand was much admired, and the kindness prompting the act gratefully appreciated by the editor. The magnificent piano from the manufactory of J. P. Perry arrived on the second day of the convention, and under the deft fingers of Mrs. W. F. Brace gave forth sweet sounds to aid the "Plymouth" singers. The preliminary labors of Mr. Green are well known to our readers, as The Truth Seeker was his best friend. The Executiv Committee of Rochester, and the Business Committee of the convention, are also entitled to great credit.

Mr. Green was made the recipient of a purse of nearly $150, and the speakers were all generously remunerated for their labors, the convention contributing on the last evening enough to cover the deficiency of the door money. Season tickets for one dollar were sold to regular attendants, and the nominal charges of ten cents during day sessions and twenty-five cents for the evening sessions were made. By this means, which was thought better than the church custom of collections, some five hundred dollars were raised. The three hundred and fifty dollars given by the Rochester people was in addition. The audience also contributed about fifty dollars to defray the cost of a stenographic report of Mr. Wakeman's reply to Mr. Mitchell.

From first to last the speaking was splendid. Individuality of thought and utterance marked all. Power, force, eloquence, logic, learning—each and all had their representativs on a platform that welcomed them with impartiality. Mrs. Colby, Mrs. Krekel, and Mrs. Severance occupied one afternoon, and the opinion was freely expressed that we had in them the three smartest women speakers in America. They formed a trinity that had hosts of worshipers. Mrs. Colby represents eloquent power and iconoclastic force; Mrs. Krekel, logic and beauty of diction, and Mrs. Severance, though laboring under the disadvantage of following two such speakers, impressed every one with her ability as an exponent of radical thought. C. Fannie Allyn, another woman upon whose mind has broken the light of the newer day, is in no sense inferior to the best. We can scarcely hope to do justice to all. Almost every speech is worthy of reproduction; but, big as is The Truth Seeker, we can only print abstracts of most of them. Of Mr. Reynolds's eulogy and defense of our dead hero we feel particularly proud. He is one of Mr. Bennett's converts—a thoroughly reformed minister. Not many months ago he was a Second Advent preacher, with the shackles of that creed riveted firmly upon him. To-day he stands straight in the sunlight of freedom, and givs eloquent thanks to his benefactor. Mr. Remsburg's speech we shall also print in full, so unanimously was it demamded by the audience. It is crowded with facts, brimful of wit, and will make an unrivaled document to circulate. We shall print an edition of next week large enough to supply the demand.

The other speakers are most of them well known. The genial and hard working author of "Golden Throne" gave a most poetic address. Sometime we shall get it from him and print it. Chainey has lost none of his dramatic eloquence. His words stir men like a trumpet. Courtlandt Palmer's finished essay was well calculated to set the people thinking about substituting the religion of humanity for the religion of inhumanity now flourishing under the pseudonym of Christianity. No one can do more than justice to Mr. Charles Watts, however highly they speak of him. Every dogma of the church finds in him its destroyer. Overflowing with geniality and sunny mirth, when he speaks upon the infamous doctrins fostered by superstition he becomes a personification of iconoclastic force. His friends love him, his enemies fear him. J. H. Burnham, too, should hav a wider field of work than heretofore. He is a logician, a philosopher, a builder of the new and destroyer of the old, at one and the same time. Political as well as religious shams meet with no favor at his hands. The "tintinnabulations of the Bell" were also heard in sweet and pleasing sounds, and W. S. (the handle by which he is tolled, if we may be allowed so to express ourselvs) made a gracious doorkeeper in the house of the Freethinkers. Mr. Bell has just returned from a very successful lecture trip in the West, and will stop awhile at Boston. Perhaps T. L. Brown, the efficient president, ought to hav been mentioned earlier in these notes, for his speech came first. Mr. Brown pins his faith on the exact sciences, and what cannot make itself manifest to his five senses he regards as worth little thought. If he should ever wake up and find himself an angel he would be the most surprised man in the other world.

T. B. Wakeman's reply to the Rev. Thomas Mitchell deserves more than a passing note, but as it is to be published in pamphlet form, everyone can see it for himself. Mr. Mitchell is a shrewd debater, an able minister, and as good a defender as a falsehood can hav. His speech was an attack on evolution at all its vulnerable points, and he seemed to forget that though there might not be a word of truth in Darwinism, it could not hav the slightest effect upon our criticism of Christianity. Whether the hypothesis of evolution is true or not, Genesis is certainly false and the atonement fallacious. Mr. Wakeman's answer left him not a peg to hang upon, and was a most masterly exposition of the science of evolution.

One of the entertaining features of the meeting was the minstrelsy of H. H. Hall, who was ever ready to favor the audience with song and recitation. On Saturday evening Miss Jessie Bonesteel gave in an inimitable manner two or three recitations. She is a little miss of promis. Mr. Chainey and Miss Helen Wright also rendered selections from Shakspere in a manner that entertained the assemblage.

On Sunday morning the Nestor of Liberalism, Elizur Wright, addressed the Convention in his own forceful style. He is vigorous and activ, and many were the congratulations he received on his appearance among us.

Canada sent a good delegation to the meeting, among them the venerable Wm. Sisson, John Ray, Joseph Templeton, and George Meikle. Allen Pringle was expected, but was kept away by some unforeseen circumstance. Mr. Meikle made a neat speech. He is an able young man, thoroughly in earnest, and has done efficiant work in propagating the principles of Freethought. Edward W. Chamberlain did much good in a quiet way in interesting the local press and circulating papers. Among those from whom we had the pleasure of a handshake and a pleasant word were Wm. Edmundson, of Renova, Pa.; our valued contributor, John Peck; John Truesdell, author of "Bottom Facts," a book on Spiritualism; F. Larkin, author of "Ancient Man in America;" Dr. H. J. Purdy, of Seneca Falls, N. Y., who visited us on the sad occasion of Mr. Bennett's funeral, and was the second man to giv a contribution to the monument; Ralph Helm, of Syracuse; Robert Wade, of Troy, N. Y.; Hiram Wilbur, of Green Island, N. Y.; A. E. Ringer, of Rochester; F. N. Albright, of Hudson, Mich.; Mrs. E. S. Read, of Rochester; D. R. Christian, of Altoona, Pa.; G. H. Look, of Prattsburg, N. Y.; Jas. Seeba, of Titusville, Pa.; John Hammond, of Randolph; B. F. Kirshner, of Danville, N. Y.; Luman Peck, of Wiscoy, N. Y.; D. S. Woodworth, of Oak Grove, Wis., and a host of loyal friends of Mr. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER whose names we cannot now recall. One of the sights good for the eyes was the warm-hearted old veteran, Amy Post, and that true friend of liberty, Lucy N. Colman. The friendship of such women is an honor to our cause.

At first some of the outsiders of the town were disposed to closely examin every Freethinker they met to see if the horns were visible, but at the close of the meeting more were hunting for the embryonic wings they felt sure must be possessed by the several hundred people who spent a week together without an unkind word. The Catholic young man who sold the "Notes on Ingersoll" privately assured us that for good fellowship he never saw the convention's equal. He sold a quantity of books, but not a sufficient number to induce him to stay the entire week. We exchanged Mr. Bennett's "Answers to Christian Questions" and Paine's "Age of Reason" with him for one of his books, assuring him that if he read them both, he would know considerably more about Christianity than he appeared to; for in a little argument we held he denied that the church consigned all unbelievers to hell. Upon quoting to him the Anthanasian Creed, that "this is the Catholic faith, except which a man believes faithfully he cannot be saved," he denied the fact that that statement is to be found in the Athanasian Creed. As he was the business manager of the Catholic Union and Times, of Buffalo, which is activly engaged in sending people to hell, we gently insinuated that he was hardly well enough posted to answer Ingersoll, and unless the Rev. Mr. Lambert was better versed than he we could not blame Ingersoll much if he took no notice of the book. However, we arranged the exchange of books, and hav hopes for him.

The Rev. Mr. Mitchell, too, is a little shaky, we found. In conversation at the hotel he assured the Liberal people that "the doctrin of men suffering in hell was a fraud and all bosh!" which sentiment was heartily applauded by those who heard him. Asked what he thought of Joe Cook, he replied that that fellow "was not honest; he was a charlatan, and did everything from a dishonest motiv." It is unnecessary to say that this expression was likewise feelingly indorsed. Mr. Mitchell goes to Buffalo with Mr. Wakeman and will continue the discussion of evolution before the people of that place. Our hopes that he will see the error of his ways and reform are high. He is too able a man to stay in the church. He expressed himself as much pleased with his treatment at the convention. He expected a den of lions; and their claws did rend his opinions, but touched his person only with velvet.

An amusing scene was witnessed in front of the Academy Sunday night. An old lady, whom another revival or two will place in the insane asylum, was passing the door, around which were congregated some of the young men of the town, when one of them asked her what she thought of the Freethinkers. Turning she muttered, "They are antichrist; it says so in this book," and producing a Bible she began to read. She did not sustain her position very well; the irreverent young men laughed, and the crowd increased. The prospect was good for a street scene, when a policeman, evidently with not much grace of God in his heart, appeared and removed her. She lived close by and the last heard of her as she went upstairs was, "They are all antichrist."

The convention closed with one of Mr. Watts's masterly addresses on "Secularism: Its Aims and Objects," which was alike an arraignment of the church and a plain statement of what, according to secularism, should take its place. The attendance all through was large, and everybody went away looking hopefully to the next meeting. Hardly a speech was made that some one did not consider worth all the time and expense of attending the whole meeting. One instance illustrates the general feeling; after Remsburg's oration Elizur Wright grasped his hand and said, "If you ever get hard up draw on me for a hundred dollars." That was the sentiment generally prevalent. Good cheer, kind words of encouragement, and a feeling of brotherly love pervaded the whole assembly. It will be a year at least before such another grand convention is held.

Contaminated Cash.

There are some people too good for this world by a large majority. Everything in it to them is sinful. The white of their eyes is constantly visible, and before they can see the ground their vision must go upward at an angle and be reflected from the great white throne. Of this class is the Methodist minister at Bridgeville, this state. His church needed a bell to arouse the sleepy deacons on Sunday mornings, and warn unrepentent sinners to make their peace with the minister without delay. The young people of his society also thought a bell an important adjunct to a healthy worship, and held weekly sociables at which collections were taken up, and when they had obtained a sufficient amount to buy a bell they took it to the pastor. To their astonishment he refused to accept the offering, alleging that it was "unclean," as "dancing" had been permitted at the "sociables." He hinted that, at some of them, even kissing on the part of the young persons of opposit sexes had been indulged in. Consequently the money coming from the sociables was contaminated and could not be used to purchase a church bell. The steeple would fall if thus desecrated.

"The Bridgeville minister," says the paper from which we take this veracious account, "can hardly expect that the majority of Methodists will share his peculiar views. They certainly are not supported by scripture. When the Hebrews, on the eve of the exodus, accepted from the Egyptians [while the Egyptians were asleep] testimonials of the willingness of the Egyptians to be rid of them, neither Moses nor Aaron suggested that Egyptian money was contaminated by pagan practices. So, too, when Elijah was fed by ravens, he did not refuse to eat on the ground that the ravens had brought him stolen meat, although, in view of the notoriously depraved character of ravens, there can be little doubt that Elijah's feathered friends fed him on meat for which they had omitted to pay. The Methodist denomination, like most other sects, has never inquired too closely into the character of the money given to it. The late Daniel Drew's money built a Methodist theological seminary, but no Methodist asked how Mr. Drew obtained his money. Yet, if money voluntarily contributed at a 'sociable' can be contaminated by dancing, the money unwillingly contributed to Mr. Drew by men in Wall street, who afterward danced with rage in the seclusion of their back offices, must hav been singularly sinful. Of course the Bridgeville minister has made up his mind to accept no more salary. He cannot trace the history of every dollar offered to him from its origin in the mint or the treasury printing-office to its appearance in the pocket of one of his parishioners. He will be liable, if he accepts a salary, to receive money that has been terribly contaminated, and as a conscientious man he must feel that money which is unfit to be used to furnish a meeting-house with a bell is still more clearly unfit to furnish it with a preacher. The only thing for this too conscientious man to do is to retire to the wilderness, and trust that a pair of exceptionally honest ravens will supply him with game as to the ownership of which no question can arise."

Our advice to this minister is to take the money. To be sure it is not as pure as it would be had it been drawn out of the community's pocket by the religious brace game known as the church raffle, or by means of the theological aquarium called by courtesy an oyster stew. Nevertheless it will pay for a bell; and if there is anything calculated to thrill the Almighty with joy and keep the devil at a distance it must be the rattle of sounding brass, and we see no reason why brass should not be as acceptable in the belfry as in the pulpit and editorial rooms of religious papers, where so much of it is to be found.

The Newark League.

Again our League had a very pleasant and interesting meeting. Professor Wilder was called suddenly away to Boston, and instead we had the "radical" Professor George Vaughan, and we were well pleased. He was in good mood and struck out grandly for Liberalism. Mr. Flagg, from New York, is announced for next Sunday, at the regular hour, three o'clock P.M. I hoped to hav time to say more about our city, but I hav not the time this evening to say much, excepting that most of the pastors that hav returned are pouring wine and breaking bread for their flock. Many hav not yet returned. The vacations are growing longer; probably it will be October before the churches get a good start. Some of our papers hav had considerable to say on church going, etc. The Daily Advertiser said the people do not go to church because they do not want to go, etc.

Hastily yours for justice, GUS.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 2, 1883.

JOHN E. REMSBURG speaks in Scio, Ohio, Sept. 6th; at Mastersville, Ohio, on the 7th; givs two lectures at Alliance, Ohio, on the 9th; goes to Ashley, Ohio, for the 10th, 11th, and 12th; speaks at Republic, Ohio, on the 13th, and at Chicago, Ill., on the 15th and 16th. Extra copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER containing his great speech at Rochester will be mailed at prices as follows: One copy, 8 cents; four copies for 25 cents; ten copies and over, at 5 cents each. Send in the orders early.

MR. CHARLES WATTS left Rochester for Canada for a short time. After the 17th inst. he goes to Chicago, and thence to Milwaukee. Friends in the West desiring his lectures will please address him in care of the Radical Review, 73 Randolph street, Chicago, Ill. We hope he will be kept extremely busy during his four months' stay with us. We feel sure that all societies or individuals engaging him will be repaid a hundredfold for their labors by the good work he will do.

THE Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists will hold its first meeting under the new organization at Omro, Wis., Sept. 14, 15, and 16, 1883. Mrs. H. S. Lake and Dr. G. H. Geer are engaged to speak. Miss Cora B. Phillips will furnish the vocal music. Charles E. Watkins, the independent slate test medium, and Fred. H. Pierce, the describer of spirits, will be present. The managers would be pleased to see every Freethinker of the state present, and as many others as wish to attend, as everyone will hav an opportunity to express themselvs on a free platform. Officers for the ensuing year will be elected. Usual courtesies by Omro friends. Reduced rates will be given at the hotel.

W. F. JAMIESON will deliver lectures in Rook Elm, Wis., Sept. 14th, 15th, and 16th. Also a second course in Merrillan, Wis., and Neillsville, Wis.; a second course in Janesville, Minn., and Pipe Stone, Minn. His address is, as usual, Lake City, Minn.

Dancers May Yet Hope.

From a Methodist Paper.

Our disciplin does not put dancing down among the crimes which are sufficient to exclude from the kingdom of grace and glory.

Letters from Friends.

ST. JOSEPH, August 27, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will please find $1 to be applied to Mr. Bennett's monument. With my best wishes for your success. MRS. E. B. DILLON.

FORT WORTH, Aug. 27, 1883.

MRS M. W. BENNETT: Inclosed please find $1 for Monument Fund. I am only a poor man, but my repect for D. M. Bennett's memory is none the less sincere on that account. D. T. ROSS.

MINNEAPOLIS, August 14, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $5 for THE TRUTH SEEKER one year; the balance for monument. I will pay $10 or more toward a "Bennett Hall" if Liberals will build one. E. N. KINGSLEY.

PETERBORO, N. H., Aug, 27, 1883.

MRS M. W. BENNETT: Please find my mite toward the monument of our lamented D. M. Bennett. I meant to hav sent it long before this, but hav been overwhelmed with trouble, and hav neglected it.

GEORGE GEER.

HEBER CITY, UTAH., Aug. 19, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I see by tab on my paper it is time to renew my subscription to the dear old TRUTH SEEKER, finder, and teller. Inclosed find $5—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, $1 for the Monument Fund, fifty cents for a lithograph of our noble, brave, and true D. M. Bennett; also send me "Answers to Christian Questions," and Cooper's "Lectures on the Soul." JAMES LINDSAY.

OMAHA, Neb., Aug. 26, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: A few lines from Omaha may be of interest to you. We hav organized a Liberal League here, and hav now twenty-four members, and good prospects for a large League in the near future. We hav had some debates on the question of the day—Christianity. The most of us are subscribers to your paper, and we deem it good for the occasion.

JAMES GRIFFITH.

LOMPOC, CAL., Aug. 12, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed $1.25, subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Having tried it for three months, I find that I can't get along without it. This is a pretty strong church locality, but there are, nevertheless, a great many who do their own thinking. Business interests deter me from making a more open fight in the cause of liberty. I hav, however, given THE TRUTH SEEKER a chance to strike in my stead. W. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

EARLVILLE, ILL., Aug. 15, 283.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just been reading the last TRUTH SEEKER, and can say it has been a feast to me to read the reply to "Observer," and Mr. Andrews's letter, and so many good reports from correspondents. It would be very gratifying to me if every writer would giv the name of his state, as there are so many towns by the same name in different states I hardly know where to place them all. I hope light and truth will continue to spread. S. C. HILTON.

LAURA, OHIO, Aug. 14, 1883.

MR EDITOR: In compliance with your request, I send you some forty names. I am taking the Boston Investigator, and my brother takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and we exchange, and then send them out to do missionary work. I hav the four volumes of "A Truth Seeker Around the World," and consider them the best books on travel I hav ever read. I hav read Millard's "Travels in the Holy Land," and they dwindle into utter insignificance when compared with Mr. Bennett's. R. W. BRANDON.

CHESHIRE, CONN., August 20, 1883.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT: Please find inclosed $2.50 to pay for the paper for another year. I like the way it is conducted by the editor. I think more highly of it than any or all of the other papers I ever took, and am satisfied it is doing more good. I wish you may hav one million or more subscribers soon. I am one of Mr. Bennett's late converts. After believing the Bible to be the word of God for more than thirty years, and trying to liv in accordance with its teachings, a friend induced me to hear Mr. Ingersoll lecture, and it opened my eyes. Then I commenced reading Mr. Bennett's writings—books and tracts—which opened my eyes wider, and I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER now two years, which has nearly completed my faith in the good cause of Liberalism; and I can truly say I enjoy my present belief much more than my previous one. Long may you and the good editor liv to carry on the good work. Yours truly, L. P. ANTHONY.

LAKE CITY, IOWA, Aug. 22, 1883

MR. EDITOR: I sent you in the name of a man as a six months' subscriber. His time expired some time ago, and he now sends you $3—$2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER, and fifty cents for two small books—the "Crimes of Preachers," and Mr. Bennett's "Answers to Christian Questions," all to be sent to this place. I see our dear old friend Winter is still keeping the hornets all a-buzz. That is right. Let them buzz. Some are wanting him choked off; not much. Mr. Editor, if I understand, your paper is for giving all sides of all questions. Thomas Paine once gave his honest convictions to the world, and he has been cursed ever since by a set of bigots and fools. But his truths still stand, and will throughout time. No, Mr. Editor, choke off no man; let all hav their say, and truly your paper will be what it is called—Liberal. With best regards for THE TRUTH SEEKER family, I remain, Truly yours, J. L. TOMPKINS.

NORDHOFF, CAL., August 14, 283.

MR. EDITOR: The inclination to congratulate you on your editorial success is quite irresistible; but it appears to me you hav, in the paper of the 4th inst., allowed the heavy-weights on the Materialistic side of the question to completely overwhelm the Spiritualists—at least, I do not see how they can meet the objections raised by the half-dozen cold-hearted, godless Materialists. I will hav to re-read Mr. Andrews's articles. I certainly did not understand that he claimed that mind is an entity separate and distinct from matter. However, I am glad Mr. Putnam defines his own views, and also what he conceives to be his opponent's, so clearly. If we can persuade the big-brain fellows to use language that we can comprehend, there will be a show for us to evolute out of the ignorance and superstition which hav so long damned the human race.

You can put me on your list for life. What do spirits liv on after leaving the body?

FRED. ROBINSON.

PERRYSVILLE, August 12, 283.

MR. EDITOR: We four old Freethinkers met as we always do to read THE TRUTH SEEKER, when it came to hand on July 21, 1883, and read your article about the Monument Fund, and was surprised to know that money was coming in so slowly for that noble object. We consider it a noble object to raise a monument to mark the resting place of our own Bennett. We discussed the question a little, when one of our number proposed to giv another fifty cents each. We previously contributed $1 each. We would suggest to those who believe in a monument to do likewise, and put that other four hundred dollars, which is short, in the hands of the committee. We subscribe this second time not because we are rich; we are the reverse, poor; and some of us three-score and ten and work for our own living, often working two days for fifty cents. We cheerfully do that much, and would do more yet, if it was required, to respect the memory of that great good man, D. M. Bennett.

JAMES BEVERIDGE.
EUPHEMIA MUIR BEVERIDGE.
ANDREW BEVERIDGE.
ISABELLA BENNETT BEVERIDGE.

GRAHAM, TEXAS, Aug. 21, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing that you are so kind as to publish letters from subscribers, I am encouraged to let you and your readers hear from this portion of the moral vinyard. There are but few of our "peculiar people" in this part of the country, consequently only a very few numbers of your paper ever reach here; but let me assure you that your efforts are appreciated. The Liberals of this county would not number a dozen, at furthest, and at times we feel very isolated and remote; but we know that the light is spreading rapidly, and we do all we can to help it along.

I see in one of our leading Texas journals of recent issue an account of the late discovery of manuscripts which are part of the book of Deuteronomy, which was left out of the Bible, and dated back 900 years before Christ. The paper adds that "if genuin, the interest and importance of the discovery cannot be overrated, and, so far as variation in the sacred text is concerned, there is promis of one of the greatest controversies that scholars hav ever entered upon." The manuscript is, no doubt, genuin scripture of the old sort, for a part of that quoted says, "For I visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children," etc. It is to be hoped, by the orthodox world at least, that this supplement to "the scriptures of eternal truth" will shed some light, if only a faint ray, on some of the miracles, fables, and atrocities to be found in the Old Testament.

CHARLES L. GIBSON.

FARLINVILLE, August 24, 283.

"Any religion that shocks the mind of a child cannot be true."—Paine.

A short time ago, on Sunday morning, I thought I would go to church for a change, so I took my little five-year-old boy by the hand and together we wended our way to the house of "God." When we arrived at the church, the congregation—a large proportion of which were women—were singing with great animation, "I will arise and go to Jesus, he will embrace me," etc. We entered and found that it was communion day. My boy always takes note of everything that is going on, and he seemed to be very much interested in the ceremony, and I was glad for his sake that I had come; but when the distribution of the bread and wine took place the little fellow's countenance changed, for the preachers told each one that it was the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ. As soon as we arrived home my boy says to me, "Pa, was it blood that the man gave these people to drink at the church? and where did he get it?" I said, "No, my son; it was wine." He replied, "But, pa, the man said it was blood, and he kept on telling them it was blood." I again assured him was wine, and he is of the opinion that the preacher lied.

In speaking of this to a neighbor who is a Liberal, I learned from him that two of his children, who witnessed the same thing, were so affected with nausea at the thought of those people eating flesh and drinking blood, that they could not eat any dinner.

I hav witnessed that ceremony at different times all of my life, and for years hav looked upon it as a silly but harmless ceremony. But these children hav made me look on it as barbarous and indecent. Think of people professing to be civilized, playing they are cannibals, and thus shocking the sensibilities of innocent children.

The ever welcome TRUTH SEEKER reaches me promptly every Saturday. Inclosed you will find $3; send me "Self-Contradictions of the Bible;" and the balance apply on my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Fraternally yours, H. E. DEWEY.

AYER, MASS., August 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Monopoly is the juggernaut which crushes everything beneath it. Gold is power—the despot of America. Willing or not willing, all must bow before it, either as sycophants or serfs. Honest toil may memorialize, petition, and pray in vain. The golden car, whose wheels are never lubricated with the oil of human kindness, screams, gold! gold! and the gates of heaven fly wide open, if they fee the priests, who can't see despots, Infidels, or heretics through gold eagles.

All heresies in the arts and sciences, discoveries, and inventions, hav been pardoned and hav faded from the memory when it was found that they administered to pleasure and avarice, and coined gold. Heretics and Infidels are acknowledged to be the world's benefactors; are encouraged and protected by letters patent, because they are contributers to the monopolists—the juggernaut. Strikers, however just their claims, are crushed beneath this mighty power, and become forced converts from their heretical notions. Thus flourishes heresy when mounted on golden wheels. It has ceased to be.

The only recognized heresy, or Infidelity, extant (according to Webster) obtains in a doubt or disbelief in that which passes for the Christian religion, its forms, dogmas, and professions of faith.

When this heresy, this Infidelity, walks erect with manly step among men, exposes frauds, and calls things by their right names, and diverts the spoils of the priests and revenue of the church from corrupt ends—supporting beggars in ruffles instead of helping those in rags—the needy, the poor, whom the recognized teacher said the gospel should be preached to, then the old war cry of "Infidel! heretic!" is raised. The dollars roll the wrong way. But if these Infidels set the stream of gold toward the church coffers, every Infidel, heretic, skeptic, in the land would dematerialize like the spirits at a seance.

The money paid for the support of the church has become the test, instead of "works." Roll the dollar the right way, bow to the church domination, and work at starvation prices, and you are a church saint, and the monopolist's pliant tool. Roll the dollar the wrong way, and you are an Infidel, heretic and blasphemer, liable to be betrayed with a decoy letter by a modern Judas.

When palaces and churches shall stand on the solid rock of justice and equality, instead of having for their foundation the huts of the poor and oppressed, then, and not till then, can we truthfully say America has no juggernaut. ELIJAH MYRICK.

BERLIN, N. J., Aug. 30, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My heart is pained every day, and has been for years, whenever I think of the remissness of most Liberals in their duty to their children. Not one Liberal paper do I know that has a department for the young, and of all the numerous common school and Sabbath-school books in the country, that amount to thousands, I do not believe there are five that are free from sectarianism and fit to be put into the hands of children; and the poor neglected things, in their mental hunger, are not only forced to read and learn trash that they must unlearn when older, but many of them, for want of other and better instruction and amusement, go to sectarian Sabbath-schools to hav error burnt into their souls by the fear of an angry God, death, hell, and the devil.

The Boston Investigator, as good a paper as the world ever had, has been published over fifty years, and I firmly believe that if it had always had more than half a column devoted to the children, it would by this time hav had ten times its present number of subscribers. But there was little in it suited to the capacity of children, and they strayed away to other pastures for mental food. THE TRUTH SEEKER is now in its tenth volume, and if it had always had a department for children I doubt not its subscription list would hav been very much enlarged. If Liberals want a rich harvest they must prepare the virgin soil that is free from weeds, and plant and cultivate the seed. It is easier to teach ten children the truth than it is to get Jonah's whale out of one old bigot, and prepare him for truthful instruction.

I am not writing this without the authority of experience. I published the Portland Pleasure Boat about seventeen years, and always had a "Cabin" or "Saloon" in it for the children, and hav now on hand scores of old letters from parents telling me how much their children liked the Boat. Some told me that when the day of its arrival came their children would run to the office to see which would get hold of it first. Some told me their children could not play nor eat until they had been through their "Cabin," and some said when one child was reading it the others climbed up on their chairs to look over their shoulders, for they all wanted to see as well as hear the paper. Our Elmina received her first Liberal ideas from the Boat when a girl, and if it had not been for that paper who knows that she would not hav become the wife of a priest, and be helping him to cram the wonderful whale and its Bible trimmings and fixings down the throats of the people instead of opening their mental eyes? I could mention a number now among reformers who received their first ideas of reform from that paper when boys and girls. One of them sixteen years ago founded the society called "The Universal Peace Union," whose aim is to put an end to all wars. He holds peace meetings in various towns and cities, visits presidents and other high officials of our own country, corresponds with rulers and reformers of other nations on the subject of universal peace, and is laboring to establish an international congress by which all disputes between nations may be settled without resort to arms; and if he livs a few years longer he will undoubtedly succeed; and how glorious will be the result! No more wholesale human slaughter, no more pensioned cripples, no more widows and orphans made by public murder, no more waste of time and money in maiming and mangling our brothers!

Every civilized nation now on earth is bankrupt by the expense of war, and all because children hav been taught to believe in a revengeful, disgraceful, and bloodthirsty God, instead of being taught the principles of humanity, honesty, justice, and peace; and must the barbarous practice of war continue to curse the world through another generation just because Liberals neglect their solemn duty to their children?

J. HACKER.

BURLINGTON, KAN., Aug. 5, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I will add my opinion in regard to the discussion published in THE TRUTH SEEKER between Spiritualists and Materialists by asking the question, What difference is it what persons believe when they are working for the elevation of their fellowman and for the cause of humanity?

The Spiritualists hav done a noble work in emancipating the public mind from the horrid nightmare of superstition, where Christianity had chained them down for centuries; and they are doing a good work now, and it should not be overlooked nor ignored by those who call themselvs Materialists. For, according to the signs of the times in the political and religious heavens, the struggle betweeen Christianity and skepticism, as O. B. Frothingham predicted about ten or twelve years ago, is in the near future. And any one conversant with the history of the French Revolution of 1794, can interpret the writing on the wall—that our country will be the battle-field between church and state, and the monopolies and laboring classes of the country. The churches are losing confidence in their bankrupt plan of salvation by J. Christ, and are clamoring for a constitutional amendment to our federal government to establish their Sunday as a national day, and their Bible as the text-book of our public schools, and J. Christ as the ruler of nations; and when we reflect on the censorship of the post-office department with the Comstock law, they are justified in anticipating that their demands will be granted. They are also demanding prohibitory amendments to state constitutions, and it is on trial here in Kansas, but proves to be a failure and a curse to our state. Monopolies are demanding the enactment of severe laws to oppress labor with, and they are dictating legislation and judicial decisions to govern and accomplish their greed for the labor and wealth of the country. The labor strikes which hav taken place for the last twelve months are encouraging symptoms that the body politic may hav sufficient reason, common sense, and manhood to put the giant monsters, old Christianity and monopolies, at bay until the people become educated to their danger, and we can settle those questions with the ballot without resorting to the bullet.

Then let us cease the agitation of these side issues, as to whether death ends all and as to whether we shall hav a future existence after our vital force is exhausted here; and my opinion is that I do not know, but I hope we shall continue to liv after this life, and hav a chance to improve on this. I believe it will be for the best interest of our country for all the different grades of Liberalism and labor organizations to unite and prepare for our common enemy, old Christianity, who will form a coalition with the monopolies, and cause such a scene of blood and carnage that the French Revolution would not be a parallel, and such a destruction of life and property as has not been known in the history of the world. Then let us remember that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

CHRIS. BROWN.

MIND AND MATTER.

RUSSELLVILLE, Aug. 9. 1883.

MR. EDITOR: We hear said, and see written, of late much about mind and matter—mind put first as in the heading, and treated as an entity; yea, more, as the entity of entities; the great immaterial, spiritual, causational entity, the creator and producer of all material entities. What nonsense! It does seem that any fool could see that if mind is an entity at all, it must of necessity be material; that when all matter is subtracted, nought remains but empty space, which in itself is utterly impotent; that the words immateriality, spirituality, and their verbs and adjectivs as generally used are as meaningless as words can be to mean anything at all, that when put into the crucible of reason to be simmered down, nothing evaporates and nothing is left. But still I don't doubt in the least that mind exists as an entity, but don't forget that it is a material entity, which most probably has its being in the highest and most subtil forms of matter, and it is the thinking principle in man and the intelligence of the universe.

Our thoughts, our memories, our will are nothing more than the temporary results, the fruits, of the temporary organic action of this eternal mind-matter in harmony with the coarser matter of our nature all acting in concert. All matter is eternal, the highest grades no more so than the lowest. That which cannot be annihilated could not hav been created.

Mr. Putnam, in his communication in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 4th, says that the scientific position is that matter is the original substance, and that mind is the result of certain conditions of substance. I doubt that this is the scientific position. If it is, I am constrained to say that I think it is off the track. A scientific error is just as bad in my eyes as any other. Mind, instead of being a result of conditions of matter, is conditioned matter, acting by and conditioned by laws of necessity, and likewise eternal, as are the laws they govern. Please be careful to understand me correctly. This is a nice point. Let me illustrate. Man can imitate the brute in so far as his organization, or condition, if you please, for I use these words synonymously, resembles theirs, and they him in so far as their condition resembles him, and no farther. The common plebeian cannot act the great philosopher and statesman, but the philosopher and statesman may act the plebeian, because he has in his constitution the same conditions, and thus these laws of necessity make the condition, and act in accordance with them. And the corresponding mental outcome of these actions and conditions in man are will, thought, memory, love, hatred, and every other fruit of the mind. We may just as reasonably say that the mine is gone when the gold is taken out, as to say that a man has lost his mind when the fruits are non est, or that he has lost a part of it when he is non compos mentis. It is all very true that the fruit of a tree may well be considered a part of the tree while it is on, but when taken off, the tree remains as much a tree as before, but not so perfect, interesting, and beautiful. So you see the points I hav endeavored to make are that what in common parlance are the mind, really are nothing more than the fruits of the mind, and that the mind itself is strictly material and eternal in essence, but not in organization; that the fruits are strictly temporary, and disappear with the organization.

Friendly reader, these are my honest convictions. Do you see anything wrong in them? If so, please point it out.

WM. L. WORLEY.

LOWELLVILLE, OHIO, Aug. 25, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: On reading the article of S. P. Putnam on "The Bond of Union," in THE TRUTH SEEKER of August 18th, the following thoughts occurred to me, to which I hope you will giv a place in your valuable paper.

On account of ignorance, injustice, and wrong, this beautiful world is a "vale of tears" to many of its inhabitants. To liv is a struggle, a battle for life, which many would not care to pass through a second time. To such broken-hearted ones it is but cold comfort to be told either directly or indirectly that "death ends all." When doomed to labor and toil, and no hope, what then? That justice is baffled forever, and injustice and wrong triumphant, but few can believe. The sentiment or principle of justice is deeply implanted in human nature; the person who raises some heads of cabbage knows that he has a better right to the cabbage than the other fellow who did not help, and the other fellow knows it too; and right here this sense of justice in human nature is the foundation of all morality—even Christian morality—and the toiling millions look to the future for justice not, to them, attainable here, and cannot believe that "death ends all;" and this is one of the reasons why Materialism never has in the past, and is not likely in the future, to prevail to any great extent among the inhabitants of earth. It is but cold comfort, indeed, if comfort at all, for the miserable to be told that after a few or many years of care and toil and suffering death will end all. Why thus doomed to no hope? they ask, and cannot believe that justice can be thus dethroned, and wrong and injustice triumphant forever. To benefit the race a thousand or a million of years hence is not motiv sufficient to satisfy the toiling millions, or induce them to labor and suffer on without hope, and they will look to the future for justice.

Yes, Materialism or "death ends all" may do for those who enjoy the comforts and luxuries of life, but it will not do for or satisfy those to whom this world imparts no hope. And as this world has always been a vale of tears to the many, they will in all probability continue to look for justice in the hereafter, notwithstanding the smooth and indirect or obscure sneers of friend Putnam.

He says, "I hav not the slightest interest in the spritual world." To many, however, the subject of the spiritual world is one of very deep interest. To those who hav been taught that many of their friends and loved ones were, no doubt, suffering the torments of the damned in hell, the least ray of light from the spirit world is exceedingly interesting and is received with joy unspeakable.

The question, "If a man die shall he liv again?" is one which in all the ages has been asked, and always answered in the affirmativ, while some, to be sure, hav doubted. To most of those who investigate and witness some of the phenomena of Spiritualism, the question is settled in the affirmativ for the reason that the most reasonable and sensible conclusion of the whole matter is that the phenomena come from the spirits of the departed. In the manifestations or phenomena there is evidently intelligence and force. And all the forces which hav been relied on by exposers hav failed to produce intelligence, and are consequently no explanation or exposure at all. And all the arguments against supernaturalism prove nothing, for all intelligent Spiritualists believe that spirit is matter, and do not believe in anything supernatural whatever. And why is it that this man of straw—supernaturalism—is so often set up to be demolished by experts, when no Spiritualist believes in supernaturalism at all? And then the ridicule, and sneers, and assertions of those who hav never investigated, but assume to know it all, or, having investigated, were blinded by prejudice, amounts to nothing in the estimation of those who hav received communications from departed friends. Spiritualism is simply a question of fact. Do spirits liv and communicate or make themselvs known to their friends here? This is the question, and there are thousands and thousands of witnesses to prove the affirmativ. And what do the negativ assertions of those who hav not seen, or heard, or obtained the evidence, amount to? Answer, simply nothing.

I am glad that Brother Putnam has not thrown all the Spiritualists overboard, as unworthy of a place among Liberals; and I hope to be counted in as one within "The Bond of Union," for I too am a great admirer of this world, its grandeur, its beauty, and "wonderful possibilities." And I believe, too, that in this beautiful world there may be heaven, romance, glory, and love. But this can only be by living in harmony with the laws of nature. Happiness—"the chief end of man"—can be attained in no other way, and it is just as important to be happy to-day, and now as at any other time in the long hereafter. And to liv in harmony with nature, and thus secure happiness here, is the best possible preparation for the future, either in this life or the life to come. Friend Putnam says: "I want to revel in the hights and depths and grandeurs of this earthly scene. I hav no higher aims." I, too, want to revel in the grandeurs and beauties of this earthly scene, but at the close of life, "I want to revel in the hights and depths and grandeurs" and glories of the spirit world too. One thing is certain however, "we will all be in the same boat," and I wonder if friend Putnam has not some secret, longing desire to continue the revelry that he loves so well, that, when we close our career here, we may be permitted still to enjoy the munificence and grandeur of this beautiful world, and the spirit world too!

WM. WATSON.

Heard from in Texas.

From the Dennison, Texas, Sunday Gazetteer.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, of New York, is pushing out into the West for patronage, and the managers avail themselvs of the Gazetteer to make their paper known to a liberal and progressiv people. We warn our Christian friends, however, not to send for a specimen copy unless they are fortified against temptation. The mental pabulum served up from week to week is of the red-hot, anti-religious sort, and the editor has a cunning way of backing up his opinions and logic with statistics and historical data that beat the devil—that argued with Martin Luther.

HENRY WARD BEECHER, who has proved himself a bull in a crockery shop at smashing up human idols, comes to the front with the announcement that George Washington was a most accomplished swearer. This is hard on the father of his country, but the great majority of the American people who know of the part he took in giving them a nation will continue to revere his memory as much as if Mr. Beecher had selected a less worthy man for an awful example.—Siftings.

THE ROCHESTER CONVENTION.

(Continued from page 565.)

He made no war on individuals, but on the creeds, bigotry, and superstition that incited to hate and evil.

Some of my Christian friends say, "He refused to believe God's holy Bible; he was an outspoken Infidel and deserved all the sufferings he endured."

"But Mr. Bennett believed parts of the Bible, all that was of good, or of love." Yes, but we are not to believe just what part we choose and reject the rest. The Bible is God's holy word, and if we do not believe all its teaching—every word of it—we are Infidels, accursed of God. The gentle, loving savior declared, "He that believeth not shall be damned."

Now, my Christian brother and sister, I entreat your patient attention and study of a few passages of this Bible. Let us see how much of infamy and iniquity Mr. Bennett was really guilty of. Let us make sure there is not a beam in our own eye. You may be Infidels and know it not.

Solomon, the wisest man, especially inspired of God, declares (Eccl. vii, 9), "Anger resteth in the bosom of fools." That is self-evident truth; uttered by the wisest man or greatest fool, it is ever and always true. Jesus says, "Search the scriptures." We do so and turn to Numbers xxv, 4. "The Lord said unto Moses, take all the heads of the people and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel," (Ezk. viii, 8–18). Therefore will I also deal injury; mine eye shall not spare, neither will I hav pity, and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them" (Jer. vii, 20). Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man and beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground, and it shall burn and shall not be quenched."

We hav seen men stumble over a chair, and in their mad rage (mad, insane,) smash the chair. We do not respect or highly reverence men guilty of such silly display of wrath and fury. But it seems we ought to respect and admire them for so closely following the example of their heavenly father.

Do you believe all these texts—that God in mad anger and fury took his spite out on the unoffending cattle and the trees? that he nursed his anger, and yet inspired Solomon to write, "Anger resteth only in the bosom of fools."

The Bible says, "God is love" (1 John iv, 8). Let us see what kind of love.

Ezekiel ix, 5, 6: "Go ye after him through the city and smite; let not your eye spare, neither hav ye pity. Slay utterly old and young, both maids, and little children, and women."

Isaiah xiii, 16: "Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes; their homes shall be spoiled and their wives ravished."

Hosea, xiii, 16: "Samaria shall become desolate, for she hath rebelled against her God; they shall fall by the sword, their infants shall be dashed to pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up."

"God is love." We are to be like this heavenly father. We are to hav just such mercy as this. You wonder at the cruel horrors of the Inquisition. You dare denounce those who doomed men and women to horrible torture. But your God, your heavenly father, inflicts torture and death on babes and sucklings, and the gentle, loving, pitying Jesus commands us to imitate this mercy:

Luke vi, 36: "Be ye therefore merciful, as your father also is merciful."

You are to be like God. Does God's example tend to make men loving, gentle, kind, and merciful? If you do not believe God delights in savage butchery of sweet little innocent children, that he is full of malice and vindictiv hate, you do not believe your Bible.

You say, "Oh, but these texts of cruelty were from the Old Testament. Christ taught us the better way. We are now under the gospel. We care nothing for those Old Testament teachings." Why, then you, too, are Infidels—worst kind—for you repudiate the teaching of Jesus.

John v, 39: "Search the scriptures, for in them ye think ye hav eternal life, and they are they which testify of me."

Paul says (2 Tim. iii, 16): "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrin, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness."

The texts we hav read, then, the New Testament declares, are of divine inspiration, and to instruct us in righteousness.

Do you believe in such right-doing? No? Beware how you let it be known, or you, too, like the noble martyr, D. M. Bennett, may under some equally false pretext be consigned to a felon's cell, and your name made infamous by falsehood and calumny. The only crime of D. M. Bennett was that he could not, would not, accept and honor a God of such bloodthirsty cruelty.

If you doubt the truth of a single one of these, and many worse texts, your loving, merciful, heavenly father will consign you to everlasting brimstone. But lest you charge me with exaggeration, with over-coloring, let us hav standard orthodox authority. Let us really learn what it is to be damned.

I hav here a tract from the headquarters of the Presbyterians, issued by Presbyterian Board of Publishers—Tract No. 24. I received some twenty copies of this tract about a year ago in answer to my application for tracts giving the evidence from the Bible in regard to the punishment of the wicked. This is entitled, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God." They fail to quote Eccl. vii, 9—"Anger rests only in the bosom of fools." Time forbids giving but one or two brief extracts. Page 9: "The God that holds you over the pit of hell, much in the same way as one holds a spider or some loathsome insect over the fire, abhors you, and is dreadfully provoked; his wrath toward you burns like fire." Page 11: "Consider this, you that remain in an unregenerate state, that God will execute the fierceness of his anger, implies that he will inflict wrath without any pity. When God beholds the ineffable extremity of your case, and sees your torment to be so disproportioned to your strength, and sees how your poor soul is crushed and sinks down, as it were, into an infinit gloom, he will hav no compassion upon you; he will not forbear the expression of his wrath, or in the least lighten his hand; there shall be no moderation or mercy, nor will God then at all stay his rough wind; he will hav no regard to your welfare, nor be at all careful lest you should suffer too much." Page 12: "How awful are these words of the great God, 'I will tread them in mine anger, and will trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment' (Isa. lxiii, 3)."

It is perhaps impossible to conceive of words that carry in them greater manifestations of these three things, namely, contempt, hatred, and fierceness of indignation. If you cry to God to pity you he will be so far from pitying you in your doleful case, or showing you the least regard or favor, that instead of that he will tread you under foot, and though he will know that you cannot bear the weight of omnipotence treading upon you, yet he will not regard that, but he will crush you under his feet without mercy; he will crush out your blood and make it fly, and it shall be sprinkled on his garments so as to stain all his raiment. He will not only hate you, but he will hold you in the utmost contempt; no place shall be thought fit for you but under his feet, to be trodden down as the mire of the streets. For repudiating these horrors, for denouncing these vile teachings that make God worse than a hyena, D. M. Bennett was imprisoned, and even in his grave is still pursued with vile calumny and vindictiv hate by believers in God's holy Bible, who by their mendacious cruelty think to become more pleasing to their God.

No longer wonder that human beings, becoming Christian priests, could stand by and witness, nay command, the infliction of the horrible tortures of the Inquisition; could look on and see fair, innocent, helpless women endure tortures that make the heart sick and the blood curdle to even think of. Did not the God of the Bible command these Christians to destroy that their eyes should not pity. They should show no mercy.

Who are the enemies of humanity, those who denounce or those who teach such atrocities?

D. M. Bennett, in his search for truth, verified the fact that there hav been few original systems of religion in the world. Christianity's only claim to originality is in its horrible torture of its victims. Outside its blood-curdling cruelty it has not a dogma, a rite, a sacrament that is not found in the older systems centuries before its own existence.

Its best moral lessons were taught long before its own introduction. Confucius, five hundred years before him of Bethlehem, taught the grand sentiment known as the golden rule: "Do not with others what you would not hav others do with you."

India was the birthplace and mother of all the religions, morals, literature, and language of the world, and our best oriental scholars agree that their early religions inspired Egyptian, Hebrew, Greek, and Roman civilization.

The principal gods of the Hindoos are Brahm, the creator; Christna, the preserver; and Siva, the destroyer. This was a trinity, thousands of years before the trinity of Christians was ever conceived. The Christian trinity, by the way, was not introduced into the church till the second century.

According to Hindoo legends the birth of Christna was foretold—the mother of Christna was a virgin, overshadowed by the most high god. While mother and babe lay in a sheepcot shepherds came to worship the child. Christna was called Jezeus.

The tryant of Madura, being impressed that Christna was to supplant him, decreed that all the male children within his state should be put to death. Christna escaped, quits his mother, commences his mission, performs miracles, raising the dead, healing the sick, restoring the deaf and blind, declaring himself the second person in the trinity—that he was god come upon the earth to redeem man from original sin. The people cried, This is indeed the redeemer promised of the Father. Christna gathered a small band of disciples and with them led a wandering life. His favorit style of preaching was by parable.

He was recognized as the divine word and called the Messiah. To show his humility he washed the feet of his disciples. Two poor women on one occasion poured on his head a costly box of perfume, and worshiped him. Christna appeared to his disciples in all the eclat of his divine majesty. His disciples, unable to endure the brilliancy, threw themselvs upon their faces in the dust. In other words, Christna was transfigured in presence of his disciples. He foretold his death and return to the house of his father. After death his body was suspended on a tree.

We may learn much of Bennett from the declaration he made on his return home, "I return with renewed faith in the eternal power and principles of nature—in the superiority of good lives—in acts of kindness toward our fellow-beings and in efforts to spread the light of truth over the dark spots of earth." That we may more fully do justice to the memory of this noble and fearless champion of Freethought, let us glance briefly at his life.

D. M. Bennett was born in Springville, N. Y., on the northern shore of Otsego Lake, December 23, 1818. His father, an honest, hard working farm laborer, when the child was ten years old, moved to the village of Cooperstown.

At the age of fourteen he traveled one hundred miles to his uncle, a Dr. Baker, of Berkshire county, Mass., who had promised to make a docter of him; on his arrival his uncle, disappointed at his dimmutiv stature, bade him return home until his beard was grown, or a least until he could scale more than seventy pounds.

About to return on his long lonely journey, he fell in with two Shakers, who with characteristic kindness offered to carry him with them some twenty miles on his journey. September 12, 1833, he first entered the home of the Shakers at Lebannon, N. Y., and remained with them thirteen years.

In September, 1846, he married Mary Wicks, the ever true and loyal, loving and devoted companion and partner of his every joy and sorrow.

It was during 1873 Bennett got into a discussion with two clergyman, on the subject of prayer, which discussion was carried on through the local papers of Paris, Ill., where he was then conducting a seed farm. The editor of one of the papers acted unfairly, refusing to publish Bennett's replies; this resulted in his determination to hav a paper of his own. This was the origin of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The first number appeared September 1, 1873; twelve thousand copies were issued and sent broadcast over the land.

Taking advantage of his unpopularity as an Infidel editor, his pious Christian partners forced a dissolution of partnership and robbed him of $2,500.

Finding there was no longer necessity of his remaining at Paris, he determined to devote his entire energies to THE TRUTH SEEKER, and decided to locate the office in New York city. Number four of the little monthly was issued at Paris, Ill., and number five—with sixteen pages in place of eight—was issued at New York city.

At the commencement of Vol. II. it was issued semi-monthly; and at the beginning of Vol. III., January, 1876, it became a weekly.

From the first issue to the last there cannot be found one sentence by Mr. Bennett that, by the most rigid prude, could be construed into obscenity.

It has been the lot of few men to be so maligned, misrepresented and caluminated. Although he was a man of genial disposition, kindly actions, moral incentivs, and noble purposes, he has been painted by his Christian enemies as a monster of depravity, a panderer to obscenity, an enemy of God and men. This hatred and misrepresentation was because he possessed moral integrity, courage, and ability to publish his honest convictious, in plain, simple, unmistakable language, and scatter broadcast the seeds of truth.

The church has persecuted D. M. Bennett, and continues to vilify him even in his grave, in the hope to deter others from daring to giv utterance to truth that is destructiv to the influence of the church, and the power and profit of the priesthood.

There are more learned, more cultured truth seekers, but none who more happily presented the arguments, so as to reach the understanding and bring conviction to the masses. Hir writings fairly glitter with simple, plain, logical statements that carry conviction alike to the dullest and most prejudiced. He had the happiest, simplest possible way of putting the case, and stating his premises so clearly that the deduction could not be avoided. He invariably clothed his thoughts in language so clear and simple that any one able to read could not fail to understand him, while the most erudite read his writings with pleasure, interest, and profit.

The church realized that THE TRUTH SEEKER was becoming a mighty power. The "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," although it consisted of plain questions, clothed in most proper language, gave bitter offense, because it furnished questions to Sunday-school and Bible class scholars priests and ministers could not answer.

THE TRUTH SEEKER articles were winning over from the churches the best, most intelligent, honest, and wealthy members. Little wonder that D. M. Bennett became the central object of the church's fear and hate.

That self-elected champion of orthodoxy, Rev. Joe Cook, sought counsel with the New York soapman, the frothy fanatic Colgate, who was at the head of the society for the suppression of vice, an offshoot of the Young Men's Christian Association, filled with bigotry and spleen. They decried those destroyers of the sweet peace of Zion. D. M. Bennett and his TRUTH SEEKER must be silenced at all hazards.

In all ages the evil conceived by black-hearted bigotry has found degraded wretches ready to become willing tools in doing its vile work.

They hired the miserable informer, Comstock, compared with whom the Irish informer Cary was a paragon of honor; and he at once assumed espionage over the innocent and unsuspecting Bennett.

By subterfuge, lies, and forgery, this worthy Christian trio, this trinity of malignant hate—creatures only permitted by nature to exist to show the lowest depths of vileness and infamy to which things in semblance of human form can possibly descend—succeeded in insnaring Bennett in the meshes of the law.

A decoy letter, ordering a little pamphlet advocating reform in sexual relations, was sent to Mr. Bennett, who, of course, sent the book by mail as ordered. Carey Comstock, the informer, received it, and at once pounced upon his victim, arresting him on the charge of sending obscene literature through the mails. And the quaking bigots ceased to tremble and began to crow and screech their vile calumny that D. M. Bennett was a corrupter of youth, a publisher of obscenity, a panderer to vice.

They knew the charge was as infamously false as their own black hearts, for the informer Carey Comstock, instigated by Colgate and the Rev. Mendacious Cook, had some weeks before made very thorough examination of all the publications books, pamphlets, and tracts in Mr. Bennett's store, and carried off a copy of the "Open Letter to Jesus Christ," and two or three other tracts, in the hope of getting him indicted for blasphemy. There was nothing in the tracts to warrant this, hence the resort to the decoy letter ordering the litttle reform pamphlet through the mail.

Remember Mr. Bennett was not its author or publisher. No line that could possibly be construed into obscenity was ever published by D. M. Bennett.

No man more earnestly opposed aught that would pollute or demoralize. He believed and taught Liberalism was doing as well as doubting—repudiating errors of life as well as errors of faith. He regarded Liberalism as a means to an end, and that end a more useful, better, purer, and, consequently, a happier life.

At the trial the counsel of Mr. Bennett offered the entire pamphlet in evidence, claiming that the book was not obscene, but a simple treatis on a scientific question, and perfebtly legitimate for the mails.

But the reverend professor of mendacity, Joe Cook, sat by the bench and exerted all the interest and power of the church, and I know not how much of Colgate's soap, to influence Benedict, the judge, to rule it out.

Every scheme that diabolical ingenuity—spurred on by malignant hate, fear, and fanaticism—could devise was resorted to, to secure the conviction of their innocent victim.

Not all the soap ever made or sold by Colgate would ever cleanse the foul slime from the slanderous mouth of the Rev. Mendacious Braggart Cook, or wash clean the black putrid infamy from the heart of the infamous reformer, Carey Comstock.

D. M. Bennett was sentenced to thirteen months in the Albany penitentiary — not for sending obscene literature through the mails, not for violation of any law of the land, but for publishing Infidel literature, for doing valiant battle for the cause of reason, truth, and common sense, against bigotry and superstition.

Thus it has been through every age of the Christian era: the mailed and bloody hand of superstition has sought to crush genius, liberty, and science in its merciless grasp.

Every thinker and discoverer has been denounced as an innovator, a disturber, an Infidel, and a wretch.

The miserables who caused this humiliating disgrace to American jurisprudence by their infamous persecution of an innocent and honorable man, would hav us let the matter rest; they desire it should be buried in oblivion. But it will not down.

The arrest and imprisonment of D. M. Bennett was a blow at the rights of every citizen who dares to express his honest convictions, who has the manhood to refuse to fawn and cringe to the power of the priesthood.

It is inscribed on the records of our country's history with the iron pen of truth that during the corrupt and imbecil administration of Fraud President Hayes, an arrogant and persecuting church, in order to gratify its hatred of Freethought—under a constitution which ignores all religion—was permitted to use the government of the United States as a tool to drag a citizen from his home and incarcerate him in a dungeon, for no other offense than publishing his religious convictions.

Let it ever be remembered that the attorney general, over his own signature, declared the little reform pamphlet sent through the mail by D. M. Bennett, on which the charge was made, was not obscene, and therefore Mr. Bennett could not hav been guilty of the offense charged. No; the prosecution was not for sending obscene literature through the mails, but for publishing a successful Freethought newspaper.

On the trial Dr. Winterburn testified that he had known D. M. Bennett nineteen years, and that his general character in the community during that time was that of a kind, sober, honest, intelligent, loving, and lovable man, truthful and benevolent. And when Dr. Winterburn affirmed this he voiced the sentiment of thousands of Mr. Bennett's friends; for to know him most thoroughly was most thoroughly to esteem and love him. Those who knew him best loved him the most dearly.

All honor to the noble heroes of ancient times, who hav counted as nought honor, reputation, and life, who unflinchingly drained the poisoned cup, braved the tortures of the Inquisition, and the fagot; and all honor to those who hav endured the living martyrdom of the modern Christian penitentiary, that priestcraft, ignorance, and superstition might be banished from the land.

Justice is oft tardy, but not the less sure; sooner or later, hand in hand with truth, she will avenge the wronged and vindicate the slandered and maligned.

D. M. Bennett was the first and only prisoner whose pardon was petitioned for by over 200,000 of his fellow-citizens; 12,000 personal letters were written requesting remittance of his unjust sentence.

For a time bigotry, fanaticism, intolerance, and priestcraft triumphed. On the 28th of July, 1879, that brave and noble soul, D. M. Bennett, suffered the cruel ignominy of the convict's garb and the prisoner's cell. He was released April 28, 1880, two months and five days being deducted on account of his good behavior in prison.

On his release he was tendered a reception at Chickering Hall, New York city, which was a grand ovation. Between two and three thousand of his fellow-citizens were present, anxious to honor one whom the power of the church had sought in vain to crush to silence and disgrace.

In August, 1880, the Freethinkers held an international congress at Brussels, and D. M. Bennett was chosen by the Liberals of the United States as their delegate. His letters to THE TRUTH SEEKER while on this trip to Europe were so highly prized it led to his making his memorable journey around the world as a truth seeker.

Starting on July 30, 1881, he made the tour of the world, and on reaching California on his return, his journey home to New York was one continued series of ovations. At every place he could be induced to stay liberal hearts delighted to do him honor. He reached his home in New York July 30, 1882, just one year from the time of starting.

On Friday, December 1st, he visited the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER, bringing with him the last three pages of manuscript of volume four of "A Truth Seeker Around the World." This was the last he ever wrote. He returned to his home quite sick, grew rapidly worse. On Tuesday night he suffered a shock and sunk into an unconscious state from which he never rallied. With the morning hope of recovery was over. Peacefully as a child he fell asleep.

When the sad news was flashed over the electric wires across the ocean, from every quarter of the world was wafted back the sigh of sorrow, tender words of sympathy, respect, and love. All hearts echoed the sentiment of his funeral hymn:

Cover him over with beautiful flowers,
Deck him with garlands, this brother of ours,
Sleeping so silent, by night and day,
Sleeping the years of his manhood away.
Deck him with garland, this brother of ours,
Cover him over with beautiful flowers.

Giv him the meed he has won in the past;
Giv him the honors the future forecast;
Giv him the chaplet he won in the strife;
Giv him the laurels he lost with his life.
Deck him with garlands, this brother of ours,
Cover him over with beautiful flowers.

Cover him over, yea cover him o'er,
Husband and brother he greets us no more;
Crown in our hearts this dead hero of ours,
Cover him over with beautiful flowers.
Deck him with garlands, this brother of ours,
Cover him over with beautiful flowers.

This memorial service vividly recalls the great ambition of his life, the one desire of his soul above all others, which he thus expressed:

"Keep alive THE TRUTH SEEKER, that it may vindicate the position I hav taken in behalf of intellectual and political liberty and the emancipation of mankind from the slavery of superstition and priestcraft."

With pride and gratification we can hope soon to be able to point to the beautiful marble monument, the memorial erected by loving hands to mark the resting place of our honored dead. But THE TRUTH SEEKER is his living monument, perpetuating his memory by continuing his lifework, doing battle for the cause of liberty and humanity—each week, each month, each year, doing more and more grand and efficient work in the cause of universal mental liberty.

Shall his work go on? Shall the one most earnest desire of his soul be gratified? This consummation so devoutly to be wished can only be accomplished by each and every one of his admirers making earnest practical efforts to increase the circulation of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Every new subscriber gained helps to perpetuate and honor the memory of its founder, confers a real benefit on the subscriber, brings the light of truth to the home not alone of its proper recipient, but to all the friends and neighbors to whom he lends his paper to read.

Under the faithful labors of its talented young editor, Eugene Macdonald, THE TRUTH SEEKER continues to increase in usefulness. It is the great mental emancipator of our state, and must be sustained.

In the language of that eloquent champion of truth, T. B. Wakeman—the devoted friend of D. M. Bennett and THE TRUTH SEEKER—"THE TRUTH SEEKER shall liv. It shall triumph. It shall carry the name of our departed brother down through the depths of ages until the last enthralled soul is emancipated. Such lives, such souls, cannot die. If they could, the world would sink back to barbarism and slavery. We are here to continue that life with all our energy, until the whole world shall feel its blessing and turn to it in gratitude and thankfulness."

In the future the great duty of our lives must be the realization of the highest thoughts and motivs for which he lived and struggled. Let us be inspired by his memory to consecrate our all to the struggle for universal mental liberty.

The disenthralled generation of coming time will honor no man more than those who sacrificed bodily comfort for mental liberty. Foremost among such men will ever be revered our model truth seeker, D. M. Bennett.

Giv him the meed he has won in the past,
Giv him the honors the future forecast,
Giv him the chaplets he won in the strife,
Giv him the laurels he lost with his life.
Deck him with garlands, this brother of ours,
Cover him over with beautiful flowers.

Mrs. Susan H. Wixon, of Boston, followed with an extempore address on "The Relations of Woman to the Church." The speaker said:

It is mental dyspepsia that takes women to church. It is a form of disease that is hard to cure. Women often go to church to obtain rest and study the fashions. Music is also a magnet which attracts them to the sanctuary. They attend church to obtain recreation. They cannot find the amusements which men enjoy. It is thought to be respectable to attend worship. Strong-minded women are disliked by many men. This is wrong. A cool, clear-headed, strong-minded woman is far preferable to a silly, nonsensical girl. Many women go to church to lay up treasures in heaven, as they find it impossible to lay up treasures on earth. In early times women were regarded as the children of the devil, and the origin of all human ills. This was due to the popular superstition in regard to the origin of evil. But in later times all things changed. I deny that everything that woman has gained is due to the Christian religion. It is a palpable falsehood. Were it not for Christianity women would be ten thousand times better off. Woman, among barbarians in the Middle Ages, was far better off than among Christians. Christianity denies to women the right of free speech. But the Spiritualists and Freethinkers tell her to preach her gospel of goodness and truth. The grand women in science and literature are women who hav thought for themselvs. It is often the case that women are surrounded with all the luxuries and their power to think crushed. Religion and the Bible hav been made by man. If woman had had a part in it the work would hav been far better done. Doubtless the devout Catholic counts her beads for many years to come, but the intelligent woman will not be bowed down by mediæval creeds. The church will attempt to prevent woman's departure, as by it Christianity would lose its best and truest support. The emancipation of woman is bound to come. Forty years ago there were only seven occupations for women, now there are over three hundred trades or professions by which she can support herself. The church has been woman's deceiver and enemy. It has stigmatized her and cast dishonor upon her. When she learns this she will assert her individuality. We shall then hear no more of praying women, but of thinking women—a consummation greatly to be desired. Then no excuse will be made for a man that is not allowable for a woman. In man evil is merely called "sowing wild oats," but the slightest deviation in a woman's line of duty means social ruin. No, the coming woman will not attend church, and for a grand, good reason. There will be no church for her to attend. I am sometimes told that a woman's brain is smaller than a man's. But don't forget that quality can more than make up for quantity. Mind has no sex. As woman has overcome many obstacles, so will she go on until she has overcome these prejudices In the future she will preach humanity, and it deified. With the departure of woman from the church will come the elevation of man, and a grander and nobler race will be the result.

Mrs. Wixon's address, which was enthusiastically received, closed the Thursday afternoon session.

(Concluded next week.)

Notes.

THE poet has somewhere said that "heaven lies about us in our infancy." We may add to this the remark that a portion of the secular and religious press in this city lies about us all the time.

THE Freethinkers at Rochester permitted the Catholics of that city to giv away and sell religious tracts and books at their convention. It would be drawing the long bow a good way to predict that the Catholics will ever allow Freethinkers the same privilege. There are some good rules that won't work both ways, and this is one of them.

A TEXAN elder who is holding a protracted meeting, calls for hearers after this fashion:

"Come one, come all,
Come great and small,
And hear the man
Who talks like Paul."

He must be worth going a long way to see.

THE Rutland, Vt., Herald suggests that perhaps these facts may hav something to do with the dearth of young men entering the ministry: "The Methodist ministers of New England receive an average salary of $500 a year, the Baptists a trifle more, the Presbyterians $740, and the Episcopalians $900." There are also other "facts," particularly those of Freethought and science, which probably influence the majority of sensible young men to abjure preaching.

GENERAL JACOB SHARPE, deputy governor of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Milwaukee, Wis., has forbidden the librarian of that institution to place THE TRUTH SEEKER upon file in its reading room. General Sharpe, we are informed by a correspondent, has probably never read THE TRUTH SEEKER, and the influence which induced him to issue this order is undoubtedly from the outside. We hav heretofore been sending the paper free to the National Home, for, though "Uncle Sam is rich enough to giv us all a farm," and to furnish chaplains for Congress and national institutions, we hav never yet heard of his supplying his servants and beneficiaries with a Liberal newspaper or other Freethought reading matter. The National Home has two chaplains, one Catholic and one Protestant, but hereafter no TRUTH SEEKER, unless its inmates subscribe for it personally. The physical portion of General Sharpe is paralyzed. His latest order would seem to indicate that his mental economy had suffered a similar shock.

A PORTION of the Shapira forgery of the book of Deuteronomy has reached America. The Independent gives the Ten Commandments as therein contained in the original Moabite characters, which present the appearance of a lot of deranged and damaged brackets out on parade, having been knocked around with a club, "pied," and set up again out of a bag. The document bears intrinsic evidence, based upon unity of style, of having done service as a Chinese laundry ticket. Here is the Independent's translation:

"I am God, thy God, who made thee a freeman out of the land of Egypt, from the house of servants.

"1. Ye shall hav no other gods. Thou shalt not make for yourselvs [a possible Hebrew construction, in which the nation is considered both collectivly and distributivly] an image, or any likeness of anything that is in the heavens above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down to them, and thou shalt not serve them. I am God, thy God.

"2. Sanctify. . . . Six days I made the heavens and the earth and all which is in them, and rested on the seventh day. Therefore thou also shalt rest; thou and thy cattle, and all which is thine. I am God, thy God.

"3. Honor thy father and thy mother, in order that thy days may be long. I am God, thy God.

"4. Thou shalt not kill the lives of thy brother [a strange construction and a strange order of the Hebrew words]. I am God, thy God.

"5. Thou shalt not commit adultery with the wife of thy neighbor. I am God, thy God.

"6. Thou shalt not steal the property of thy brother. I am God, thy God.

"7. Thou shalt not swear by my name to a falsehood; for I will be jealous of the sin of the fathers unto the third and fourth generation, to him who taketh my name to a falsehood. I am God, thy God.

"8. Thou shalt not bear false testimony against thy brother. I am God, thy God.

"9. Thou shalt not covet the wife of . . . his man servant, or his maid-servant, or anything which is his. I am God, thy God.

"10. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart. I am God, thy God.

"These ten words God spake. . . ."

The essay is evidently a plagiarism. We hav seen substantially the same sentiments expressed elsewhere.

BROTHER GARDNER may be illiterate, but he has an occasional streak of horse sense. In his latest address, he epitomizes the works of science with distinctness if not completeness. We take his words from the Detroit Free Press:

"Science has had a hard struggle, said Brother Gardner, at the Lime-Kiln Club, but she am now top ob de heap, an' kin reward her frens an' forgiv her enemies. How do we know dat de airth revolves on its axletrees, same as de wheels ob a wagon? Science has told us. How do we know how to cross de oshun? Science pints de way. How do we know dat de great desert of Sa-hary was once an oshun? Science has dug way down an' foun' clam shells an' sharks' jaw-bones. Widout science we should be a world widout overcoats in winter or sodywater in summer. We should fall from harvest apple trees an' pick ourselvs up widout knowin' wheder grabitashun or agitashun made us come down instead ob goin' up. We should see de moon, same as now, but some would say it was inhabited by monkeys, and oders would hav an ideah dat it was a splendiferous locality for a persimmon grove. De sun would rise an' set an' warp de shingles on de roofs, but men would go roun' bluffin' for bets dat she wasn't fifty miles away, an' was held in place by wires."

JAVA, the island which Michelet described as the land "dowered with fire," has been recently, and at last accounts still continues to be, the scene of the most destructiv volcanic eruptions known to history. The number of lives lost may reach seventy-five thousand, and the damage to property is almost beyond computation. Whole towns in the interior are submerged by the overflow of ashes and lava, and the accompanying commotion of the waters along the coast in the form of tidal waves has drowned thousands. The student of nature will find reason for these immense upheavals and eruptions in the disturbed conditions of the earth's molten interior. He will recognize the cause and study the effects. But how will the theologian regard these same phenomena? How will he account for this disaster in which scores of thousands of human lives are sacrificed? Will he hav the assurance to come forward with the assertion that it is a judgment of God upon the "worldliness" of the Javanese, as it was claimed that the recent cyclones were upon that of the people in the United States, particularly in the West? Who controls the earthquake and the volcano? "God!" Who is responsible for the slaughter of seventy-five thousand human beings on the island of Java? "God!" When the Brooklyn bridge accident occurred, in which less than a dozen lives were lost, the trustees were held to be to blame, and a most condign penalty was proposed. The Independent excused the trustees on the ground that they were not omniscient, and therefore could not foresee the calamity which was so soon to follow the opening of the bridge. Can it bring the same apology to bear upon the case of the infinit assassin who has carried death and slaughter unparalleled into one of the most favored lands on his footstool? The believers in the existence of a God are guilty of blasphemy when they attribute to him the power to avert the afflictions and disasters with which the inhabitants of the earth are from time to time visited, and in the way of which he has never been known to place the slightest obstacle. If they wish to defend his claim to omniscience at the expense of his reputation for goodness, they are at liberty to do so; they may also continue to worship him; but in the name of humanity we urge them not to ask us to do the same. Such a being has no claim to the respect, much less the worship, of any one.

Michigan Liberalists and Spiritualists.

SECRETARY S. B. MCCRACKEN, of Detroit, has kindly furnished us with the following report of the Michigan Spiritualists' and Liberalists' Fifth Annual Camp-meeting: "The fifth annual camp-meeting of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists was held at Flint, according to appointment, August 17th to 27th. The meeting was presided over by the president, W. J. Cronk, who, however, alternated the duties of the chair with the late president, Mr. L. S. Burdick. The exercises were of that decided and marked character that might be looked for from the principal speakers in attendance, such as J. H. Burnham, Charles A. Andrus, M. Babcock, Mrs. H. S. Lake, and Mrs. J. H. Severance. Mr. H. F. Peck entertained the meeting with music and song, and also gave two or three lectures. The local society at Flint extended a most cordial and earnest welcome to the meeting, the speakers' stand being elegantly decorated with flowers and festooned with evergreens, the whole being overhung by the national flag as a canopy. This feature was the work of the enterprising and spirited ladies of the society. Owing to causes that need not be enumerated, the meeting was not so large as some former ones hav been. The attendance the first Sunday was about 1,000, and on the last Sunday 1,200 to 1,500. The deliberations, however, were most harmonious and satisfactory, and in a business sense the discussions served to giv a clear understanding of the position the association and of the state work of which it forms the nucleus, and demonstrated that it is in a better position for activ and efficient work than ever before."

COL. A. H. DAWSON speaks at the Liberal Club, the 7th. German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th st.

Poetry.

An Agnostic View.

From the New York Star.

At the end of every road there stands a wall
Not built by hands, impenetrable, bare;
Behind it lies an unknown land, and all
The paths men plod lead to it and end there.

Each man, according to his humor, paints
On that bare wall strange landscapes dark or bright,
Peopled with forms of friends or forms of saints,
Hells of despair or Edens of delight.

Then to his fellows, "Tremble!" or "Rejoice!"
The limner cries, "For lo! the land beyond!"
And ever acquiescent to his voice
Faint echoes from that painted wall respond.

But now and then with sacrilegious hand
Some one wipes off those painted landscapes all,
Muttering, "O fools and slow to understand,
Behold your bourne—the impenetrable wall!"

Whereat an eager, angered crowd exclaims:
"Better than yon dead wall, though pale and faint,
Our faded Edens. Better fiends and flames
By Fancy painted in her coarsest paint

"On the blind, bald, unquestionable face
Of that obstruction, than its cold, unclad,
Uncalous emptiness, without a trace
Of any prospect either good or bad!"

And straightway the old work begins again
Of picture painting. And men shout, and call
For response to their pleasure or their pain,
Getting back echoes from that painted wall.

Why His Soul was Not at Peace.

"Parson, I'se somehow not right in my min';
But, sarchin' myself, I 'clar I can't fin'
De cause what at present am trublin' me so,
An' dogged if I knows why my sperits is low.
You told me dat when I come inter de church
My soul it would shine like de gold on a perch,
An' dat neber no more I'd be heavy an' dark,
But gay an' as free as de bluebird an' lark.

"I'se tried hard ter lib ter de gospel yer preach,
An' has hung ter my Bible wid de suck ob a leach;
I has sold all my cotton an' gin ter de po'
As much as my neighbors and mebby so mo';
At church I'se been droppin' de dimes in de box,
An' fur de whole cause I has worked like a ox,
An' 'clar I doan' know why my heart it am sad
When de Lawd hissef knows I'se done nothin' bad."

"My frien'," said the preacher, "I knows ye air good
An' would gin' ter de church much mo' if ye could;
But ginnin' ter church ain't all ob de fight—
Yer should gin ter de preacher—dat strikes me as right.
It lightens de heart and oils up de soul—
Come, gin me a half ob dat hog what yer stole."

"My gracious alive!" the member replied;
"Does yer tink, Bruder Jeems, dat ter yer I'se lied?
As de Lawd is my jedge, as I kneels at dis log,
I'll swar by de trone dat I neber eats hog.
As true as de gospel what St. Peter wrote,
De meat what I tuck, good parson, was shoat.
He's fat as a bear, jes rollin' in grease!
Come down ter de house an' I'll gin yer a piece!"

OPIE P. READ.

The Bad Boy Turns Agriculturist.

The bad boy has been induced to become a granger, and in an interview with the grocery man he thus relates his experience:

"I tell you there's a heap of difference between a deacon in a Sunday-school, telling about sowing wheat and tares, and a deacon out on a farm in a hurrying season, when there is hay to get in and wheat to harvest all at the same time. I went out to the farm Sunday evening with the deacon and his wife, and they couldn't talk too much about the nice time we would hav, and the fun; but the deacon changed more than forty degrees in five minutes after we got out to the farm. He jumped out of the wagon and pulled off his coat, and let his wife climb out over the wheel, and yelled to the hired girl to bring out the milk pail, and told me to fly around and unharness the horse, and throw down a lot of hay for all the work animals, and then told me to run down to the pasture and drive up a lot of cows. The pasture was half a mile away, and the cows were scattered around in the woods, and the musketoes were thick, and I got all covered with mud and burrs, and stung with thistles, and when I got the cattle near to the house the old deacon yelled to me that I was slower than molasses in the winter; and then I took a club and tried to hurry the cows, and he yelled at me to stop hurrying, 'cause I would retard the flow of milk. By gosh! I was mad. I asked for a musketo-bar to put over me next time I went after the cows, and the people all laughed at me, and when I sat down on the fence to scrape the mud off my Sunday pants, the deacon yelled like he does in the revival, only he said, 'Come, come; procrastination is the thief of time. You get up and hump yourself and go and feed the pigs.' Well, I lugged swill until I was homesick to my stomach, and then I had to clean off horses and go to the neighbors, about a mile away, to borrow a lot of rakes to use the next day. I was so tired I almost cried, and then I had to draw two barrels of water with a well bucket for washing the next day, and by that time I wanted to die. It was most nine o'clock, and I began to think about supper, when the deacon said all they had was bread and milk for supper Sunday night, and I rasseled with a tin basin of skimmed milk and some old back number bread, and wanted to go to bed, but the deacon wanted to know if I was heathen enough to want to go to bed without evening prayers. There was no one thing I was less mashed on than evening prayers about that minute, but I had to take a prayer half an hour long on top of that skimmed milk, and I guess it curdled the milk, for I hadn't been in bed more than half an hour before I had the worst colic a boy eve had, and I thought I should die all alone up in that garret, on the floor, with nothing to make my last hours pleasant but some rats playing with ears of seed corn on the floor, and mice running through some dry pea pods. Well, I got through the colic and was just getting to sleep when the deacon yelled for me to get up and hustle down-staire. I thought maybe the house was on fire, 'cause I smelt smoke, and I got into my trousers and came down-stairs on a jump, yelling 'fire,' when the deacon grabbed me and told me to get down on my knees, and before I knew it he was into the morning devotions; and then he said 'amen,' and jumped up and said for us to fire breakfast into us quick and get to work doing the chores. I looked at the clock, and it was just three o'clock in the morning—just the time pa comes home and goes to bed in town when he is running a political campaign. Well, sir, I had to jump from one thing to another from three o'clock in the morning till nine at night, pitching hay, driving reaper, raking and binding, shocking wheat, hoeing corn, and everything, and I never got a kind word. I spoiled my clothes, and I think another week would make a pirate of me. But during it all I had the advantage of a pious example. I tell you, you think more of such a man as the deacon if you don't work for him, but only see him when he comes to town and you hear him sing 'Heaven is My Home' through his nose. Heaven is farther from his home than any place I ever heard of. He would be a good mate on a Mississippi river steamboat if he could swear, and I guess he could soon learn. The only way I got a chance to come to town was to tell the farmer I could sell cabbages to you for a shilling apiece. I knew you sold them for fifteen cents, and I thought you would giv a shilling. So the farmer said he would pay me my wages in cabbages at a shilling apiece and only charge me a dollar for the horse and wagon to bring them in. So you only pay three cents. Here are thirty cabbages, which will come to ninety cents. I pay a dollar for the horse, and when I get back to the farm I owe the farmer ten cents, besides working a week for nothing. Oh, it is all right. I don't kick, but this ends farming for Hennery; he knows when he has enough of an easy life on a farm. He prefers a hard life, breaking stones on the streets, to an easy, dreamy life on a farm.

"Now, you take the cabbages and giv me ninety cents, and I will go home and borrow ten cents to make up the dollar, and send my chum back with the horse and wagon and my resignation. I was not cut out for a farmer." And while the grocery man was unloading the cabbages the boy went off to look for his chum, and later the two boys were seen driving off toward the farm with two fishpoles sticking out of the hind end of the wagon.

STANDARD BOOKS.

Sold by D. M. Bennett. Clinton Pl., N. Y.

HUMBOLDT LIBRARY OF SCIENCE.

In paper covers. Two cents each additional for postage.

Price, 15 Cents Each Number.

No. 1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.

No. 2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."

No. 4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Rev. Charles Kingsley.

No. 7. The Conservation of Energy. With numerous illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.

No. 8. The Study of Languages, brought back to its true principles. By C. Marcel.

No. 9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 10. The Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.

No. 11. The Naturalist on the River Amazons. A record of 11 years of travel. By
No. 12. Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S.

No. 13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alex. Bain, LL.D.

No. 14. The Wonders of the Heavens. Thirty-two illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.

No. 15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.

No. 16. The Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 18. Lessons in Electricity. Sixty illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.

No. 19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 20. The Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.

No. 21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.

No. 22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.

No. 23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainright, D.D.

No. 24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.

NOTE—The preceding numbers are 4to form—like Harpers' Franklin Square Library. The numbers which follow are 8vo., the size of Harpers' Monthly.

No. 25. The Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford Univ.

No. 26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.

No. 27. The History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.

No. 28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.

No. 29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.

No. 30. The Study of Words. By Richard
No. 31. Chenevix Trench.

No. 32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.

No. 33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen

No. 34. The Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.

No. 35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and others.

No. 36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H Huxley.

No. 37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By Prof. John Tyndall.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid,

FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

A REMARKABLE BOOK!

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,
JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
30tf Syracuse, N. Y.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S

SOCIOLOGY;

OR,

The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.

WITH AN APPENDIX

ILLUSTRATED.

Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1.

Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.

Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER,
43 Clinton Place, New York

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

WETTSTEIN'S

JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire. 200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound,
Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man
Price 10 cents. Address,
THE TRUTH SEEKER.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.
Write for Catalogues and Terms.
10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland. Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations.
290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.

IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusively that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
Price, $2.00. TRUTH SEEKER Office, 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

TESTIMONIALS:

Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

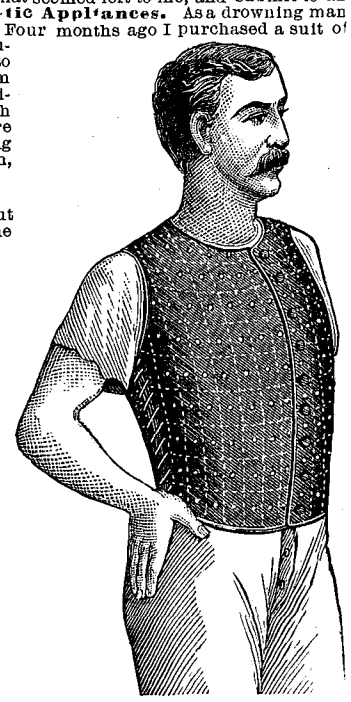
Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:

OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.



DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.

DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00

Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
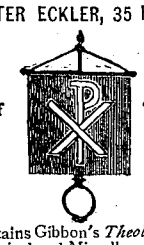
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.



History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00

Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

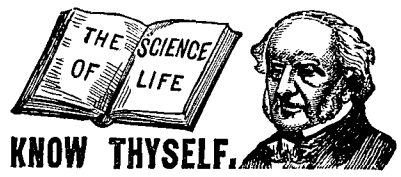
For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS

A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.



There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposite a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"

Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days.

Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

OUR race is as susceptible of improvements as the races of any of the animals below us. If it is found profitable to spend time, care, and expense in improving the breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine, is is not vastly more important to hav a care for securing a vigorous, healthful, long-lived human progeny?—D. M. Bennett.

WORMS are up in the market, and they hav to thank Charles Darwin, the immortal author of the theory of evolution, for their new position; but from days of old they were not without patrons and protectors, as witness the following extracts:

CRUSH not that helpless worm! Turn thy hasty foot aside.
Do not lightly take the life thou canst not giv.
—Gisborne.

OF comfort no man speak;
Let's talk of graves and worms and epitaphs:
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
—Shakspere.

I WOULD not enter on my list of friends,
Though grand with polished manners and fine sense,
The man who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
An inadvertent step may crush the snail
That crawls at evening in the public path,
But he that has humanity, forewarned,
Will step aside and let the reptil liv,
For they are as free to liv, and to enjoy that life,
As God was free to make them at the first,
Who, in his sovereign wisdom, made them all.
—Cowper.

IN the darkest hour through which a human soul can pass, whatever else is doubtful, this, at least, is certain: If there be no God and no future state, yet even then it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be brave than a coward.—Rev. F. W. Robertson.

THE more readily we admit the possibility of our own cherished convictions being mixed with error, the more vital and helpful whatever is right in them will become; and no error is so conclusivly fatal as the idea that God will not allow us to err, though he has allowed all other men to do so.—Ruskin.

CONSEQUENCES determin the quality of an action. If consequences are good, so is the action. If actions had no consequences, they would be neither good nor bad. Man did not get his knowledge of the consequences of actions from God, but from experience and reason. If man can, by actual experiment, discover the right and wrong of actions, is it not utterly illogical to declare that they who do not believe in God can hav no standard of right and wrong? Consequences are the standard by which actions are judged. They are the children that testify to the real character of their parents. God or no God, larceny is the enemy of industry—industry is the mother of prosperity—prosperity is a good, and therefore larceny is an evil. God or no God, murder is a crime. There has always been a law against larceny, because the laborer wishes to enjoy the fruit of his toil. As long as men object to being killed, murder will be illegal.—Ingersoll.

THEY of the old Norse belief understood in their heart that it was indispensable to be brave; that Odin would hav no favor for them, but despise and thrust them out if they were not brave. Consider, too, whether there is not something in this! It is an everlasting duty, valid in our day as in that—the duty of being brave. Valor is still value. The first duty of a man is still that of subduing fear. We must get rid of fear; we cannot act at all till then. A man's acts are slavish, not true but spurious; his very thoughts are false; he thinks, too, as a slave and coward till he has got fear under his feet. Odin's creed, if we disentangle the real kernel of it, is true to this hour. A man shall and must be valiant; he must march forward and quit himself like a man, trusting imperturbably in the appointment and choice of the upper powers; and, on the whole, not fear at all. Now and always, the completeness of his victory over fear will determin how much of a man he is.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

I FREELY admit that there is no recorded end of a life that I know of more entirely brave and manly than that of Captain John Brown, of which we know every minutest detail, as it happened in the full glare of our modern life not twenty years ago. About that, I think, there would scarcely be disagreement anywhere. The very men who allowed him to lie in his bloody clothes till the day of his execution, and then hanged him, recognized this. "You are a game man, Captain Brown," the sheriff said in the wagon. "Yes," he answered, "I was so brought up. It was one of my mother's lessons. From infancy I hav not suffered from physical fear. I hav suffered a thousand times more from bashfulness;" and then he kissed a negro child in its mother's arms, and walked cheerfully on to the scaffold thankful that he was "allowed to die for a cause, and not merely to pay the debt of nature, as all must."—Hughes's Manliness of Christ.

To the very young in their enthusiasm the object of their worship is perfect, is divine. It is well for them thus to regard those that are above them, for looking upward toward those who hav attained a loftier level than our own leads also to movement upward. With the attainment comes the altogether inevitable shock of disappointment as the perfect is recognized as imperfect, the divine as human. The riper mind, still retaining the reverence for that which is stronger, gentler, in any fashion better than itself, ceases to gift the objects of its worship with attributes or origin other than natural. So also with the world's hero-worship. When the world is young its heroes are gods or the offspring of gods. They also are divine in their nature. As the world grows in years the heroes come to be regarded as very remarkable men, with like passions, weaknesses, sins, to our own. Jesus in the past was worshiped as divine. Jesus to-day is largely regarded, and in the future will be universally regarded, as a great and good man.—Dr. Aveling.

Odds and Ends.

THE poultry farmer and the carriage maker know how to make a coop pay.

"BE jabers!" exclaimed an Irishman, "I've slept sixteen hours. I went to bed at eight and got up at eight."

MATRIMONY is said to be a lottery, but up to the hour of going to press no law has been enacted prohibiting the use of the males.

"IN what condition was the patriarch Job at the end of his life?" asked the Sunday-school teacher. "Dead," calmly responded the American boy.

"MOTHER, why are angels always little boys and never little girls?" The mother, after long reflection—"To avoid scandals in paradise, my child."

AFTER a silence of twelve years a man wrote his folks that he had the leading position in the largest livery establishment in the West. He led the horses to water.

THE early apple cometh, and the undertaker hummeth, and his face is lighted up with joys; and he calculates that colic, with its twinges diabolic, will double up and spifilicate the boys.

IT is a question if a summer vacation is of any practical benefit to a clergyman. In three months a congregation lose an amount of piety that a hard winter's work will scarcely recover.

LONGFELLOW said: "In this world a man must be either anvil or hammer." Longfellow was wrong, however. Lots of men are neither the activ hammer nor the sturdy anvil. They are nothing but bellows.

"YOU must bathe regularly," said a Springfield physician gravely, as he looked at the patient's tongue and felt his pulse. "But, doctor, I do," returned the sick man; "I go in swimming regularly every Fourth of July."

A MINISTER, hearing a boy say, "Bother these musketoes!" reproved him, saying that, like all other creatures, they were doubtless made for some good end. "That may be," said the boy, "but I don't like the end that I feel, at any rate."

"YES," said the deacon, "the organist certainly did play opera-bouffe airs and the can-can in his voluntary yesterday; but, dear me, I can't kick up a row about it without giving myself away by showing that I recognize the music."—Boston Post.

"I WILL and bequeath," said Pat, "to my beloved wife Bridget all my property without reserve; to my oldest son Patrick one-half of the remainder; and to Dennis, my youngest son, the rest. If anything is left, it may go to Terence O'Carty in Melbourne!"

A LITTLE daughter of severely orthodox parents had an idea that heaven was a pretty strait-laced sort of a place, and the other day accosted her mother as follows: "Mama, when I die and go to heaven, don't you suppose they'll let me go down to the bad place on Saturday afternoons to play?"

"MY son," asked a Sunday-school teacher, "what do you know of the proverb regarding people who reside in glass houses?" "I don't know nothin'," was the response, "about the proverb, but I know that people wot liv in glass houses ortent to lay abed late in the morning unless they pull down the blinds."

IN a suburban city, a few days ago, a widowed groom of seventy led to the matrimonial altar a blushing widow of fifty-two. At the conclusion of the ceremonies some one proposed to enliven the occasion by singing. But the feelings of the happy couple may be imagined when the company struck up and sung with hearty enthusiasm, "What shall the harvest be?"

"NOTHING is wasted on our road," said a railroad official who was under examination the other day as to the condition of his line. "There is not a road in the world that utilizes everything as we do." "Do you put everything to some use?" asked a lawyer. "Always," replied the official. "You can't name a thing that we do not derive some benefit from." "Ever had a wash-out?" asked the lawyer, sarcastically. "We hav." "To what use did you put that?" "We watered the stock with it." The witness was allowed to depart in triumph.

WHEN younger days hav flown,
And we are older grown,
We sit and muse—
We've got the blues.

Morning and night we fret,
And cold, or dry, or wet,
In petulance pout—
We've got the gout.

We hav accomplished naught,
Our fight was poorly fought—
Gee whiz—
The rheumatiz!

BETWEEN his pearly teeth a pick,
In his hand a little stick,
Pointed toes, yard of collar,
In his pocket half a dollar.

Spike-O pants, color light;
Can't sit down—awful tight.
Very tired—standing breeches;
"'Fraid to squat—burst the stitches."

Little "Dudine" passes by—
"Langtry bang"—heaves a sigh;
Smiles a smole, bobs her sash:
Mr. "Dude" gets a mash.

Dudine "thirsty"—Delmonico's,
Sugared water—lemon squoze;
Eyes bewitching, smile intense;
He don't smile—sixty cents.

Tries to borrow from the mash;
She turns red—nary cash.
Noise is heard of bursting stitches,
Awful sounds of rending breeches.

Girl-ee faints, Dude-ee flops;
No more mashes—curtain drops.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF ME ICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N.Y.
63 Broadway, Brooklyn, E. D.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and have been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

MR. WILSON, Dear Sir: Please send me a few circulars in regard to your curativ garments. I hav been telling several parties about them. I hav some friends who hav used them with great and pleasing results, and I would like to promote their use.
Yours, THOMAS W. BREWER,
Manasquan, N. J.

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

NO CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 50cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city.

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT
33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

Interrogatories to Jehovah.
Being 3,000 questions propounded to his Jewish Godship upon a great variety of subjects.
BY D. M. BENNETT.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75cents.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 37. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, September 15, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THERE are ministers who will never be able to hold a large congregation until they become chaplains to the penitentiary.

THE anti-Jewish riots hav been renewed in Hungary, and one Israelite was killed and four wounded. Their surviving relativs will not be likely to "come to Jesus" right away.

THE Norristown Herald relates that when a church committee called upon a merchant for a subscription towards the oyster supper, he liberally offered to contribute the oyster—and yet they were not satisfied.

THE church reporter of the Boston Post states that just before the sermon the parson called on Deacon Bloodgood for a prayer, and felt the force of the slur when the deacon gave 'em, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

A WASHINGTON preacher, who is suing for divorce from his wife on the ground of ill-treatment, says that she knocked him down with a chair, pounded him with a hickory cane, and hit him with a heavy water pitcher.

ACCORDING to the law of the Catholic church, no book written by a Catholic, no matter what subject it treats of, history, geography, or even agriculture, may be printed without its formal approbation or imprimatur of the bishop in whose diocese the printing is done. Any bishop may invoke this law at his pleasure.

THERE is a refreshing frankness about Prof. Christian D. Ginsburg's manner of dealing with humbugs. His long report to Librarian Bond, of the British Museum, on Mr. Shapira's dirty rolls of leather, begins as follows, without any beating around the bush: "Dear Mr. Bond: The manuscript of Deuteronomy which Mr. Shapira submitted to us for examination is a forgery."

SAYS the Christian Observer: "During the drought of 1881 many a man, no doubt, wondered why rain did not speedily come in answer to the numberless petitions offered. Yet the answer did come, unseen to us. What we really needed was fertility for our fields. And the Lord, in answer to our prayers, made the drought enrich the soil and add to its fertility for future years more than immediate rain would hav done." How fertil the desert of Sahara must be by this time!

THE Rev. Mr. Leper, of Trenton, Iowa, fell in with a stranger who persuaded him to draw $750 from the bank to engage in a money-making scheme which the stranger had unfolded. When the clergyman carried his money to a place of meeting he found the other man shuffling three cards. He was drawn gently into a monte speculation and permitted to win. Thinking that he saw an opportunity to double his original $750 and his winnings, he risked all his money on a card. The amount obtained from him is among the largest ever taken from a clerical dupe.

IT is funny to think of the Auto-da-fe as being repeated at this late day in Spain; but such is the fact. A few weeks ago 1,300 copies of an introduction to reading and arithmetic for the use of Protestant children were sent to Spain. The reading portion consisted simply of selections from the gospels without note or comment. They were, however, seized by the custom-house authorities at Barcelona, and solemnly burnt as heretical literature.—Independent. The love of the Catholics for the Protestants and their Bible is plainly evidenced in the above conflagration act, but how these kind offices must endear the mother church to the Protestants! In old times these two sects burnt each others' bodies as well as books. At present the Catholic customs officers are burning Protestant books as heretical, and Protestant officers are confiscating Ingersoll, Paine, and Volney as heretical. One occurs in Spain, the other in Canada. The Protestants are not very logical or consistent in denouncing the Catholic church for what they do themselvs. We would like to hav the Independent point out the difference between burning books in Spain that are heretical to the Catholic church and confiscating and destroying by fire or otherwise books in Canada that are heretical to Protestantism.

THE Mercury says: "If the churches would emulate the example set by the ex-Union and ex-Confederate soldiers, and pull together, what a happy brotherhood we would hav." To which the Texas Sunday Gazetteer replies: "We sincerely hope that time will never come. The churches were a 'happy brotherhood' for about a thousand years, and they made it red-hot (literally, not figurativly) for those who did not agree with them. The Reformation meant division, and the churches hav kept on dividing ever since, and the more they divide the faster knowledge increases, the more liberal we become, and the more rapidly the world advances intellectually and morally."

Two Mormon elders began a meeting a few nights ago in Cometa county, Ga. The meeting was well attended. After singing and prayer, one of the elders began a sermon on the beauties of Mormonism. He had not spoken long before a gruff voice came from the audience, saying, "Put him out." This was followed by a volley of eggs that were not strictly fresh. The missionaries took up their gripsacks and made off, chased by the crowd. They proved to be able runners, and when they were last seen by their pursuers they were headed toward the west. Public sentiment is in favor of substituting buckshot for eggs in the event of further attempts to make converts in that region to Mormonism.

SLAVERY in Cuba is described by Mattie Young in the Kansas City Times. She was born in Nashville, Tenn., and, at the age of 3, was stolen by Robinson's circus. They made a dancing girl of her, and took her to Cuba. There, seven years later, she was auctioned to a planter whose place is eight miles out of Havana. She goes on to say: "I was branded on the back with eighteen names, and as often as the scars dimmed I was branded again. I was made to plough like a horse. They hitched three women in harness, and made us drag the plow, one of us carrying a bit in the mouth. We were sometimes whipped three times a day, and we never knew what Sunday was." The girl at length escaped to a ship and landed in Galveston.

POLYGAMY is, according to Col. Godfrey of the Government Utah Commission, to be squelched by creating a division in the Mormon church. There are, at most, only 15,000 polygamists in the church; but the 120,000 monogamists hav winked at polygamy, and hence the polygamists hav ruled. Now that every polygamist is disfranchised, the monogamists see that their only hope of holding office lies in declaring against polygamy—and there are as ambitious politicians in Utah as anywhere. The Commission, Col. Godfrey says, hav prepared for recommendation to Congress a marriage law providing that all marriages shall be solemnized in certain public places before witnesses, and that the persons performing the ceremony, and the witnesses as well, shall make affidavit that they are not polygamists. The Commission will meet again in October next to investigate some contested election cases.

THE Rev. J. W. White, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Milroy, Pa., was last week deposed from the ministry by the Presbytery of Huntingdon, for heresy. The charges against Mr. White were that he holds and teaches that the sufferings of Christ were in no sense a satisfaction for violated law, nor a satisfaction to divine justice, and that the effect of the atonement is simply moral influence; that he denies the personality of the holy spirit, and the distinct and real personality af the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; that he holds that sin consists in acts only; that he holds that sin consists in Adam's sin; that he teaches and holds that the material body can not be raised again; that after death the soul takes with it a spiritual body, and that men can be saved by obedience to the moral law or Ten Commandments. During the trial the Rev. J. C. Wilhelm, pastor at Petersburg, Huntingdon county, created surprise and excitement by stating that he agreed with Mr. White in everyone of the views he expressed, and asked that his connection with the ministry be dissolved.

No church makes up its annual statistics more carefully than the Presbyterian. The figures showing the condition of affairs for this year, and comparing with previous years, are now issued. The official organs of the denomination speak in terms of mild satisfaction concerning the progress indicated by the figures. Yet these figures show that in comparison with the advances made by the powers of Satan, the Presbyterian church is hardly holding its own. The whole number of church-members is given at 600,725, which is 8,600 more than the number reported last year. The whole number of additions by conversion from the outside world is 29,389. As there are 5,860 churches, this is about five converts for each church. To keep these 5,680 churches going has required an expenditure of $7,140,000. This covers pastors' salaries and the running expenses; such as fuel, sextons' wages, and mortgage interest, and averages about $1,250 for each church. While it may be true that those who are already members of the Presbyterian church hav been sufficiently edified and built up in the faith to warrant this expenditure, it does not appear that the church is making many conquests from the world. As compared with the alleged triumphs of some of the evangelists, the results seem exceedingly meager. For instance, the report of an evangelist's labors last week in one church foots up fifty conversions. Another evangelist is said to hav been the means of converting 1,200 in an Illinois town. Possibly evangelistic arithmetic is flavored with exaggeration. But even allowing much for exaggeration and mistake, it would seem that the well-appointed ecclesiastical machinery of the Presbyterian church, worked by men of zeal, energy, and education, ought to bring forth larger results than an average of five converts for each church.—Sun.

A CORRESPONDENT sends us a copy of another bill for repairs of the machinery of salvation to go with that published a few weeks since. It seems that a painter had been employed to restore the faded divinities of a Swiss chapel, charging therefor the modest sum of fifty-nine francs and eleven centimes, which the stingy curate refused to pay, saying the church committee would require a bill of particulars. This he produced as follows, the copy being taken from a watch crystal in the Swiss department of the Vienna Exposition: "Corrected and revised the Ten Commandments, 5 francs and 12 centimes; embellished and renewed Pontius Pilate, and put a new ribbon in his bonnet, 3 francs 6 centimes; put a new tail on the rooster of St. Peter, and mended his comb, 9 francs 20 centimes; replumed and gilded the left wing of the Guardian Angel, 4 francs 17 centimes; washed the servant of the High Priest, and put carmine on his cheeks, 5 francs 12 centimes; renewed Heaven, adjusted two stars, gilded the Sun, and renewed the Moon, 7 francs 14 centimes; reanimated the Flames of Purgatory, and restored some souls, 6 francs 6 centimes; revived the Flames of Hell, put a new tail on the Devil, mended his left hoof, and did several jobs for the Damned, 4 francs 10 centimes; put new spatter dishes on the Son of Tobias, and dressing on his back, 2 francs; cleaned the ears of Balaam's Ass, and shod him, 3 francs 7 centimes; put ear-rings in the ears of Sarah, 2 francs 4 centimes; rebordered the robe of Herod, and readjusted his wig, 4 francs 4 centimes; put a new stone in David's Sling, enlarged the head of Goliath, and extended his legs, 3 francs 2 centimes; decorated Noah's Ark, 3 francs; mended the shirt of the Prodigal Son, and cleaned the pigs, 4 francs 9 centimes. Total, 59 francs 11 centimes."

News of the Week.

TYPHOID fever is raging in this city.

YELLOW fever is spreading at Pensacola, Fla.

COL. INGERSOLL has returned to Washington.

EARTHQUAKE shocks hav again been felt at Ischia.

LIMA felt a severe shock of earthquake on the 10th.

FRANK JAMES, the noted murderer, has been acquitted.

VICTOR HUGO has been tendered a banquet at Geneva.

THE first telegraph line ever operated in Siam was opened this week.

THE lord chancellor of Ireland, Right Hon. Hugh Law, Q. C., died on the 10th.

A FRENCH aeronaut succeeded in crossing from France to England in his balloon on the 10th.

MR. BLAINE says he is out of politics and will not be a candidate for the presidency next year.

THE Italians in this city are beginning to take an interest in politics and hav formed a Democratic club.

THE will of the late Comte de Chambord shows that the dead Bourbon was worth about $20,000,000.

A RAG-PICKER was killed by a railroad train at Reading, Pa., the other day, who was the father of forty-two children.

THE belief is generally prevalent in Europe that France and China will fight over the question of who shall hav the protectorate of Annam.

A MORMON elder and two women members of the church of the Latter Day Saints, are in jail at Dedham, Mass., for their immoral practices.

EX-SENATOR SHARON has been arrested on a charge of adultery preferred by a Miss Aggie Hill, of San Francisco. The affair is looked upon as a blackmailing operation.

THE daily papers record the fact that S. J. Randall, M. C., has served on a petit jury in Philadelphia. That a politician should be useful like other men appears to surprise the "great editors."

THE Rev. Thomas H. Oakley, general delivery clerk in the post-office at Cleveland, Ohio, charged with stealing from prepaid parcels he stamps, selling them and pocketing the proceeds, was taken in charge by the police recently.

THE Northern Pacific railroad was formally completed on the 8th by the driving of a gold spike at Gold Spike, Mon. Many prominent men witnessed the ceremony, and the occasion was made one of general rejoicing. It is expected the stock will now go up.

A MEMBER of the Evansville, Ind., Trinity church choir winked at another member's wife, and when shortly after they met in the pastor's study there was a fight. The man whose wife had been insulted knocked the other fellow down. A suit for $5,000 damage is the result.

THE editor of the Leadville, Col., Herald was recently assaulted and nearly killed by an alderman of the town, who took exception to a remark which he (the editor) made in the alderman's presence. The editor is spoken of as young man of brilliant attainments and the alderman as a notorious bully.

CONNECTICUT has furnished another mysterious murder case. On the night of September 2d Rose Ambler, of Stratford, was on her way home from a visit at the house of her affianced husband. The next morning her dead body was found beside the road. No clue to the murderer or murderers has as yet been traced. The town has offered $1,000 reward for the man who killed her.

Communications.

False Claims.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE THE NEW YORK FREETHINKERS' ASSOCIATION, SEPTEMBER 1, 1883, BY JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Among the intelligent classes of Europe and America Christian theology is practically dead. Yet, notwithstanding this, Christian priestcraft flourishes and the Christian church is upheld. There are in Christendom 500,000 priests and $5,000,000,000 worth of ecclesiastical property. To these priests are accorded privileges accorded to no other men, while this vast accumulation of wealth is exempt from the burden of taxation. And why? Because, aside from the truth or falsity of her dogmas, it is claimed that the church has done, and is doing, a beneficent work for mankind. I propose to-day to meet these supporters of the church upon their own ground, and discuss this subject from a utilitarian rather than from a radical standpoint.

THE CHURCH AND MORALITY.

It is claimed that the church is the conservator of public morals—the great moralizing agent of the world. This claim is false. The church is not a promoter of morality. Christianity is a system of religion, and religion and morality are not synonymous terms. A religion is a system of faith and worship pertaining to an imaginary being called God; morality pertains to the conduct of men as social beings in relation to each other. Religion is supposed to relate to the welfare of man in a future life and in another world; morality relates to the welfare of man now and here. Christianity ignores morality. Many of its dogmas are utterly demoralizing in their nature.

Take the doctrin of total depravity, or moral depravity, if you please. What effect has a belief in this dogma upon morality? To believe this doctrin you must feel that you are a living example of its truthfulness; you must be depraved. Take a little child; tell it that it is a poor, depraved wretch; instill this into its mind from day to day, and what is the result? This child becomes a low, immoral being—a Christian, so far as the doctrin of moral depravity is concerned.

Take the doctrin of vicarious atonement. Has the human brain ever conceived a more infamous idea than this? The idea that the wrath of a merciful God can only be appeased by the sacrifice of his innocent son! Here is a father with a family of children; all of them are depraved villains save one, a bright and noble boy. The father has become so enraged at the conduct of his vicious children that the only way he can become reconciled to them is by having them murder this innocent child. This murder atones for all their crimes. Washed in the blood of their murdered brother, they become pure and holy. By this act they merit and obtain the renewed affection of their parent. Such a doctrin is shocking to every sense of justice, is antagonistic to every principle of morality.

Take the doctrin of forgivness for sin. What effect has this upon public morals? Teaching that the effect of a cause can be arrested—that the penalties of violated law can be evaded—is a license for crime. Suppose that Governor Cleveland were to issue a proclamation proclaiming that all convicts now confined in the prisons of Auburn, Albany, and Sing Sing would be released by simply making application for pardon and expressing regret for the various crimes committed; suppose that he should go further and proclaim that in the future all persons committing crime would be granted a full and free pardon by complying with the same provision. What effect would this hav upon the morals of your state? Now, this is just what the church teaches respecting her moral governor of the universe. This doctrin of the forgivness for sin has done more to foster vice, to fill our jails with criminals, and furnish candidates for the gallows than all other causes combined.

Take the doctrin of future rewards and punishments. The church teaches that beyond this life and beyond this world are two conditions or localities, called heaven and hell. This heaven is a reward. But a reward for what? Good conduct? No! A reward for believing doctrins which no rational human being can believe. This hell is a punishment. A punishment for what? For crimes committed? No. For a failure to believe what idiots and demons only can believe.

It has been claimed that the good will be rewarded and the wicked punished. None but heretics claims this. What taught the church's founder, Christ?

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark xvi, 16).

What taught the great exponent of Christian doctrins, Paul?

"A man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, . . . for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified" (Gal. ii, 16).

"To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness" (Rom. iv, 5).

"Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law" (Rom. iii, 28).

What taught the founder of Protestantism, Luther?

"Every doer of the law and every moral worker is accursed, for he walketh in the presumption of his own righteousness" (Table Talk).

"If men only believe enough in Christ they can commit adultery and murder a thousand times a day without perilling their salvation" (Ibid).

"He that says the gospel requires works for salvation, I say flat and plain he is a liar" (Ibid).

What taught the founder of Methodism, Wesley? Referring to certain clergymen of England, he says:

"They are well pleased that their parishioners grow more diligent and honest. . . . Nay, they are glad that they are brought to practice both justice and mercy; in a word, to be moral men. But the truth is, the Methodists know and teach that all this is nothing before God" (Wesley's Mis. Works, vol. iii, p. 99).

According to the teachings of the church, a man may liv a pure and noble life, and yet, if he does not believe her senseless dogmas, he is damned. A man may lead a life of vice and crime, and yet, if he believes, he is saved.

You are many of you familiar with the Merrick tragedy which occurred in Indianapolis some years ago—one of the most heartless murders ever committed. A brutal wretch strikes down in cold blood his faithful wife. The Rev. Dr. Baylis, the leading Methodist divine of Indianapolis, was Merrick's spiritual adviser. At his first visit the following colloquy took place, as reported in the Indianapolis Sentinel:

Baylis.—"I suppose you want me to giv you spiritual advice. Were you raised religiously?"

Merrick.—"My parents were Methodists. I was baptized in my infancy, and when I came to Indianapolis I joined Trinity church, attending as well as I could."

"Do you believe in the Bible?"

"Yes, I believe in the Bible."

"Do you believe that every word that is in the Old and New Testaments is true?"

"Yes."

"Do you believe in future rewards and punishments, in a heaven and hell that are endless in duration?"

"I do."

"Hav you any hope that if you are executed next Friday your soul will be saved?"

"Yes."

"Do you think that all your sins are forgiven?"

"I do."

This was enough. Merrick believed that he would be saved; his spiritual adviser believed that he would be saved, and if Christianity be true he was saved. The fatal Friday came, and Merrick was led forth for execution. Upon the scaffold he made a speech, and in that speech he said that he was prepared to die, that his sins were all forgiven, that it was but a step from the scaffold to glory; and all that he regretted was that his wife had been sent into eternity unprepared, and that he should not meet her in heaven.

Think of it! That fiendish butcher going up to heaven, that murdered woman down in hell! Yet so it was. She was lost—an honest, virtuous life; years of patient toil, and suffering, and unrequited love, counted for nought against her want of faith, and she must perish; while this inhuman monster, his hands dripping with the life-blood of his victim, was saved because "his faith had made him whole." When that cruel blow was struck, and death came to this poor woman, heaven's portals were closed to her. But when the trap-door was sprung beneath her murderer, there was a great bustle in heaven then—a faithful servant was about to enter into the joy of his Lord. I fancy I hear Jesus saying to the old man with the capacious bosom, "Abraham, hav that idiot, that dirty vagrant, Lazarus, and that thief I sent up nestle a little closer together and make room for Merrick."

The church has filled the world with artificial vices and with artificial virtues. The noblest deeds she places in the catalog of crime; the most degrading acts are passports to her heaven. So long as her teachings are followed, so long will moral anarchy prevail. When reason is dethroned, and a man's mind becomes confused and corrupted by the reception of irrational religious dogmas, his sense of moral duty must, as a natural consequence, become depraved. When your grocer is prepared to accept the doctrin of the trinity—to believe that three are and one is three—he is certainly prepared to believe that fifteen ounces is a pound. When your milkman becomes a Baptist and believes that a sinner plunged in water makes a good saint, he is ready to believe that a pound of chalk immersed in water will make a can of good milk. When your butcher partakes of the Eucharist and believes that a bite of stale bread is a piece of God, you must not be surprised to learn of his selling a tierce of beef tallow for prime lard. When men believe in special providences and the efficacy of prayer, and mistake human charity for divine mercy, it is not strange that society should be cursed with tramps and preachers.

That the claims made in behalf of Christianity as a moralizing force are false is clearly shown by the effect of its teachings upon those who hav received it. History records that in almost every instance its acceptance by a nation or community has been followed by a dissolution of morals.

The primitiv Christians hav been represented as models of virtue. That a sense of their weakness and the persecutions to which they were exposed would hav a tendency to counteract in some degree the demoralizing influence of their religious dogmas is fair to suppose. But were they free from vice? Let their great evangelist answer. Writing to one of his churches, Paul says:

"It is reported commonly that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the gentiles" (1 Cor. v, 1).

"Ye do wrong and defraud, and that your brethren" (Ibid vi, 8).

"Brother goeth to law with brother, and that before the unbeliever" (Ibid vi, 6).

What was the character of the Christians of the third century? Let the ecclesiastical historian answer. Says Mosheim:

"Many were sunk in luxury and voluptuousness, puffed up with vanity, arrogance, and ambition; possessed with a spirit of contention and discord, and addicted to many other vices" (Eccl. Hist. p. 73).

Come down a little further. Christianity has become the state religion of the Roman empire. Paganism has been almost entirely eradicated within her borders. But what is the moral condition of her people? Let Salvian, a Christian clergyman of the fifth century, say:

"The very church of God, which ought in all things to please God, what does it but provoke him to anger? With the exception of a very few who flee from vice, what is almost every Christian congregation but a sink of vices? For you will find in the church scarcely one who is not either a drunkard, or a glutton, or an adulterer, . . . or a robber, or a man-slayer, and, what is worse than all, almost all these without limit" (Miall's Memorials of Early Christianity, p. 366).

What of the middle centuries? Let Hallam speak:

"France reached her lowest point at the beginning of the eighth century, but England was, at that time, more respectable, and did not fall into complete degradation until the middle of the ninth. There could be nothing more deplorable than the state of Italy during the succeeding centuries" (Mid. Age, p. 460).

The Byzantine empire arises, and exists for a thousand years. In this empire the power of Christianity is supreme. Never in any other nation has ecclesiastical authority exercised such absolute control as here. If what the church affirms be true, then what a virtuous people must this be? Here vice must be unknown. But what is the real character of this model Christian government? Let the historian of European morals tell. Says Lecky:

"The universal verdict of history is that it constitutes, with scarcely an exception, the most thoroughly base and despicable form that civilization has yet assumed."

"The history of the empire is a monotonous story of the intrigues of priests, eunuchs, and women, of poisonings, of conspiracies, of uniform ingratitude, of perpetual fratricides" (Hist. Mor., vol. ii, p. 13).

Then comes the Protestant Reformation, but with it comes no reformation of Christian morals. The Roman Catholic and Eastern churches hav wrought the degradation of the rest of Europe, but it remains for the Protestant church to complete the demoralization of Germany. To the truth of this, Luther himself thus testifies:

"Under the papacy we were bad, but under the gospel we are seven—yea, more than seven times worse."

The church of England is established, but what does it do for the morals of her people? Let one of England's great historians answer. Says Macaulay:

"It is an unquestionable and a most instructiv fact that the years during which the political power of the Anglican hierarchy were in the zenith were precisely the years during which national virtue was at the lowest point" (Hist. Eng., vol. i, p. 141).

Thus this slimy serpent of superstition drags its sluggish length down through the centuries, leaving nought but pollution in its trail.

At the present time vice is most prevalent in those nations most loyal to the church—in Russia and Ireland, in Spain and Italy, in Mexico and Abyssinia. Protestant Germany was notorious for its ignorance and immorality. Compulsory education was adopted, and what is the result?—Infidel Germany presenting the highest standard of morals in Europe to-day. The most thoroughly religious city in England is the cathedral city of Canterbury. In this ecclesiastical capital religion has given birth to twins—ignorance and licentiousness. Of the various Christian denominations of the United States, the strongest numerically, the lowest intellectually, and the most devout religiously are the Roman Catholic and the Methodist. These denominations comprise one-fifth of our population, and furnish one-third of all our criminals. The most ignorant, the most immoral, and at the same time the most religious race in this country is the colored race. Its most distinguished representativ, however, is a Freethinker. And while a hundred colored clergymen are now languishing in prison for theft and adultery, Frederick Douglass has never been charged with either. Of the four men whose deaths excited the widest comment here last year, Longfellow and Emerson were unbelievers; Guiteau and Jesse James were Christians. The former were guided by the laws of natural morality; the latter were the legitimate fruits of "Christian morality."

The most debased criminal pleads "not guilty," but attempts to fasten his crime upon the innocent. The church, covered with crime, her robes stained with the blood of murdered babes and women, her coffers filled with the stolen wages of the servant girl and the inheritance of the helpless orphan, her devotees reveling in vice and relying upon a bankrupt salvation scheme to save them from its penalties, protests her innocence and charges all our crime to Infidels—to men and women too intelligent to believe her musty creeds, too honest to participate in her immoral acts, too brave to let them pass by unrebuked.

If crime is caused by unbelief, why is it that our jails and penitentiaries all are orthodox? that Christian necks so often wear the hangman's rope?

In 1873, Sir John Trelawney, a member of Parliament, moved that an examination of all the prisons of England and Wales be made with a view of ascertaining the religious belief of those confined in them. Here is the result: Roman Catholics, 38,581; Church of England, 96,097; Protestant Dissenters, 10,705; Jews, 256; Non Religionists, 279; total, 145,918.

Five hundred Christians to one Infidel!

Next, France. I quote from DeBow's "Review of the Census:" Roman Catholics, 18,939; Protestants, 598; Jews, 130; Mohammedans, 53; Atheists, 0.

Not one Atheist in the prisons of France. Yet a single Atheistical society of Paris numbers twenty thousand.

Canada. In the prisons of Ontario, a few years since, were: Roman Catholics, 918; Episcopalians, 765; Presbyterians, 152; Methodists, 64; Baptists, 3; total, Christians, 1,902; Freethinkers, 8.

Pennslvania. I take the following from the last biennial report of Western Penitentiary, of Pennsylvania.

Religious belief of prisoners received for 1881 and 1882: Catholics, 142; Methodists, 144; Presbyterians, 63; Baptists, 41; Episcopalians, 15; Lutherans, 42; other Christian denominations, 17; Jews, 2; no religious belief, 45.

Ohio. I quote from the chaplain's report for 1879. "The whole number of males registered at my office during the year was 601. Parental church relations as follows: Catholics, 133; Methodists, 172; Presbyterians, 59; Baptists, 66; Congregationalists, 11; Episcopalians, 33; Lutherans, 25; Christians, 18; United Brethren, 14; other denominations, 26; nonbelievers, 44.

Kansas. In his official report for 1880, Chaplain McCleery states that of the 605 convicts confined in the Kansas penitentiary, 489, or nearly five-sixths, were the sons and daughters of church-members. Of these convicts 219 had been actual members of various orthodox churches. The total population of Kansas is 1,000,000. The church population according to church statistics is 160,000. Thus the church population, comprising but one-sixth of the whole population, furnishes more than one-third of our Kansas criminals. According to this report 386 convicts had not been members of any church. Were they unbelievers? Not necessarily so. The ignorant masses outside the church are nominally Christians. A gentleman of Kansas wrote to Chaplain McCleery, propounding this question: "How many Infidels are confined in the Kansas penitentiary?" Chaplain McCleery is reported to hav replied in these words: "There is but one Infidel confined in the penitentiary and his Infidelity is of a mild form." Too mild, you see, to keep him out of the penitentiary!

While Christians claim that it is churches and religion that prevent crime, we claim that it is schools and intelligence that will free the world from vice. In proof of this I present some figures derived from the report of the United States commissioner of education for 1871. Under the head of Bavaria are given what are termed "some curious statistics." The kingdom of Bavaria comprises eight provinces. In four of these provinces the churches exceed in number the school-houses; in the remaining four there are more schools than churches. The following table shows the number of churches, the number of schools, and the number of criminals to each 10,000 inhabitants:

	Churches.	Schools.	Criminals.
Upper Bavaria,	55	20	67
Lower Bavaria,	44	20	87
Upper Palatinate,	47	26	69
Suabia,	42	23	61
Average,	47	22	71
Palatinate,	16	43	43
Upper Franconia,	17	24	44
Middle Franconia,	28	32	46
Lower Franconia,	18	37	38
Average,	20	34	43

Curious statistics! Curious to the Christians, no doubt. But not to us. Schools produce intelligence; and intelligence promotes virtue. Churches foster ignorance; and ignorance is the parent of vice. Transform your temples of superstition into temples of learning, let teachers take the place of priests, and the criminal problem will soon be solved.

THE CHURCH AND CIVILIZATION.

With a triumphant air the church points to the civilization of our age and claims it as her product. The civilization of our age is grand, but grand as it is, it hardly surpasses in many respects the culture and refinement that once adorned Egypt, Greece, and Rome. What a magnificent civilization was that of Greece! Two thousand years hav not effaced her intellectual splendors. Her palaces and monuments hav crumbled to decay; her sons and daughters slumber in pathetic dust; but her heroic deeds and noble thoughts, enshrined by genius in immortal words, liv on. Did Christianity hav aught to do with the civilization of this people? Certainly not; and were it not for the cloud of prejudice before his eyes, the Christian would clearly see that it did not produce our civilization. He would see that instead of the church having civilized the world, the Rationalistic world has for centuries been slowly civilizing the church.

The very nature of Christianity—I mean orthodox Christianity—precludes the possibility of progression as an inherent principle of itself; and whatever progress has been made, either in the church or outside of it, must be attributed to causes over which she has had no control. The church claims to hav the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Every proposed change, every new discovery, is to her a perversion of truth, and, hence, she opposes it. Were the church to sweep to universal empire, all progress would at once cease. Our Huxleys and Haeckels would be summarily disposed of, the eyes of science would be put out, and the eye of faith would become our only guide. Of the truth of this she has herself given conclusiv evidence. For centuries her power in Europe was supreme, and even Christian writers denominate these centuries the Dark Ages.

Not until Rationalism was born, not until science commenced her career and Christianity began to decay, did our modern civilization dawn. "For more than three centuries," says Lecky, "the decadence of theological influence has been one of the most invariable signs and measures of our progress." Says Carlyle, "Just in the ratio that knowledge increases, faith diminishes." "The middle ages were more religious than ours," says Strauss, in proportion to their ignorance and barbarism. Religion and civilization accordingly occupy, not an equal, but an inverted position regarding each other, so that with the progress of civilization, religion retreats.

Look at Europe to-day! Where Infidelity most abounds there is to be found the highest development, and where the church still retains its power there the greatest ignorance prevails. Under the snow-white banner of science march the intellectual hosts of England, France, and Germany; around the cross still throng the ignorant hordes of Russia, Italy, and Spain.

Not merely our civilization in general, but each particular element in this civilization, is claimed to be the product of the church.

THE CHURCH AND SCIENCE.

The church claims to be the friend and patron of science. And yet there has never been a scientific truth discovered that she has not tried to crush. Upon the brow of every distinguished scientist she has placed the brand of "Infidel." With sublime enthusiasm Bruno consecrated his life to the cause of science and philosophy. This friend of science burnt him at the stake. Not until he felt the touch of death upon him, and he had nothing to hope or fear from a cruel church, did Copernicus publish his discoveries. Catholics promptly suppressed his work, and Protestant Luther cast upon his grave the epithet of "fool." Galileo, in the face of popular theology, had the temerity to assert that the world moved. A dungeon's gloom was the penalty. Kepler gave to the world the fundamental laws of astronomical science; and because these laws failed to harmonize with the crude notions of Jewish barbarians, his Protestant friends drove him from the university he had so long and so highly honored. Upon the devoted heads of Bacon and Newton, Descartes and Laplace, Leibnitz and Humboldt—all the grand heroes of science—hav the shafts of Christian malice and ridicule been hurled. "Who shall number," says Prof. Huxley, "the patient and earnest seekers after truth, from the days of Galileo until now, whose lives hav been embittered and their good name blasted by the mistaken zeal of Bibliolaters?"

When a new scientific theory is advanced, the church opposes it because it conflicts with the teachings of the Bible. But when through the force of its own inherent truth that theory becomes an established fact, then the church accepts it, affirms that it is in perfect harmony with the Bible, and coolly informs the world that it is indebted to her for the discovery.

Take the Copernican theory. The Bible tells us that the earth is flat and angular, the center and chief part of the universe. For accepting and teaching the heliocentric doctrin, several scientists are burnt to death; Galileo saves his life by recanting, and Copernicus himself escapes martyrdom by dying before a funeral pyre can be erected. Nor is it Catholics alone who oppose the truth. Protestants are not less violent in their opposition to it. Phillip Melancthon declares that "it is a want of honesty and decency to assert such doctrins publicly." Martin Luther thus writes: "People gave ear to an upstart astrologer, who strove to show that the earth revolves, not the heavens or the firmament. . . . The fool wishes to reverse the entire science of astronomy. But sacred scripture tells us that Joshua commanded the sun to stand still, and not the earth." That is what the Rev. John Jasper, of Richmond, affirms to-day. Yet the entire church is ridiculing Jasper for knowing as much as Luther—for being orthodox in science.

Patient explorers in the field of geology throw a flood of light upon the morning of the world, revealing the falseness and absurdity of the Mosaic cosmogony. With frantic efforts the church endeavors to destroy the young science, but in vain. Then she attempts to reconcile the facts of geology with the fables of Genesis, and fails again. Now she is ready to admit that the story of creation, as told in Genesis, is only an allegorical fiction.

The evolution theory is promulgated. A million priests array themselvs against it. From nearly every pulpit comes the cry of "Darwin" and "monkey," accompanied by an idiotic sneer that more than half reveals the "missing link." But evolution triumphs. To-day the theory is accepted by every eminent scholar and scientist throughout the world. The church has again been vanquished, and now her representativs are coming forward and declaring that henceforth Christianity and evolution can dwell lovingly together. With what ease this theological baby swallows an unpalatable truth when powerless in the nurse's arms unable to thrust the spoon from her hand! In less that twenty years the church will be claiming Darwin, Spencer, Huxley, Haeckel, and Wallace as Christians, and pointing to their work as a monument of Christian civilization.

THE CHURCH AND LEARNING.

Christians boast of our schools and learning. Yes, but don't forget that "learning was thrust into Europe at the point of a Moorish lance"—that it was the Infidel followers of Mohammed that gave the first impulse to learning in Christendom. "The pagan literature of antiquity and the Mohammedan schools of science," says Lecky, "were the chief agencies in resuscitating the dormant energies of Christendom." Even Mosheim admits that "the Saracens may justly be considered the restorers of learning in Europe."

The church plunged Europe into mental darkness, and held it there for a thousand years. During all that time ignorance was a virtue and the pursuit of knowledge was a crime. The noblest literary monuments of Greece and Rome were given to the winds or to the flames. That vast repository of learning, the Alexandrian library, was destroyed, and Christians were responsible for its destruction. Christian councils prohibited ecclesiastics from reading secular books. Everywhere education was under the ban of the church. "In almost every council," says Hallam, "the ignorance of the clergy forms a subject for reproach. It is asserted by one held in 992 that scarcely a single person was to be found in Rome itself who knew the first elements of letters. Not one priest of a thousand in Spain, about the time of Charlemagne, could address a common letter of salutation to another."

When printing was invented, the church denominated it the black art; she denounced Faust as an emissary of the devil, and sought to take his life. When Caxton introduced the art into England, clerical dignitaries opposed it because it would prove "detrimental to religion." Sir William Berkeley, colonial governor of Virginia, thanked God that in his day there was not a printing-press nor a school in all Virginia to breed heresy.

Unable to suppress the growing desire for knowledge, the clergy seek to control it in the interests of the church. They cannot keep the people in absolute ignorance, and, next to ignorance, the best thing is a Christian education. The church is in favor of schools only as long as she is permitted to manage them. Catholics and Protestants are alike the enemies of secular education. In this country, Catholics oppose our public schools because unable to control them, and Protestants support them only because they hope to make them the instruments of Protestant propagandism.

THE CHURCH AND CHARITY.

Hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and other charitable institutions, it is claimed, are of Christian origin.

Every student of history knows this claim to be false. Charity is not a virtue peculiar to Christianity. In every age and in every country, when famin and disease hav stalked abroad,human hearts hav throbbed with sympathy, and human suffering has been relieved.

Rome always supplied the wants of her poor, and the corn laws of Caius Gracchus provided as generously for the support of this class as the laws of any Christian nation do. Greece had her homes for the poor, her refuges for the stranger, and her hospitals for the sick. Seven hundred years before the Christian era, an emperor of India established hospitals in every city and town throughout his empire, and these flourished for centuries. In Mexico and Peru, institutions of charity were everywhere maintained. In no country are the aged and infirm more tenderly cared for than in heathen China. The first asylum for the insane of which we hav any record was founded by the Mohammedans in the seventh century. The first Christian institution of the kind was built in Spain seven hundred years later; and the historian states that the kind-hearted monk who established it did it to protect these unfortunate people from the insults of their Christian neighbors.

Tauntingly the church inquires,"What hav Infidels ever done for charity?" What hav Infidels done for charity?—Stephen Girard, an Infidel, left a fortune of several millions to found an orphans' college in Philadelphia; James Lick, an Infidel, gave more than a million for scientific and benevolent purposes; Peter Brigham, an Infidel, gave four millions for the purpose of establishing hospitals for the sick poor of Boston; John Redmon, an Infidel, gave four hundred thousand dollars to support free beds in the hospitals of Boston; William Maclure, an Infidel, gave half a million dollars to aid the workingmen of Indiana; Robert Owen, an Infidel, devoted fifty years of his life and expended five hundred thousand dollars in promoting the interests of the poor and laboring classes; Robert Ingersoll, an Infidel, although not a man of wealth, has given more to charity than any clergyman of this country has done; Peter Cooper, the greatest philanthrophist of our age, was a disbeliever in evangelical Christianity.

What hav Infidels done for charity? Nothing that the church has not claimed the honor of doing. Stephen Girard had scarcely been placed in his grave before she attempted to steal his legacy and place it to her credit. Erect a charitable institution, and in less than twenty-four hours some emissary of the church will come along with a piece of chalk and write the word "Christian" above the door. Were Freethinkers to build a hospital to-day, the church would climb on top of it to-night, erect a cross, and in the morning ask you what Infidels had ever done for charity.

There are, scattered over our land, a lot of so-called charitable institutions, labeled "Catholic" or "Protestant," supported almost wholly by contributions from the secular public, and appropriations lobbied through our legislativ assemblies. But Christians handle the funds, and so they are Christian institutions. Paying institutions, too. "Shepherds' Folds," furnishing mutton for the church's wolves.

THE CHURCH AND LIBERTY.

The church claims to be the guardian of civil and religious liberty. Yet human liberty has never had a deadlier foe. If a Christian minority has pleaded for religious liberty, a Christian majority never failed to deny it.

Ten thousand eulogies hav been bestowed upon the Puritan Fathers of New England for having, as it is claimed, established religious liberty in this country. But what was the Puritan conception of religious liberty? What liberty did they advocate? The liberty to be a Puritan! Simply this and nothing more. So, too, did the Spanish inquisitors advocate religious liberty: the liberty to be a good Catholic. I see an old man in the dead of winter, an exile, wandering through the snows and forests of Rhode Island, exposed to savage beasts and savage men. Were Roger Williams yet alive, he could tell us how the Puritan Fathers established religious liberty. I see before me a scaffold, and from it dangles the lifeless form of a woman—a simple, inoffensiv Quakeress. Could Mary Dyer speak, she, too, could tell us about religious liberty in New England.

The fact is that wherever you find a fragment of the Christian church, I care not what name it bears —Catholic or Protestant, Lutheran or Episcopal, Presbyterian of Methodist—you find an enemy to liberty. Every apostle of liberty the church has murdered or maligned. Our earth is covered with the dust of murdered millions, murdered by the church, and for no other crime than having dared to entertain opinions that were not orthodox.

"But the church does not kill now," methinks I hear the Christian apologist exclaim. No, a tiger weakened by the pangs of death grows less and less ferocious. The church does not kill now because it does not hav the power to kill. The fagot and the sword hav been wrested from her bloody hands, and hatred and slander are the only weapons left her now.

THE CHURCH AND REFORMS.

The church claims to be the great reformer of the age. But what orthodox Christian ever originated a reform? Every reformer has been denounced by the church as a heretic. Witness the reforms of our own century and country. During the present century three great reforms hav been inaugurated: the antislavery reform, the woman's rights movement, and the temperance reform.

The first of these reforms encountered the most violont opposition from the church. Slavery was held to be a divine institution authorized and sanctioned by the Bible. Slavery was planted and perpetuated on this continent because the Bible taught that it was right.

Who were the pioneers in this crusade against slavery? Conspicuous among them stood three Infidels: William Lloyd Garrison, Gerritt Smith, and Wendell Phillips. Their supporters, too, were mostly Infidels. Look at them! Henry C. Wright, Parker Pillsbury, Elizur Wright, Stephen Foster, Abby Kelly, Frances Wright, and Lucretia Mott—Infidels every one. Their stoutest opposition came from the church. It was Christians who dragged Garrison through the streets of Boston with a rope around his body; it was Christians who threatened the life of Gerritt Smith, and it was Christians who greeted with hisses the heroic eloquence of Phillips. Yes, it was Infidels and not the church that led the van in this fierce contest with slavery. And in the closing pages of this movement's history stand out in bold relief the names of Charles Sumner and Abraham Lincoln —both Infidels.

That some valuable aid was given by the pulpit in this struggle cannot be denied. But the aid came principally from such men as William Ellery Channing, Theodore Parker, and Henry Ward Beecher, men whom the church has a thousand times denounced as Infidels and heretics. Let it never be forgotten that the entire church South fought for slavery to the bitter end; let it never be forgotten that nearly the entire church North indorsed it until public sentiment became so strong as to compel her to take a stand against it. When slavery was powerful and popular the church upheld it, because it paid. When it became weak and unpopular she left it to its fate. Fifty years ago there was not a church in the North would open its doors to an opponent of slavery. To-day the church delights to tell how we abolished slavery.

The woman's rights movement is in its infancy as yet, particularly the question of her political rights. The church has been persistent in her opposition to this reform. Its supporters hav for the most part come from the Rationalistic ranks. The first statesmen of modern times to advocate equal political rights for women were the French Infidels, Sieyes and Condorcet. The women who hav led in this movement, Mary Wolstonecraft, Frances Wright, Ernestine L. Rose, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Susan B. Anthony, Amy Post, and others, are women who hav held no allegiance to the church.

Throughout the Bible woman is regarded as a soulless slave. The sacred names of wife and mother are but idle words. Marriage is discouraged and motherhood esteemed a sin. Both Christ and Moses authorize a husband to divorce his wife, but giv a wife no redress against a brutal and licentious husband. Moses legalized the sale of daughters. Christ spurned a mother's love and shared that of a Magdalen. Paul's treatment of woman was most contemptible: "Let your women learn in silence with all subjection." "I suffer not a woman to teach." "As the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home, for it is a shame for a woman to speak in the church."

Accepting the teachings of Moses, Christ, and Paul as authoritativ, the church degraded woman. For centuries she was regarded as a vile, unholy thing. In the sixth century, a church council passed a decree forbidding woman to receive the eucharist with ungloved hands, because her naked hand would contaminate the sacred symbol. A pious monk having occasion to carry his mother across a stream covered his hands that he might not be polluted by her touch. And when she died, it is said, he held aloof from her bedside, lest he should be defiled. Think of woman's state when the pressure of a dying mother's hand and a dying mother's kiss was deemed pollution!

It is only by keeping woman in bondage that the church survives. From the labors of this slave her support is chiefly drawn. She is sent forth into the world as a beggar or a gambler, and with her illgotten gains the church's brutal, ignorant, and sensual priests are fed and clothed.

Let some liberty-loving woman utter a cry of anguish for her sex's fate, and her cry is drowned beneath a flood of Christian taunts and jeers. "Let your women keep silence, for it is not permitted unto them to speak." Aye, but they do sometimes speak. Look down from heaven, old Paul, and see these rebels here to-day. They speak, and a thousand sisters scattered over the world are beginning to speak, and they will one day voice a funeral homily above the grave of your dead mistress, the church.

The temperance reform has become sufficiently popular to secure to a certain extent the co-operation of the church. Two important elements in this reform to-day are woman and the Protestant clergy. There is a reason why woman should be so thoroughly enlisted in this cause. None has so keenly felt the evils of intemperance as the wife and mother. There is a reason, too, why the clergy should be interested in this reform. Upon woman the retention of their power depends. Now priestcraft is a game, and by aiding woman in this work she holds so dear at heart, they play a winning card.

But these priests cannot be Christians without being irrational. They advocate temperance, not for humanity's sake, but for Christ's sake, and with that beautiful consistency so characteristic of them, preach prohibition from a Bible platform. My clerical friend, the Bible instructs you to spend your money for wine and strong drink. If you prohibit the sale of liquor, how can you? "Wine maketh glad the heart of man." Then why don't you let him hav it? "Let him drink and forget his poverty and remember his misery no more." Yes, but they did not expect him to do this with water. "They shall drink in the courts of my holiness." "Ho ye that thirst, come buy wine without money and without price." It must be some consolation to a poor drunkard to know that saloons set free lunches in this world; it must be a greater consolation to him to think of free whisky in the next.

If the Bible teach temperance and total abstinence, as the clergy now contend, why has it taken the church so long to find it out? When but a few generations ago every clergyman who could afford it kept his sideboard well filled with the choicest liquors, when ministerial conferences expended more for brandy than for fuel, light, and stationery all combined, they read their Bibles as carefully and interpreted them as honestly, I doubt not, as their brethren do to-day.

Here is a transcript from the church records of the South Society of Hartford,Conn. At the ordination of a pastor in 1784 the following items are from the bill of expenses incurred. The bill was presented by the landlord at whose house the clerical party was entertained. I hav taken it from the Rev. W. H. Daniel's history of "The Temperance Reform," where it is given upon the authority of the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dunn and the Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher:

TO KEEPING MINISTERS, ETC.

	£.	s.	d.
May 4th
To 2 mugs tody,	0	2	4
" 5 segars,	0	5	10
" 1 pint wine,	0	3	0
" 3 lodgings,	0	9	0
May 5th.
To 3 bitters,	0	0	9
" 3 breakfasts,	0	3	6
" 15 boles punch,	1	10	0
" 24 dinners,	1	16	0
" 11 bottles wine,	3	6	0
" 5 mugs flip,	0	5	10
" 3 boles punch,	0	6	0
" 3 boles tody.	0	3	6
	8	3	11

That is where the church stood on the temperance question ninety-nine years ago!

It is true that Solomon once pronounced wine a mocker and strong drink raging. But this was evidently at the end of a week's debauch. Every toper says the same thing at the end of his spree. Solomon an advocate of temperance! Why, did he not say that "wine maketh merry?" Did he not prescribe to those "heavy of heart?" Did he not want to giv his sweetheart wine? Nonsense! The Bible recognizes wine as necessary an article of consumption as bread itself. From Genesis to Revelation it is wine, wine, wine. Christ himself evidently considered wine of more importance than bread. For while he refuses to make bread out of stone for a hungry devil, he has no conscientious scruples about converting water into wine for a lot of drunken wedding guests. From all my Bible reading I can at this moment recall but one instance where an individual ordering a drink called for water—and he was in hell!

For eighteen hundred years the Bible and the church hav been the bulwarks of intemperance. The Christian may dispute this fact; but he cannot deny that some of his greatest saints were drunkards; he cannot deny that when his God drowned the world he saved only a drunkard and his family to perpetuate the race—that when he doomed a great city to destruction he saved only a drunkard and his family; he cannot deny that his greatest preacher, Paul, advised taking a little wine for the stomach's sake; he cannot deny that Christ himself bore the reputation of a "wine-bibber," that he was a manufacturer of wine, that he furnished wedding feasts with wine, that he gave it to his disciples to drink, and expected to drink it himself in heaven; he cannot deny that Christ blessed the wine cup, and passed it on through the Christian generations; he cannot deny that wherever Christianity has gained a foothold there intemperance has made her home. An army of missionaries went to India, and what is the result? Says the archdeacon of Bombay: "For every truly converted Christian the drinking practices of English Christians hav made a thousand drunkards." They went to Siberia, and soon transformed a happy, industrious people into a race of drunken vagabonds. They traversed the forests of America, the Bible in one hand, the bottle in the other, and under the combined influence of faith and firewater the last poor red wretch must soon reach the happy hunting-grounds.

That many Christians are now zealous workers in the cause of temperance I am glad to acknowledge. All honor to them! But they should remember that they are simply following in the wake of an Infidel movement, that Infidels and not the church inaugurated the temperance reform. The first temperance paper published in Europe was published by an Infidel—Joseph Lindsay. The first temperance paper published in this country was published by an opponent of the church—William Lloyd Garrison; and the first book in favor of total abstinence was written by an Atheist—Judge Herttell.

THE CHURCH AND THE REPUBLIC.

Not only must we ascribe to these so-called Infidels the credit of inaugurating every true reform, but the establishment and perpetuation of our republican form of government itself we owe not to the church, but to those outside of it, and wholly or in a measure free from enslaving dogmas. The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are both Infide documents, the former Deistic, the latter Agnostic; the former recognizing the existence of a supreme being, but making no recognition of Christ or Christianity; the latter ignoring even the existence of a God.

It was the aim of our forefathers to establish a government broad as humanity itself, a purely secular government; a government guaranteeing to Jew and Mohammedan, Christian and Infidel, the same rights. But there are a set of narrow-minded fanatics in our land who are endeavoring to compress this grand work by having their religion recognized as the religion; who denominate this the "Christian republic," and who are at this moment plotting to hav the Constitution recognize it as such. But this is not a Christian republic, and it never will be. It is the great republic of humanity, and the American heart is large enough and brave enough to preserve it as such. There are many Christian names associated with its history which we delight to honor, but who were the great men that most contributed to make it glorious?

Whose magic pen first wrote "The Free and Independent States of America?" Who was the inspiring genius that thrilled the American heart with the first glad notes of liberty—that first implanted in the patriot's mind a fixed resolve to do or die? A Christian? No!

Who wrote that immortal instrument that first proclaimed our nation's birth—the Declaration of American Independence? A Christian? No!

Who was the colossus of the Continental Congress—the master spirit of that ever-memorable debate—the man whose rugged eloquence bore down all opposition and secured the unanimous adoption of this instrument? A church-member? No!

Who, through sunshine and shadow, through bloody reverses and brilliant successes, led the patriot army to final triumph? A Christian? No!

When the sun of hope was fast sinking beneath the dark horizon of despair, who, with untiring zeal and rare diplomatic skill, secured the intervention of a foreign power and thus made certain what till then seemed doubtful? A Christian? No!

When victory had perched upon our banner, and that banner floated over a free land, yet, alas! a land without a government capable of perpetuating that freedom,who headed the movement that was successful in securing for us that second and better Magna Charter, the American Constitution? A church-member? No!

When that instrument was submitted to the several states for their approval or rejection, who was its ablest champion—who was the leading instrumentality in securing its adoption? A church-member? No!

When an offended member of our federal family threatened to withdraw from the Union, who so promptly demonstrated the power of the central government to enforce obedience to its laws—establishing a precedent that we trust insures the perpetuity of our republic? A church-member? No!

All men had been declared free and equal, while a part still toiled in bondage. The blighting curse of slavery hung like a death-pall over the fairest portion of the continent, waiting for some strong hand to tear its folds away. And one arose, but who? A Christian? No!

When treason raised her giant form and sought through fratricidal strife the Union's dismemberment, who clutched the monster in his iron grasp and hurled her crushed and lifeless to the earth? A church-member? No!

Paine, Jefferson, Adams, Washington, Franklin, Madison, Hamilton, Jackson, Lincoln, Grant—how light would be the volume of American history without the names and deeds of these illustrious men—how frail the temple of American liberty without these ten grand pillars! These are the land-marks that mark the successiv stages in the founding and development of our republic—the great central figures around which cluster the most that is grand and glorious in our country's history—the brightest stars that glitter in the broad field of our political firmament. And yet, not one of these great names appeared upon the class-roll of a Christian church.

When will our people learn that priestcraft is a curse, that Christianity is but a gilded fraud, that all the church's claims are false? To disabuse the public mind of this great error is no easy and no thankful task. And yet it must be done, and we must do our part.

When I survey the dark, sad centuries of the past—when I dwell upon the bloody deeds and frightful wrongs committed by this cruel church—when I see liberty in chains, justice a stranger in every court, and science wearing the brand of infamy upon her brow—when I witness the unrequited toils and sufferings of those who hav lived and died for the right—when I see the beautiful and learned Hypatia dragged naked through the streets of Alexandria and foully murdered by Christian priests—when I behold the merciless flames enveloping the manly body of Giordano Bruno — when I look upon gray-haired Galileo crouched upon a dungeon's floor—when I listen to the piteous groans of burning Servetus, and hear the fiendish laughter of the priest who holds aloft Vanini's bleeding tongue—when I see the bones of Voltaire dragged from their resting-place, and calumnies piled mountain high upon the grave of Thomas Paine—when I see an insolent and crafty priesthood preying upon the human hopes and fears, holding in bondage the brains of my fellow-men, and filling the land with superstition, misery, and crime—when all this rises up before the vision of my mind, I feel an honest aspiration to contribute something toward hastening the time when freedom, justice, and intelligence shall fill the world, and priestcraft with its churches be no more.

Elmina Accepts Mr. Lacy's Offer.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your issue of August 25th, page 541, appears "An Open Letter to Elmina," by Francis D. Lacy, from which I quote the following fair and liberal offer:

"Now I propose to giv you an opportunity of witnessing these phenomena, and test the reality of the communications for yourself. I will direct you to where you can get the 'independent slate writing' done between two slates, with or without pencil, with communication addressed to you from some friend who has 'passed over,' in their own handwriting, in answer to some question you may ask, known to no other mortal except yourself, and done while you are holding the state in your own hands. Would such a test be satisfactory to you? If so, it will not be long before you will look upon this matter as I do. This test is very common out here, and if you would like it I can cite you to a score of slate-writing mediums, where you can witness it, and some not far from where you are.

"That you may be assured of what I state, I will say should you fail to get the demonstrations as I hav stated them (which you shall not fail in) then charge me up for your time and the expense of your trip, and with it I will sacrifice five hundred dollars for the good of any institution of charity you may name."

I most willingly accept the above proposition, and I hereby appoint you, Mr. Editor, as treasurer for the occasion. A kind friend has already placed $100 in your hands to defray my necessary expenses in attending the experiment in case the spirit writing does take place according to the conditions proposed.

Now if Mr. Lacy will deposit an equal amount with you, to be used for the same purpose—together with the sum he proposes to forfeit in case the spirits fail—I will be ready to proceed with the trial whenever he points out the medium and designates the time and place where the slate writing is to occur. I am more and more anxious to hav the privilege of seeing for myself some of the phenomena. Whenever I write on the subject it is flung at me that if I would once see for myself and hav a chance to investigate I would believe.

Now that I am offered the chance I gladly avail myself of it, and hope to be able to go this fall ere cold weather sets in. I see on page 179 of "Bottom Facts," these words:

"I hold myself in readiness at any moment within the next twelve months, to enter into a contract with any honorable and responsible party, to pay any slate-writing medium in the world the sum of $500 if he will induce a spirit to write, in my presence, a message containing three or more intelligible words, upon any slate, without the aid of some external or physical force."

Now when two intelligent authors of noted works offer, each of them, to forfeit $500, one if the writing is done and the other if it is not done, I think it is well to make a test of the thing, and I am glad and proud to be the one selected to hav the honor of helping in the work.

I hope my unknown friend, who has deposited his money for my traveling expenses, and Mr. Lacy, will both stand by me and see the thing through. If I had means of my own I would depend on no one, but would go at once to the best medium in New York or Boston; but, as it is, I must wait the results of this challenge, hoping not to be disappointed in either of my friends.

Judging from letters already received by me relating to the challenge, hundreds are waiting almost as anxiously as, Yours truly, Elmina.

Snowville, Va., Sept. 5, 1883.

But Mr. Lacy Declines to Proceed at Present.

To the Editor of the Truth Seeker, Sir: In answer to the proposition of Elmina's friend, made in last Truth Seeker, would say that as I reserve the conditions under which this phenomenon is to be accomplished, I should beg to hav whatever time will best answer my convenience. Nor would I be willing to submit such a test to one trial, nor be confined to any specified time. I do not propose to submit her to any expense whereby for me to sacrifice, until conditions are favorable for accomplishing the desired end. As my business is such that I cannot leave home at present, and would necessarily hav to be present at so grand a test, I beg leave to say, in accordance with what I wrote to Elmina, by private letter, that it is my intention to come East on a lecture tour, with a medium of my own selection, and visit parts where she can attend, in view of offering these phenomena free to prominent literary characters for the establishment of their truth.

Take notice that in her postal to me, of Aug. 27th, she writes: "I am anxious to see the slate writing, but I can't leave home. Can't it be done on a slate here? I don't see why father, for instance, can't come here and write as well as where a medium is! Can't thee get his writing for me, or my sister's? If the writing is my father's or Isaac's father, it will be proof as much as if I saw it done. If the dead liv, it is just as easy for them. I see thee is dead in earnest and fully sure, and that is proof to me that there is much in the phenomena," etc.

Regarding this as declining my proposition, I wrote her of my prospected lecture tour to the East, as already stated, and would make it a point to render to her the phenomena, but no longer feel subject to any sacrifice. But the statement is true in regard to the phenomena, being fully assured of the fact from the frequent tests I hav received; and I know, if I can believe my senses, that they come from an intelligence from which they purport to come, and it is our intention to fully demonstrate this truth to the world.

But not offering the proposition in the form of a bet, or intending it as a challenge, I advise that Elmina's friend receive back his $100 for the present, and if I cannot offer this demonstration more conveniently for Elmina's observation, and better to my own satisfaction, than to concede to his challenge, I will giv him word. The interest I take in this highly intelligent and prominent writer, Mrs. Slenker, is manifested in view that she may hav the opportunity of investigating this subject the same as I hav had, and when she has seen the facts as presented to me, and is made to realize them in that light, her word will go far in establishing this fact to the world.

As for myself, if I hav reason to know anything, I am surely right in this fact of a future life, and what to me could be demonstrated can certainly be demonstrated to others. Let all who oppose us be calm for a season, for the time is not far distant when the facts they shall know.

Author of "Nature's Harmony."

Nirvana, Mich., Sept. 2, 1883.

[As will be seen by Mr. Lacy's letter, the opportunity is lost for the present. We hav accordingly returned the money, and the controversy, in its practical shape, is finished in one, two, three order. The subject, however, is likely to be continued, and whatever inferences may be drawn from this fiasco, the faith of the Spiritualists will not be shaken. And certainly the Materialists will not be less positiv that the spirit-land is a beautiful delusion. However, if Mr. Lacy comes East this winter we hope to be presented with something tangible. Like Elmina, we are on the anxious seat.—Ed. T. S.]

The Newark League.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The Liberal League had a rousing meeting to-day; the hall was full and remained so for over two and a half hours. After an organ prelude and the singing of the hymn to "Nature," to the tune "America," Madam Michels, of New York, gave a reading which was heartily received by the audience. Mr. Jared Flagg, also of New York, gave a good radical talk on "Hypocrisy," which was received with applause throughout. After the singing of "Take the Fort," Madam Michels gave another recitation. The subject of the lecture of Mr. Flagg was then thrown open for discussion, and a lively time was had by members of the League and others that were present. Prof. Geo. Vaughan, who lectured last Sunday, was present, and made some excellent remarks. Probably a dozen people took part in its debate. After the debate the League had a business session, which lasted until half-past six. Gus.

Newark, N. J., Sept. 9, 1883.

THE ROCHESTER CONVENTION.

MITCHELL AND WAKEMAN.—DR. STOLZ, MRS. COLBY, MRS. KREKEL, AND MRS. SEVERANCE.—J. H. BURNHAM — COURTLANDT PALMER. — RESOLUTIONS PASSED.—CHAS. WATTS, ELIZUR WRIGHT, AND W. S. BELL.

The principal feature of the Thursday evening exercises was the address of the Rev. Thomas Mitchell, of Brooklyn, in a labored defense of the Christian religion, which endured for some two hours. Printed in full it would fill two or three pages of THE TRUTH SEEKER. The Brooklyn Eagle of the 30th ult. givs it entire. His argument may be summarized as folfollows:

The Bible sets up the claim that the words clothing the ideas describing the Christian religion are of divine inspiration, and which are not to be changed or modified to the end of the world. Its language is: "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. ii, 16). "For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city," etc. (Rev. xxii, 18-19.) It is equally unquestionable that the Bible claims that God created the world according to the account given in Genesis, which is quoted throughout the scriptures as the plain statement of the facts as they occurred—the two most prominent of which are that the whole work was done in six days of twenty-four hours each, and that the work in all its parts was as perfect as it has ever been. The hypothesis of evolution is the exact opposit of this; hence there is an irreconcilable conflict between the two. We acknowledge the fact of the spread of Infidel sentiments in our day as never before in the history of the world, but this has not been by the discovery of new defects in Christianity, nor by really new truths in science, much less in philosophy; but what is called modern science —which we shall show is not science—has been the chief cause of the evil.

It is admitted by the four principal authorities on evolution—Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, and Haeckel—that if it does not account for the origin of organic beings and things, the only alternativ is the biblical account of creation. Another admission granted by all these leaders of modern science is that their claim that the primordial originated by inherent forces in nature without supernatural interference is a pure hypothesis; and a hypothesis means something not proved, but imagined, or assumed for the sake of argument. Darwin begins his evolution with the assumed existence of a single living form. The biblical account also begins with the existence of a single living form. The primordial of Darwin is claimed to be the simplest living thing, while the primordial of scripture is the grandest and most perfect living being. That the biblical account of the world's primordial is the most consistent with philosophy and the facts of science is demonstrated by the necessities of that which preceded the evolution, or the unfolding, namely, the work of unfolding—putting the things in which afterward come out, or were evolved. It is absurd to put evolution before involution; it supposes that living things can come out from whence even their embryons had not been put in.

[Mr. Mitchell quoted copiously at his part of the address from the writings and scientific investigations of Prof. Tyndall, Prof. Huxley, Laplace, Humboldt, Sir Charles Lyell, Henry De Varigny, Albert Gandry, and Prof. Proctor to show that their theories were inconsistent with reason and the laws of nature.]

These correlativ principles comprehend the whole solar system, and present us with the following fundamental facts of the science of vegetable life: First. No plant or seed would grow unless it was first organized according to the law of plant life. Second. Not the simplest plant could liv in any nascent or half-formed condition of the globe, or in one less perfect than that which now exists; and without vegetable food animals could not hav existed. Third. That the laws of nature are not abstractions, susceptible of having an existence prior to nature itself, and which brought her into existence; but they chemically and electrically inhere, giving all bodies their peculiarities, and were incorporated at the formation of the bodies themselvs. Thus does nature, or the solar system—the law of vegetation—exhaust herself in sustaining the temporary life of man, demonstrating him to be the great object for which it was made. One of the commonest objections skepticism makes to the Bible is that it regards man as the great object for which the world was made, delegating to him supreme dominion, and of course making all animals and all other living things subservient and dependent upon him. Man's desire to survive deeth—to liv again—and his hope of eternal being are attributed to his pride; "for," say they, "he has really no more grounds for indulging this hope than hav the lower animals. As with these, so with him, death ends all." Indeed modern science completely reverses this order, and makes man dependent upon a long line of ancestral weeds, shell fish, and monkeys for his existence, through which he has crawled into being, so that in his devotions he can sing,

"All hail the mighty monkey! all hail the ancient clam!
From which, through evolution, I came to be a man!"

Our answer is that the sustenance and continued existence of the lower animals and of fish and fowl depends upon the simultaneous existence and labor of man.

[Mr. Mitchell here presented a series of thirty-eight statements which he denominated aphorisms and syllogisms. A few specimens will show the nature of all of them.]

Persons exist; impersonality cannot create persons; therefore the creator is a person.

A person has locality; space has no locality; therefore space is not God.

A thing has locality; God is something; therefore God has a locality.

All things in nature are effects; effects are less than their causes; therefore the ultimate cause was supernatural.

The cause could not hav begun; this would hav made it an effect; therefore the cause was uncaused.

Created minds cannot create the simplest thing of nature; therefore all nature had a great creator.

Whatever makes things of which nature is incapable (a locomotiv engin, for example), is a creator. Man makes such things; therefore man is a creator.

The mechanical power of each mind is limited to what it can comprehend. Man cannot comprehend the mechanism involved in his own nature—what he knows is that it exists; therefore man acknowledges the existence of that which he cannot comprehend.

Everything is a miracle of which nature is incapable; nature is incapable of making a living animal or plant; therefore the origin of living animals or plants was miraculous.

There was a time before nature existed; a thing cannot act until it exists; therefore nature did not cause her own existence.

Inorganic things move by necessity; that which moves by necessity had no power to commence its motion; therefore this power was supernatural.

Organic things are greater than inorganic [lifeless] things; the lesser cannot make the greater; therefore the organic was miraculous work.

The process of bringing the first living thing into existence must hav been so short that the part first made would not decompose before the last part was finished; therefore it must hav been made according to Genesis.

Each species has natural parents; the first pair of each species had no natural parents; therefore the first were creations.

Each species preserves its own identity; no new species has ever come into existence; therefore the first pair of each species were created at the beginning of the world.

The solar system was once a fiery molten mass. Fire destroys that upon which it preys; therefore the world did not come into existence upon the fiery hypothesis.

Nebula vapor cannot burn; the nebula was before the fire; therefore the fiery world never existed.

Evolutionists say original matter was homogeneous. Homogeneous matter has no chemical compounds to dissolve; therefore it could never hav burnt, as burning is dissolution.

Fossils are found in rocks; liquid fires leaves no fossils; therefore the rocks were never liquid fire.

If left to cool, fire leaves nothing but ashes and cinders. The crust of the earth is not composed of ashes and cinders; therefore it was never a fiery, nebulous mass.

Gravity was essential to the formation of the solar system; a world of fire has no gravity; therefore the world never commenced upon the nebula theory.

An article in the "Encyclopedia Britannica," headed "Confucius," mentions it as a distinguishinging mark of the greatness of the Chinese philosopher, that he deduced the golden rule from the needs of human society. As this fact is used by skeptics to degrade Christ to the level of a mere philosopher, we call attention to the subject to show that he borrowed nothing from the Chinaman, and that Confucius had no conception of the Golden Rule of Christ. Confucius lived 350 years and Moses 1,500 years before Christ, and Christ declares the "Golden Rule" which he taught was condensed from the laws of Moses and the prophets; so that if either borrowed it, it was the Chinaman. The rule of Confucius was only negativ. His language is, "What you would not like to be done to do, do not do to others." It is obvious that a perfectly selfish miser may keep the rule of Confucius, which simply requires us to do no evil to others; while the rule of Jesus requires this, and, in addition, to do every good to others which lies within our power—everything we would hav others do to us, were we in their circumstances. The Christian religion, therefore, consists in doing those unselfish works which were exemplified in the life as well as taught in the injunctions of its author; and its best defense is to show what laws its founder enjoins on his followers.

Is it not marvelous that in this late age of boasting progress any one should be called on to defend such a system? and should not its pride feel rebuked at its utter inability to add the least shade of improvement to the greatness and grandeur of its standard? If unbelievers are too self-willed and proud to respect and obey their maker, how can they act otherwise toward their fellow-men?

In continuing his address Mr. Mitchell claimed that the two fundamental principles of the Christian religion are love and sacrifice; maintained that the redeemer, savior, and destined king of the coming world is the only living God as taught in the scriptures; declared that it was possible for the creator to make himself manifest in the flesh, and resolved his arguments into the following aphoristic and syllogistic conclusions:

1. To suppose that there are no other objects in bringing the world into existence than those which her present resources manifest argues that the creator acted without a reasonable purpose; but, as everything in nature shows an adequate purpose, it forbids such a reflection; therefore, the purpose must be written and revealed, and is that contained in the Bible.

2. The world and its inhabitants were created suddenly and perfectly. The same being has the power to recreate it —this is his sworn purpose: "As truly as I liv all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." (Num. xiv, 21.)

3. If God ever caused a book to be writen, its account of the origin of the world and its living inhabitants must be true science and philosophy. We hav found the scripture statements of that origin to hav been philosophic and scientific necessities; therefore the author of scripture was the creator of nature.

4. The scriptures contain the prehistoric record of the civil, moral, and religious march of the family of man down to the present day. Man could not hav written this history in advance; therefore he only who saw the end from the beginning could hav been its author.

5. Man is a being of mercy; a merciless being could not hav made one of mercy, because he would hav been better and greater than himself; therefore God is merciful.

6. God made man with power to obey him; this carries with it the power to disobey; therefore, man can only become a loyal subject of God's government by inducements offered to his understanding. If he persistently refuses to obey, his maker may destroy him; but destruction is not government, and the man still triumphs, though ending in his own ruin.

7. The proprietor of man must desire his obedience; the disobedience of his creatures must mar his happiness; therefore, if he would be supremely happy, there must come a time when every created being has become reconciled to the will of its maker or has perished.

8. The interest manifested by the creator in the details of organic and inorganic nature forbids the idea of indifference to the smallest acts or motivs of his intelligent creatures; yet those who are his most loyal subjects suffer the greatest hardships in the present world. This demonstrates the necessity of another world, in which all this will be reversed, and Lazarus shall hav his good things and the rich man his evil things.

In conclusion he thanked the convention for its patient and respectful attention.

The convention assembled at 10 o'clock Friday morning with a very good attendance. President Brown exhibited a copy of the Meteor of Light, containing the proceedings of the Infidel convention held in New York in May, 1845, and which was presented to him by a delegate who attended that convention. "The Waiting Time" was sung by H. H. Hall, who accompanied the words with music on a guitar. President Brown then introduced Dr. Stolz, of Chicago, as the first speaker, who was to consider the subject of "The Origin of Evil," and who prefaced his address with an explanation of a large canvas hanging at the east of the stage, representing "Volney in the Ruins." Mr. Stolz said:

We are in a world of mysteries, and life is a problem not yet fully understood. Future generations may bring to light that which is now not very plain to our understanding. Philosophers and men of letters hav searched diligently for a solution of the problem of life, but with imperfect success. Man by nature is a philosophic and social being, in whom conscience is awakened by reason and a moral action takes form. What is evil—I mean a crime, the wrong actions of men? Is it an injury to our fellow-men, or is it a remorse of conscience? The orthodox churches teach that some time in the eternal past a difficulty arose between one of the most popular angels and God, resulting in war and the banishment of the angel. They tell us that he became wholly depraved and set up a kingdom of his own, a realm of utter darkness. The seduction of the pair in Eden, they say, followed, as did the total depravity of them and their offspring. The war begun in heaven was transferred to earth, where these two powers are contending for the souls of men. This story is too absurb to merit even a denial. Many teach that God permits evil that he may display his power by sending men into everlasting torment. Others, that God places stumbling-blocks in our way to tempt us. The majority, however, preach that evil comes from the fiend of darkness, commonly denominated the devil. Man being the object of contention, can do little besides grin and bear it. All a Christian has to do when he goes astray is to charge it to God or the devil, and he is released. Scarcely an idea embodied in the old creeds of the church is traceable to any scientific or philosophic research. Philosophical reasoning upon the subject will dispel these mystical monsters from our minds. Among the ancient philosophers the Greeks were among the first to look in the right direction for a solution of the problem of the outgrowth of evil. There was a period of 300 years, ending 100 years before Christ, that might be called the age of philosophy. An attempt was made then to establish a religion based upon philosophy, in which humanity was to be the highest idea of God. It proved a failure, but did not die. There followed a period of darkness until about the year 1600, when light again began to dawn and the age of philosophy was revived.

The philosophies of Goethe, Schelling, Kant, and others, held that good and evil are conceptions of the mind, expressed by deeds or actions. Those who are in harmony with their environments and the records of their lives will hav no remorse of conscience. Pain following a fractured limb is not punishment; it is a messenger of mercy calling upon us to giv the limb proper attention. If a moral law is violated, conscience calls us to judgment. We suffer because we are not in harmony with our record, and we must giv the matter attention. We find, therefore, fixed laws surrounding us, which, if we disobey, either morally or physically, hold us to account. Some call this punishment, but nature never punishes; it is rather a means of correction. As we study ourselvs and our powers, we will find a true guide, which, if followed, will never lead us wrong. Every child born into the world, all things being equal, is on the straight road to happiness. It is only by perversion of normal tendencies that we are made to go astray. In many instances the education of our children is worse than no education. The child in its own mind often hesitates to do a wrong act until urged by companions. By culture or education we do not put into the child goodness; it is only set in motion by inherent powers. Instinctivly we aim to do right, and it is only by the perversion of natural sense that we do wrong. The axis of right is constantly changing, so that what is right to-day is not to-morrow, and what is considered wrong in this country may not be so in another. Still a common standard exists somewhere. It is within the domain of the philosophical faculties. The power of the mental faculties to conceive ideas of right and wrong human action is a matter of evolution or growth of every individual or race. As years roll on, generations will grapple with the question with added power. Happy indeed will be those who can keep the record of their years clear and well balanced, even to the last final accounting, and until Mother Nature wraps us close in an embrace as that she givs the lily or the rose as they gently fade on the summer's breeze, and as she lays us down to slumber our rest will be free from care or sorrow.

Professor W. S. Bell then briefly addressed the convention and referred to the work that had been done by H. L. Green, secretary of the association, in behalf of the cause of Freethinkers. He suggested taking up a subscription in his behalf. Courtlandt Palmer seconded the suggestion and started the subscription with $25. President Brown and others followed with $5 each. It was stated that it was desirable to raise the sum of $200. Nearly $150 was realized.

The convention was called to order at 2 o'clock in the afternoon by President Brown, after which Secretary Green made some brief remarks relativ to the success of the convention. "Vogel's Waltz" was then rendered by the quartet with excellent effect. Mrs. O. K. Smith, of St. Louis, then rendered the song, entitled, "The People's Advent," after which Mrs. Amelia Colby, of Buffalo, was introduced to the audience, and commenced her remarks as follows:

I hope I shall not impose on your generosity, and shall therefore come directly to the point, "What are we here for?" My purpose here is to exchange thoughts with you. Every act of life has its significance. Our coming together here is significant of human liberty. The representativ of Christianity says that all shall go to hell who are not disciples of Christ. He not only hates his enemies but also his friends. He is the author of all things, if he had in himself all that is in nature, if everything came from God, if he is supernatural, then everything is supernatural. I am suprised that our ministers should go to heaven and allow millions of men and women to be lost. Every one of the 75,000 ministers are better than the god they worship. I hav studied the Bible. I find that Dr. Harvey must hav known years ago more than God, who you and I hav been taught created heaven and earth. I am satisfied that the unfolded law life is in embryo. We are told we are finite. How can I be finite if I came from an infinit? If he is a personal God, who knows that he is not subject to law? If I cannot believe all my brothers said last night it is because I cannot realize it. The ignorance of mankind of science has summoned and protected all religions. We hav a right to study science. Science is that element that says this is so and that is so.

A belief in God supports 70,000 ministers and $700,000,000 worth of untaxed property. There is no class of Christians that I ever knew but that was better than their gods. When God damns and burns it is not for a day, but eternally, we are taught by our Christian brethren. If God created me to be different than I am, which is the larger or more powerful? I hav outwitted him, for I belong to the universe, and God does not. Do you ask me if I believe in a God? I answer most emphatically that I do not, and hope I never shall. I don't care how many gods there are outside the universe, when we can get the ministers outside we can be free and free thinkers. We may be conscientious, but wrong; but you can't turn to any book to convince you that we are. God cannot prove a fact by a book any more than you or I can. A fact may prove a book. God failed to tell us anything about the printing-press in his wonderful Bible. He was not, therefore, a success. I don't want anything that is not successful. What do people mean by heaven and hell? Heaven, a place; where is it? Above. It is outside of nature; outside of law is the place God inhabits. If it is inside of nature, he is governed by law. The earth is his footstool and it revolves 25,000 miles a day. Think of it and what a position God occupies who uses this footstool. What is hell and where is it? We learn about it in the Bible, but what did Jesus Christ want a hell for? If you follow his teachings you must hate your friends and love your enemies. If you were to follow his practical life you would all be bachelors, and then think, in such an event, what a fine world this would be to liv in. The Christian people tell us that God livs in heaven and controls it as well as its opposit, which the Bible designates as hell. I leave it to any one in the audience whether this is true or not. If so, who ruled heaven during Christ's nine months' gestation, or did he appoint some one to take his place in authority during his absence? Is it true that Christ lived? No. I defy the 70,000 ministers to prove it. In speaking of a divinity I mean a Christ of immaculate conception. But I want to find out where heaven and hell are, for we hav been taught that we hav a heaven for our God and a hell for our devil. But since God wrote his work wonderful things hav been learned, and if the localities of heaven and hell are fixed you must look out, or you will get into hell when you wish to go to heaven, for the world moves around on its axis once in twenty-four hours. The more we believe the less we know, and the more we know the less we believe. Therefore, what good does it do to pray to an omnipotent God if he has got everything fixed? Would he make any changes for my whims? No. Now, then, to return to our original question, what are we here for? It is for the purpose of liberating and elevating men, women, and children. Woman is the great soul of life, for from her life is ebbing and flowing. Woman therefore demands a hearing to-day. The Freethinkers of the state of New York should see that women should hav the same rights as men; and you, Mr. Green; you, Mr. President, are here, but where are your wives? (Mr. Green: My wife is in the audience.) More of you would let your wives come if they had taken in washing to pay their expenses. Mary was forced to giv birth to a child in a manger. There is hardly a man in this state, the most wicked one in the Union, who would not take into his house a woman who is about to giv birth to a child. But still the infinit one, the merciful one, allowed Mary to giv birth to Christ in a manger. What is the Freethinker here for to-day? I ask you to come to the rescue of the slave, and if there is a sanctuary let it be our home, and not that center of superstition, the church. Let the babe be impregnated with virtue, and not crime. We are here to exchange thoughts, to protect childhood and womanhood. Never mind to-morrow, but let us take care of to-day. There are hundreds within prison walls who demand our attention, and the highest laws of life demand our investigation. We should not rely upon what was written ten thousand years ago. There are few things I know, but one thing I do know, that there is a grand law of life, and it has impregnated my life as well as yours. Mothers hold you responsible for the incarceration of their boys even if they hav committed a crime.

The address was greeted with loud applause. The quartet then sang the well-known piece, entitled "Sweet and Low," after which Mrs. Judge Krekel, of Missouri, was introduced, and spoke extemporaneously on the subject, "The Levers of Progress." A brief summary of the address is as follows:

There has probably never been a time in the history of civilized man—certainly not in the history of modern civilization—when the whole lump of humanity was so thoroughly leavened by the spirit of growth and progress as at the present time. From center to circumference, from the simplest kind of industry to the loftiest regions of speculativ thought and philosophy, every hand of labor represents an interrogation point, and every tongue voices a question in the interest of the race. As Prof. Clifford has said, "The signs of the times foretell that the kingdom of man is at hand."

To the elocutionist, who recognizes the fact that in mental as well as in physical growth, the simple underlies the complex and it is by following the facts of differentiation that we reach the excellent. It does not seem strange that special interests absorb general good, nor the selfish views obstruct that clearer vision which is at all time necessary to a just estimate of the immortal. I suppose that most Freethinkers are evolutionists; it even transpires that othodox defenders of special tenets are evolutionists, after they hav bridged over the unanswerable (as yet) questions concerning the origin of life; for on last evening our good brother, of the "Lord God" theory of creation, after he had secured the Almighty's services long enough to make the first pair, remanded all the rest to the process of evolution. We hav heard about stealing the livery of heaven to serve the devil in—this would seem to be stealing the livery of the devil to serve God in. But to come back to our subject: if Freethinkers are evolutionists—are advocates and defenders of that growing gospel of humanity which makes the race a unit—which insists that wrong and justice toward the one is wrong and injustice toward the whole—which declares that whenever in the social kinship a human being is despoiled of the right and opportunity to be a good citizen, then may I ask this afternoon respectfully, aye, reverently, why are we not organizing as thoroughly as we are disorganizing? Why are we not building as rapidly as we are demolishing? Is it not true that opportunities are neglected—that capital is squandered—that the mightiest levers of human progress are left to-day in the overburdened, nerveless hands of that very element in society whose existence we deplore and whose condition it is the business of Freethinkers to better. I mean that portion of the race with nothing precious or sweet to liv for, because they were robbed before birth of their natural heritage, a clean and pure life, by the twin vices of ignorance and lust —who hav been systematically robbed ever since by those twin thieves, society and the church, the one taking tribute from honest labor to swell still more the thievish accumulations of monopolists—commercial bandits; the other exacting tributes on the ecclesiastical pretense of a soul, the author and creator of which will damn him for being made in such an imperfect and devilish fashion if he does not comply with the rates of toll and pass over the theological bridge of salvation. Gentleman and ladies, I submit to you this afternoon the question, Are not the levers of progress resting here under this load of ignorance, crime, social, religious, and mental slavery? Are not these levers the clearer and more just views to all intelligent people—inside organization and out—believers and unbelievers of the theological creeds, are coming to hold concerning man's duty and destiny in this world? If so, then every labor organization that protests against slavery to capital, and insists upon the dignity and royalty of honest labor, asks and merits our help; if so every association of men and women protesting against the tyranny and narrowness or environments born out of ignorance and superstitions of the past is worthy of our thoughtful consideration and co-operation.

In conclusion, Mrs. Krekel pleaded earnestly that the Freethinkers would from this date "resolute" less and organize more thoroughly for practical work, organize in school districts, in counties and states, found libraries, encourage intelligence and independence in industries, and closed with the following quotation:

"No truth shall fall; but, weary of their load,
Fear's haggard pillars shall lie down; and the owl,
Hooting the pilgrim on his ruined road,
Shall mock his twilight stories of the soul.
I see far vistas to be man's abode,
Where bell funereal never more shall toll,
Nor cypress quiver;
I see the flashing of the splendid wave
That makes the roses grow on Error's grave,
Along Life's river."

The last speaker of the afternoon session was Mrs. Juliet Severance, of Wisconsin, who delivered an elaborate address on "The Industrial and Financial Problem," of which the following is a brief abstract:

Fellow Laborers, Brothers and Sisters of the Great Human Family: I appear before you, not as a silver-tongued speaker to tickle your fancies, please your conceits, or call forth your applause by lofty flights of oratory; but as one who for years has studied to find out what the matter is in this favored land, that possesses all the elements of prosperity of all other countries in the world; that there can be at the same time creaking warehouses, burdened with the surplus products, and also millions starving—mothers agonizing for their children, who cry for bread they hav not to giv: fathers desperate and ready for almost anything that promises redress.

The first step that should be taken, the first question to be understood by those who would intelligently right a wrong, is to learn from what the wrong has come; in what it had its origin; since if the cause be known a remedy may then be found. If we who deal in industrial remedies think only of the effects we see; if we simply take the pains and aches we suffer, and try and alleviate them by palliativs without inquiring why they come, we may even aggravate the real malady, as they do who deal in pills and powders. If, however, we can get back to the fountain and dry that up, then the streams of suffering that flow from it will cease.

The evil from which our sufferings come is not that there is not enough by which the needs of all might be supplied; but that while there is more than could be consumed, the daily laborers and their families are houseless, naked, and hungry; is not under-production of what is required, but unequal distribution of what we hav. And why is this? Because the strong hav the unquestioned right, legally, to oppress the weak from whatever cause. The few who hav the peculiar talent to aggregate the results of labor secure possession of the net products of the industrial many, and restrain them from their use. Had competition in government been confined to the individual plane as it has been in industry, there could hav been no government of the people in any country. Industrially each person competes with every other for superiority, the frequent result of which is the compulsory idleness of starving millions. As a nation we are politically enlightened, hav a high order of government, but industrially we are savage still—each family or individual contends with every other for superiority as they did politically in the infancy of the race; and these opposing interests clash and keep the political and industrial tides alternately on the ebb and flood of the present suffering. The general business of a country is governed by the same principles as that of the individual. If a person does business on a borrowed capital and pays interest to double the amount of his net profits, giving notes secured by liens upon his capital, he will eventually consume his capital. Now this is just what we as a nation are doing. We pay six hundred millions in cash or bonds, more than the net profits of the conntry's industry annually, as interest and dividends to non-producers. So long as this goes on, so long will the distress increase. There may be temporary alleviations as at the present time, but they will not last. A radical cure is demanded; and the demand is being made in piteous tones from every hut and hovel of the country, from every dive and garret of the city, but these will soon be changed to tones that will not brook delay. Let those to whom the appeal is made beware. The cause of industrial evils, then, lies in the conflict inaugurated by engrafting a highly developed political system upon an industrial system not yet advanced beyond the rudimental plane, and the cure must be to raise the industries to the plane upon which we stand politically, that there may be harmony instead of constant conflict between political and industrial interests—indeed, politics should be abolished or merged into industry.

The basis of all wealth is in the elements—the land, the air, the water. Everything that contributes to the necessities, the comforts, the luxuries of life comes from them. They are what man found when he made his advent on the earth. Every person has an inalienable right in them, a right to use them to support himself. The right to life carries with it the right to that by which it can be maintained. Without this the other is a sham. The "privileged classes" make it a sham, since, while they say to the toilers in the Declaration of Independence, "You hav a right to life," they nullify it when they say, by practice, "You shall hav no right to that by which you maintain it, save as we elect, and at such cost as we may set upon it." These classes hav obtained possession of the free gifts of nature and usurped the power to do with them as their interests decide, without reference to what is right. If the elements belong to universal man, instead of to a class, no person can acquire an ownership to an inch of land, a drop of water, or a breath of air. But the few deprive the many of their use by the right of might; still the right to their us exists inalienable, though trampled under foot, and no less to the land than to the air and water. What would the holders of the land say to him who should bottle up the air and water and assume to deal them out to others for a consideration? Would they submit as tamely as do the many to the few in the instance of the land? No. There would be rebellion at once at the attempt of such a thing; and yet this might be done with air and water as justly as what they do with land. The air, the water, the land exist; man had no hand in making them; they are the first factors in the problem of maintaining life; but, unused, are valueless. Labor is the second factor in this problem, and wealth—being whatever can contribute to the maintenance of life, increase its comforts or luxuries—is the result. Before labor there was no wealth. All wealth comes from labor, hence it belongs to it. If there were none but equitable exchanges made, all evidence of labor would remain with its producers. But the surplus wealth is held by those who had no hand in its production, while the producer sees his fruits added to their aggregations year after year, and his own allowance, in the best of times, reduced constantly nearer the starvation point, and, in the worst, cut off altogether. If every individual had an unrestricted right to use the elements under equal regulations, and should put that right in practice, everybody would be supplied with at least the necessaries of life.

The use of money made the opportunity for the modern merchant. His legitimate functions are the distribution of the fruits of labor, in the interest of laborers and consumers, and as their agent. But from this he degenerates to a speculator on their needs. Prostituting his functions and those of money to selfish purposes, he buys from one at the lowest price (a price leaving him no profit), and sells to the other at the highest price (a price that exhausts his earnings), the difference between the two remaining in his purse—a profit-making system in which many industrial evils hav originated. These middlemen were the first abnormal class. Had they exercised their normal functions only, they would hav been the allies of laborers, acting as their agents in exchanging commodities, and with them shared in the surplusses. But in the greed for gain, the desire to dominate, the passion to possess, they waived their great advantage and became oppressors. But, look at the ills of labor as we may, there seems to be a single system only by which immunity from these may be secured, and this is in organizing it upon the plan of mutual interests or co-operation principles. In a competitiv system there will always be few or many who cannot obtain employment, and there will always be illustrations of the possibility of our getting possession of what thousands hav produced. When financial crises come, as come they will in such a system, the thousands will suffer, and the one will make no sacrifice, unless compelled, to mitigate their sufferings. Though this right to acquire and hold possession in the face of suffering is legally unquestioned, if it be examined in the light of justice, it will not stand a moment. It is the power by which a Cæsar ruled the world; by which kings hav kept their sway; the South its slaves. Some of these subjections were more despotically maintained than is the dominance of wealth over the laboring masses. The liberty the workingman enjoys is more in name than fact. How can he be free whose labor in prosperous times barely feeds and clothes himself and family, leaving him penniless to encounter adversity when turned adrift from work? Or how can he be free whose right to labor for what he needs to eat and drink is in the unrestricted hands of an employer? It is through the ignorance and selfishness of the rich that millions are hungry, homeless, naked, starving, in this land of plenty.

Laborers hav no cause to charge the tardy movement to the rich, since they hav the law-making power in their own hands and hav refused to use it. Until they shall send men to Congress to no longer misrepresent them and their interests, they should rather admit their own responsibility, and make haste to change their previous conduct in political affairs and wage their war against the law, and customs that hav brought on the distress and not against individuals. Beyond the possibility of a doubt the rich do not pay a dollar of taxes, but equally beyond a doubt productiv labor pays them the last farthing, no matter in what form levy may be made; and not only this, but also all the bills of expense of the vast establishments of these same rich, their wine, brandy, and cigars; their fast horses and other fast things; their corruption funds with which they buy and sell the legislativ power against the laborer, and every other thing in which they now indulge, from which he is shut out. His earnings, his hard wrought products, are seized upon by them and turned against him, as an army seizes upon the cannon of its conquered foe and with their shot and shell annihilates what is left that can resist them. Let the mask with which capital has hoodwinked labor fall forever, and let a money be adopted based on the products of the toilers hands, the redeemability of which rests on their willingness and capacity to add to that basis year after year forever. Is it strange that laborers hav not long since had this all arranged? No, it is not. They hav employed the nonproductiv classes to think for them politically and industrially, just as some hav employed ministers to think for them religiously. Until quite recently most people hav swallowed whatever either of these classes has given them without questioning; but the questioning has begun in earnest, and the curtain will soon rise on a new scene in the drama of the industries, as well as that of religion, and reveal the grand spectacle, a whole nation, 50,000,000 people doing its own thinking and guiding its action by its thought in every department of life. When this shall come, when the curtain shall be rung up to show this scene, the star of hope for downtrodden labor will rise even to the zenith, shedding its benignant rays upon an emancipated prosperous, happy, people.

At the close of the address the quartet sang "The Star Spangled Banner." An adjournment was was then taken until 7:30 o'clock.

The Academy of Music was comfortably filled at the session of the association in the evening, and many occupied seats in the gallery. Secretary Green entertained the audience with a few remarks while the people were assembling. "See the Pale Moon," was then sung by Mr. Hollister and Mr. Fried, to the evident entertainment of the audience, which in vain called for a second selection. The president then introduced T. B. Wakeman, of New York, who had been announced as the speaker of the evening, and who would answer the arguments of Rev. Mr. Mitchell, the speaker of the previous evening.

Mr. Wakeman commenced by saying that the Christian who reasons is lost. "Believe or be damned." Such were

(Continued on page 586.)

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT, - - - Proprietor.

CONDUCTED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 15, 1883.

The Convention and the Clergy.

The Rochester Convention, it seems, has stirred up the churches all around. While professing to believe that the convention had no effect, and did no damage to Christianity, the clergy all over the country are "answering" the speeches made there. Their arguments are of the usual style—denunciation and dirt-throwing. Their mud-balls are aimed especially at the founder of THE TRUTH SEEKER. But these missils hav been in the air so long they are dried out, and, crumbling to pieces, only scatter over the throwers.

Most of the preachers severely condemn the secular press for spreading the proceedings of the convention, although if the assembly was so harmless in its attacks upon the church, we see no good reason for this censure. Another point (and somewhat qualifying their general statement of the harmlessness of the affair) is, that no real Christian can be affected. Just what a real Christian is the reverend idlers forget to add. According to the New Testament, the real Christians are they who can handle deadly serpents and imbibe deadly poisons "in my name" without fear of evil consequences. If the clergy mean that the teachings of the convention will not affect such people, they are right—for that kind of folks are all dead. If they mean the average church-member who pays his pew rent as sacredly and regularly as he sands his sugar or files off the end of his yard-stick, who looks with horror upon a Freethinker, and never reads a word outside of the Tribune and his weekly Church Scavenger, they are also right. "To reason with such people is like giving medicin to the dead." We do not expect either of the above classes will hav their ideas changed. Physical and mental corpses are poor material out of which to make Freethinkers. But there is another class that will be benefited if the published proceedings can be laid before them. We mean the thirty-five millions of people in this country who are neither coffined nor confined in churches. They are the great public who, though leaning yet a little toward the traditional church—warped in their young days—hav yet to decide whether the secular government so fairly, justly, vehemently, asked for by the Freethinkers shall be had, or whether the reactionary bigots, headed by the Methodist and Catholic churches, shall carry the day. To them we appeal, and to them the speakers at the convention spoke. The press of Rochester alone gave the lecturers an audience reaching far up into the thousands besides those assembled in the Academy of Music. The Herald of this city carried the number up to the hundreds of thousands. To say that the proceedings had no effect upon this vast body of people is to talk much nonsense—and none knows it better than the clergy themselvs. They but talk for effect; to deceive the trusting people of their parishes. They themselvs are not deceived.

If there was no danger to be apprehended to the elect, why was there an "anti-Freethinkers' meeting" held on the Rochester court-house steps on the 4th? Why do the ministers consume so much time and paper in "answering" the speakers? If the convention was like a summer's breath that came and went and left no impress, why should the thunder from half a hundred pulpits be necessary to remove that impress? No, shepherds, you are scared, and you know it. All you are now trying to do is to keep the sheep from a stampede. You see your influence going. You see your salaries going. You see your easy times of idleness slipping away. You see the hour approaching when a minister's word will be no better than an honest man's, when hypocrisy is not clothed in purple and honesty garbed in rags. As an intercessor with heaven, your occupation is going, going, going. Better save an easy-chair and a pair of slippers while yet you may, for woman is fast gaining her senses and will not long be a toy and plaything for the Lord's self-styled mouth-pieces. Every meeting the Freethinkers hold is a nail in your coffin. The Rochester convention was a whirlwind sweeping you all out to sea. That meeting had a tremendous effect upon the country, and if you wish to remove it we will giv a little advice for your own good, and that is, explain the facts there set forth, and do away with denunciation. Otherwise the outside public will conclude you cannot do it.

The Resolutions.

The resolutions passed by the late convention must commend themselvs to all interested in procuring a really secular government and in removing from Freethinkers the legal disabilities now imposed upon them by reason of their disbelief in the Christian religion. As the League platform is an epitome of what the Liberals ask for, its simple reaffirmation was perhaps sufficient, but, it seems to us, the association, as a state organization, might with propriety and pertinence hav addressed a memorial to our next legislature asking that the hundred and more millions now invested in church buildings in this state may be forced to bear their share of the burden of taxation; that the state support of Protestant and Catholic institutions be withdrawn and forever withheld; that all especial Sunday legislation be repealed; that the absurd custom of chaplains at state prisons and penitentiaries and all public assemblies whose members are paid by the state be done away with; a request, in short, that all religious bodies and societies, for whatever purpose, be left to support themselvs, and sink and swim according to the demand in open market for the commodities they hav to peddle out. Such a demand would hav received some attention from the legislature, because the politicians of that body could readily see there were votes behind it, and if there is anything in this world a politician worships and respects it is votes. We must make some concrete beginning in this matter soon. Generalities are all right in their place, but there are enough Freethinkers in the state now to do more than talk. Of the five million inhabitants of New York, probably half a million would favor the above-mentioned reforms, and some concessions can certainly be wrung from fearful politicians (many of whom secretly favor them and much more) within the next year or two.

The bold avowment of sympathy with the cause of woman is a strong plank. No man who loves and respects his wife and daughter can object to giving them the ballot, a weapon freely placed in the corrupt hands of ignorant and besotted Catholics and plantation negroes. To withhold it is to place women below these people in intelligence. We were glad to see that every reference to woman suffrage in the convention was heartily applauded by the audience. It proves that Liberals stand miles and miles ahead of the churches in advocating reforms beneficial to the human race.

Labor, too, receives its just recognition. If the workingman could only be made to see it, he would find that his true friends are outside the churches, which degrade him to slavery, because God condemned Adam to get his bread by the sweat of his brow. Labor produces all the world has and should demand and receive its rightful share. Under our present Christian system of corrupting legislatures and buying laws, he gets almost nothing. In a large measure it is his own fault. In another way it is not, for he is governed by his surroundings, and fifteen hundred years of dinning in his ears, "Servants, obey your masters," has made him a moral coward. To the Liberals must he look for initiativ measures of relief. It behooves our leaders to pay more attention to the struggle now going on between labor and capital. The resolution passed is a step in the right direction. Let it be closely followed up by some practical measures looking to concessions on the one side and improvement of self on the other. Above all else, should some honest, intelligent men be elected to office to lead in the necessary legislativ reforms.

The suggestion to Liberals to organize more closely is also an admirable one, and should be heeded immediately. The compacter and more thorough the organization, the quicker can the objects of the National Liberal League be attained. By all means let us organize. Naturally the hand of fellowship would be extended to all similar bodies. Our European brethren are working vigorously, and if Mr. Bradlaugh has not succeeded in obtaining his rights in England, the French hav recorded some splendid victories over the church. Their text-book for schools are being gradually secularized, the Jesuits, the most dangerous enemies France had, are deprived of power, and the vast hoarded wealth of the church is made to pay its due proportion of taxation. The Liberals of this country can study the work performed by French Freethinkers with profit to themselvs.

The resolution of sympathy to Mrs. Bennett is a graceful tribute to her as a woman and to the memory of her dead husband, who, though sleeping, is still a powerful living force for good. For being true to this man the convention can well afford to bear the flings and taunts of the pulpiteers. In the years to come his "crime" will be a halo of glory to even those who now malign him because they do not understand him.

The Charitable View of a Methodist Gentleman.

To a correspondent who after reading the accounts of the Rochester Convention anxiously inquires, "Will the Freethinkers get the ascendancy?" the Methodist Advocate says:

"He would do well to read the second psalm and consider that from the beginning till now the enemies of God hav been 'gnashing their teeth and melting away.'"

This opinion is at variance with the admission of the Rev. Mr. Mitchell who addressed the convention. He did not believe in the melting theory, for he said that he "admitted the fact of the spread of Infidel sentiments in our day as never before in the history of the world." It is evident that either the psalmist or Mr. Mitchell is mistaken, and in our opinion—and we add the opinion of every one whose knowledge exceeds his faith and whose opinion is worth having—it is not the Rev. Mr. Mitchell. The same paper further says:

"The attitude of the gospel toward honest minds tortured with doubt is 'Him that is weak in the faith receive ye;' but of these blatant and boastful haters of God it says with St. Peter, 'For when they speak great swelling words of vanity, they allure through the lusts of the flesh, through much wantonness, those that were clean escaped from them who liv in error. While they promis them liberty, they themselvs are the servants of corruption."

This is a very bold charge to make, that all the speakers who occupied the Rochester platform are "servants of corruption." It would be well, perhaps, to hav a few suits for libel commenced against the Advocate just to teach the reverend editor to bridle his tongue and pen, for truly can the speakers say with John, "We hav not sinned; we make him a liar."

The Monument Fund.

During the past three weeks the subscriptions received for this purpose are as follows:

Previously acknowledged,	$1,113 11	C. A. Jones,	50
Benj. Griffin	1 00	James McGinnis,	50
J. H. Jamison,	1 35	F. H. Nicoles,	50
L. A. Fuller,	10 00	E. N. Kingsley,	2 50
Mrs. M. Repp,	1 00	George Chamberlain,	1 00
Geo. Geer,	5 00	H. W. Pinney,	1 00
E. D. B. and H. M. Blakeman,	1 00	D. T. Ross,	1 00
G. L. Parsons, M. D.,	1 00	James Lindsay,	1 00
M. E. Atwood,	1 00	Mrs. E. B. Dallon;	1 00
N. Munroe,	1 00	Wm. M. Blan,	1 00
Robert Bruce,	1 00	A. W. Beery,	1 00
John Hammond,	1 00	John H. Hirt,	50
Tyler Adams,	50	Mrs. Luman Peck,	1 00
N. E. Knox,	1 00	D. R. Christian,	1 00
Ralph Helm,	5 00	C. Fannie Allyn,	1 00
T. B. Evans,	1 00	Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Gault,	5 00
Missouri Friend (J. J. T.),	5 00	H. J. Purdy,	1 00
M. R. Cheney,	1 00	H. B. Jones,	1 00
		E. J. Wellman,	1 00
		W. W. Fraser,	1 00
		Total,	$1,174 46

THE raising of the monument to Mr. Bennett, has aroused the ire of a whole pack of journalistic jackals, who vent their rage in impotent howls. We hav been the recipient of a number of papers containing more or less scurrilous editorials, and we hav forwarded documents to the writers from which they can, if they please, learn the truth. We cannot do more than this, for these charges hav been so oft refuted that further reply is wasted on their pachydermatous consciences. If all the state prisons of the country were raked with a finetooth comb no more miserable wretches than these could be found. The English language lacks words to fitly characterize their meanness, and express the indignation that all decent men must feel at their baseness.

To the Liberals of the United States and Canada.

In these days of religious revivals, when Freethought is so persistently being misrepresented from the various pulpits, it has been deemed necessary to inaugurate a counteracting propagandism.

With this view George Chainey, of Boston, Mass., and Charles Watts, of London, England, hav undertaken to make an extended tour throughout the United States and Canada for the purpose of giving a correct exposition of Freethought principles and their real objects.

By these means the public will be put in possession of the correct nature of our views, and the clergy will at the same time be given an opportunity of substantiating their erroneous charges against the teaching of Liberalism, as Mr. Watts is prepared to meet any representativ clergymen in public discussion upon the relativ value of the two systems.

To help us in this desirable and all-important work we invite the Liberals in their respectiv towns and cities to co-operate with us in the following manner: First, send us word what halls can be secured with open dates and terms, on the basis of a percentage of receipt. Second, state the most favorable time for your locality. Third, giv us names and addresses of all known Liberals in your town or city.

Wherever we find a disposition to aid in this enterprise we shall make the visit at our own risk. All communications to be addressed Messrs. Watts and Chainey, 41 Fort Avenue, Roxbury, Boston, Mass.

P. S.—In this endeavor to extend a true knowledge of Liberalism Messrs. Chainey and Watts wish it to be distinctly understood that their object is not to represent any one particular section of the great Freethought party, their sole aim being to expound those broad and fundamental principles only upon which the entire body of Freethinkers are in unison.

Infidel Judges.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The fact that "an elder in the Reformed church" is a proficient in cursing, you deem insufficient evidence of his disbelief in soul-saving Christianity. Quite true; but when a profane elder expresses to an avowed Freethinker his disbelief, and when a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States says that all but one on the bench are Freethinkers, is not that sufficient evidence to justify the statement that on the question of the divine origin of Christianity the court stands adversely eight to one?

The Christian at Work, Dr. Talmage's paper, in controverting the allegation, names five nominal Christians on the bench, two Episcopalians, a Presbyterian, a Reformed churchman, and a Channing Unitarian; and is "not advised as to the remaining five." There are only nine judges; take five from nine leaves only four. The Christian editor did not intend to make an error against his own cause, any more than "Antichrist" meant to mislead the public when he said he was credibly informed that the only Christian on the bench was Judge Strong. The fact is, Judge Strong retired nearly two years ago, but the writer did not remember it until after the statement was published. He now, therefore, corrects the same by saying that the information was imparted to his informant between two and four years ago by one of the judges. Since that time at least four changes hav occurred, and two of the five so-called Christian judges, namely, Blatchford and Gray, are new incumbents.

It may be, as the Christian at Work alleges, that three of the older judges are church-members; but what of that? The undersigned is still a member of a Calvinistic church, and so is his informant, unless both hav been dismissed without their knowledge. One was sprinkled and the other ducked; but neither of us cares to inform against himself lest he incur the penalty of excommunication. Antic.

Amen! Mr. Buckley.

From the Advocate of September 6, 1883.

The Connecticut minister who has been detected in plagiarism, and resigned his pastorate in disgrace, pleaded in mitigation that his wife was sick, and he had no time to prepare new sermons. That was flimsy. If he could leave to go to the pulpit, he could prepare while with her. Hundreds of ministers hav prepared heart-moving sermons while sitting by the bed-side of a sick wife or child through the long days and longer nights. If he could not prepare well, the time to throw himself on the sympathy of his people was when he gave them the best he could, not when he was detected in stealing. Probably he concocted the excuse to cover his fall. A man who will steal sermons will hav little conscience about lying if he can save "the cause"—that is, in his eyes, himself—from disgrace. There is a close connection between this and other kinds of immorality. Of eleven ministers convicted of intemperance, licentiousness, or dishonesty, eight were proved to hav habitually plagiarized. "Don't trust men with chickens who will steal eggs," says the proverb, and a sermon-thief is a conscious impostor. Yet not every immoral minister stole his sermons. Nor has every sermon-thief committed other overt acts of immorality, but none need be surprised when such a man does. Out of the pulpit with them—the sooner the better!

A Campaign Document.

Every Liberal and every Christian that we can possibly persuade to do so should read Mr. Wakeman's reply to the Rev. Thomas Mitchell. The whole argument of the latter was for the dogma of creation, upon which the Christian religion is ultimately founded. Mr. Wakeman's reply is a magnificent presentation of the doctrin of evolution and the multitude of facts that support it. There is hardly a scholar in the world so thoroughly equipped for this task as Mr. Wakeman. All that science has accomplished seems to be at his finger's end. He has mastered not the generalities only, but the details of this most wonderful triumph of human thought. The material universe, the organic life of the globe, the history of man through the immense sweep of ages, his social groupings and advancements to higher forms of intelligence and power, with the brilliant promis of the future—these aspects of the scientific outlook are depicted with noble eloquence and learning. The great principles of our movement are declared with admirable precision and comprehensivness. Here, therefore, is a campaign document which should find a million readers inside and outside the ranks of Liberalism. It is a tremendous cannonade that we should keep a-going right against the errors of the past. Arrangements are made for the immediate publications of this address. Subscriptions are solicited for this purpose. Every Liberal who has a dollar to spare is asked to send it at once to the Committee of Publication. In return for his dollar he will receive five copies of this address packed full of the latest arguments and demonstrations of science. Let there be an instant reply to this appeal. At least one hundred one-dollar subscriptions are needed for this enterprise. No one can fail to see the good that can thus be accomplished for the dissemination of the truth so necessary to human progress.

Address, Samuel P. Putnam,
Chairman Com. of Pub., care Truth Seeker office.

The Church Meddling with Politics.

From the New York Sun.

The Iowa Republicans are trying to carry the state on the issue of prohibition. They are doing a good deal of dirty work in the attempt. But the end always justifies the means to faithful Republicans.

The Republican managers in Iowa are working the church with unexampled thoroughness. The ministers hav been called upon to come out in defense of the grand old party, and they hav responded nobly. It is said that more than five hundred sermons were preached from Iowa pulpits last Sunday in behalf of the Republican canvass. After the services collections were taken up. The proceeds will be sent to the Republican State Committee, and will be used in saving the state by foul means or fair from the sin and shame of Democratic rule.

Mr. Jay Hubbell was an unschooled boy compared with the managers of the Republican campaign in Iowa. It was a pretty piece of business assessing charwomen, but the Iowa conception of raising a campaign fund is more sublimely impudent. It is reported that a circular has been sent to the churches, "assessing them $10 each for campaign purposes."

The Methodist churches seem to hav been especially zealous. Unfortunately, some Iowa Democrats, exceptions, no doubt, to the general depravity of their party, are members of Methodist churches. At Des Moines, for instance, a Democratic candidate for the legislature belongs to a church, the pastor of which delivered a fierce Republican sermon last Sunday, and then called upon his people to make up a contribution of $100 to the Republican campaign fund. This kind of thing is not pleasant for the Democratic church-members, and many of them hav about made up their minds to leave churches in which they cannot worship without being abused and insulted.

There must be Republicans in Iowa who cannot see without indignation, any more than these Democrats can, the foolish and wicked attempts of ministers of the gospel to leave the direction of consciences and assume that of political opinions. Things hav come to a pretty pass when the services of the church are turned into stump speeches, and preachers with the name of God fresh on their lips importune their congregations for money to help men like James F. Wilson keep their grip on the state. No, this attempt to work the churches is likely to do the Republicans more harm than good.

We advise the Iowa ministers who hav been collecting assessments and making Republican harangues in church to be very careful. They mean well, but their judgment is not good. Otherwise they would see that their intrusion of bitter partisanship into sacred places is a dangerous thing. They can do a great deal of harm to religion in the communities in which they liv, and in the long run they will find that the Republican party will not gain votes by means of their advocacy.

It is a grave question which is the more disgusting, the dishonesty or the hypocrisy of certain Republicans.

Notes.

Alexander Webber, a young German, living at 184 W. 10th street, this city, took a dose of prussic acid last Friday, and then knelt down by his bedside and prayed till death overtook him. What does the Christian Advocate think now about Christians committing suicide?

To the correspondent who asked if the recent reported finding of remains of Noah's ark is true we would say, No. The whole thing is a humbug. No churchman, even, claims its truth, and what they will not claim is not worth claiming. The yarn is a more palpable fraud, if possible, than Shapira's ancient manuscript. It is only a matter to joke about.

The Liberals of Kansas organized under the name of the "Kansas Liberal League," at their camp-meeting held at Valley Falls on the 2d inst. The officers are J. M. Hagaman, Concordia, president; E. C. Walker, Valley Falls, secretary and chairman of executiv committee; Dr. R. C. Raymond, Oskaloosa, treasurer. Delegates to the National Liberal League Congress were also appointed.

The First Spiritual and Liberal Society of Chattanooga, Tennessee, will hold a grove-meeting near the city, commencing on the 13th, and closing the 28th day of October, 1883. This is an epoch in the South, a grand rally of Spiritualists, the first on the south side of Mason and Dixon's line. Some of the most noted speakers and mediums in the country will be present, giving an opportunity for full and thorough investigation of Spiritualism. Everybody invited.

The few missionaries in India evidently combine business and religion, as is evidenced by the following advertisment:

"The Wonderful Python.—These reptiles are made of horn. and can be lengthened up to sixty inches. They are made expressly to teach children what hell is, and what it contains—as even an old man would be frightened at its sight. They are put up in boxes measuring about one and a quarter inches. We would recommend parents to buy one for each of their children, as they are not only a toy, but a toy from which benefit may be derived."

We are very glad to learn that Mr. Watts is meeting with success and appreciation in Canada, where he is at present lecturing. He will do an immense amount of good in the next four months if kept busy. The Hamilton, Ont., Tribune says of his appearance in that town:

"There was not standing room in Central Hall last evening for those (among them at least one clergyman) who crowded to hear the lecture by Mr. Charles Watts, editor of the English Secular Review. The audience was composed of socially respectable and, as the world goes, moral people. A number of ladies and several children even were present. Mr. Watts is an advanced Freethinker, and came at the request of those in the same cause here to propound, and, if challenged, to defend the doctrins of what he calls "The secular party." Mr. James Holland occupied the chair. Mr. Watts was received with applause on rising to speak. He is a fine man, with a grand head, and is an eloquent speaker. He said he came to represent principles frequently condemned from the general pulpit by those who never cared to investigate what they were so willing to deprecate. He came as a student, not as a dogmatizer, and if, when he was through, any one could show him his error, he would gladly sit at a teacher's feet. Mr. Geo. Maddock explained that the funds for the lecture came from contributions by friends of the cause. Mr. Thos. Littlehales moved a vote of thanks to the lecturer, which was indorsed by the audience. The lecturer was frequently and warmly applauded during the evening."

One Touch of Nature.

From the Arkansaw Traveler.

A boy met a youthful acquaintance in the street, and exclaimed: "Didn't I tell you, Jack Busby, that I was a goin' to whip you when I caught you out?" "Go away, Bill, I don't want to fight." "Maybe you don't think I can whip you?" "It don't make any difference whether you can whip we or not. I don't want to fight. My mother—" "Yes, your mother knows I can whale you." "My mother's dead. She died this morning." "I didn't known it, Jack, and you mustn't think hard of me. I ain't got nothing against you. I wouldn't hit you, and if another boy was ter come up and hit you now, I'd knock him down. There, don't cry. What yer got in that bundle?" "A black dress." "Come on, and let me carry it for you."

The platform of the American Non-Conformist contains some sound planks. Among them we note:

"Equal and exact justice for all.

"No sect, no creed, no denomination, orthodox or heterodox, shall hav any precedence whatever in the distribution of the wealth and privileges of the nation.

"All church property shall be assessed and taxed like any other property.

"All property shall bear its exact proportion of taxation.

"Not a dollar shall be paid out of the public money for chaplains. Congressmen and senators ought to keep posted sufficiently to take turns in informing heaven what they havn't done, and those who tarry too long at the wine, or with 'Delilah' so as to get behind, shall pay a proxy out of their own pockets. Carried."

(Continued from page 583.)

the sentiments, although not the exact words with which our religious friends met us at the last convention. Here we hav a scholar, who has met us on the ground of reason, and we are delighted, for, for the first time, we are recognized as belligerents. Though meeting as belligerents, it is in no unfriendly spirit, but as gentlemen to reason together. Our reverend friend has presented the issue fairly—which will you hav for your salvation, science or religion? Upon that issue the Freethinkers of the world are on the side of science, regarding that as the only voice of revelation to which we should listen. The word science has come to mean, practically, evolution. This term we apply to the heavens, the earth, and to all living things, and to the social world as well; and by following the line out, we are able to giv a solution of all the phenomena of the world and predict the future of the race and tell what the future state is to be; in fact, doing everything that religion claims to do, but with the difference that we account for all these things by reason and by known laws, in which lies the radical difference between us and our opponents.

Mr. Wakeman then defined some technical terms by reading extracts from Spencer, Lyell, and others, and, continuing, said that no man could controvert the facts of science and be listened to. Numerous facts found in the geological formation of the earth were cited as proofs of the extreme antiquity of the earth. Said he, if men would become familiar with the facts of science and geology the utterances of the speaker the previous evening would appear as the merest trash. It is not proved that the nebula theory is a ridiculous hypothesis. It is a theory that more nearly accounts for the facts of nature and the solar system than any other theory which has yet been advanced. Our astronomy works almost perfectly, and our geology, so far as we hav been able to demonstrate it, is alike perfect. If this be true, it is a complete answer to their arguments. And I defy the gentleman, or any one else, to show that a single thing was ever created. Does he show that God ever made it or touched it? No. Does he show where God is? He acknowledges he does not know. If this world is limitless where is there room for God to get outside of it to make it? If there is a God outside of the world, who is self-existent, then where did he come from? On the contrary, the world, as we know it, had no beginning and had no limit.

Compared to these solar questions the animals and plants upon this earth are very trifling matters. Protoplasm, said he, is a most wonderful substance, far exceeding the diamond, for it has the principle of life. It is made up of six substances. Extracts were read from Ward's "Dynamic Sociology" to define protoplasm and to show its component parts, the discovery of which he said was the most astonishing discovery of the age. If one could only understand this "little fellow" he could fathom the whole theory of life, which, as Ward says, is only a property of matter. In reaching protoplasm we hav not only reached the properties of life, but everything essential to life itself. The first beginnings of life undoubtedly first took place in the midst of the sea, where now there are millions of inorganic protoplastic matter. Following the discovery of protoplasm was the theory, shown by Darwin to be true, although first advanced by Laplace, the theory of evolution. It is not necessary to demonstrate the correctness of this philosophy, to show all the links in the chain, and no one ever expected to show them all. It is enough, if some of the links are shown, to prove that evolution accounts for the existence of all the plants and animals on this earth.

"The battle has been fought and won." So says Professor Marsh, of Yale College, at the dinner given to Herbert Spencer in New York, although a few stragglers may still linger in the rear. The genealogy of some animals now living has been made out perfectly and others are to follow, and evolution is now a demonstrated truth accepted by naturalists the world over. Let my opponent produce a single fact against it. If he asked for the facts of evolution, I reply to him that he is one of the facts and that he got here in some way. Referring to the story of the egg, the speaker said that it was first laid by a worm, and that was a natural process. The first protoplasm was the egg from which all life came, and it was always in the world, and if not in the seed, was in the air, which is full of it, and it has always been in the world. Not a particle of matter can be exposed anywhere but this matter will spring to life. The time will come when protoplasm will yield to the power of the chemist and be produced the same as the diamond is now produced, hence we see that there is no need of a God. If it be true, as the speaker said, that we came from a clam, let us make the best of it, for a clam is a very useful thing, and as between some monkeys and Adam there is not much choice. As for Adam, I hope he is not the father of us all, although he may be of all the monkeys. For myself I willingly accept the clam, as my progenitor, and so we end with biology, by which we find that science is triumphant and creation is nowhere.

Adam, it is said, fell, and it was necessary that there should be a second Adam. But, first, nobody was ever created perfect and nobody ever fell; but man has been gradually working his way up to his present condition of progress. This simple fact does away with all the so-called scheme of salvation of the reverend gentleman. Having got hold of the line of progress of human history, we hav got hold of the line of solution of sociology, and hav found the law of historical progress. According to this line, our lives and our future state can be clearly determined. In the first place, our ancestors were savages, and were held together by their religious beliefs. They peopled the world and everything in it with spirits, and as a relief against the ills of these the medicin man arose and gradually took the lead of tribes. By degrees the lower tribes were absorbed by the stronger, and as transitions were made they began to ascribe spirits to the heavenly bodies. The natural outgrowth of this progress was the priesthood by whom the people were held as slaves, the rite of polytheism, and finally free thought. When the fall of the Roman empire came this gradual disintegration was broken up and followed by the integration of Christ, and a new stage of life and power took the arena, and the human soul in its agony made a leap and built a realm in the skies and a realm in hell. In a short time this so took hold upon the people as to absorb the temporal power, giving to the world the papal power. Under the law of evolution we can trace the steps by which the great empire of Rome passed into the empire of the pope, and from that the great so-called spiritual empire was not a revelation at all. We are no longer compelled to grope in the dark as to the origin of Christianity. We admit that the incarnation of Christ was a reality in the minds of the people, but never a reality in fact. St. Paul was an important personage by which this incarnation was brought about. He thought that he saw the evidences of this incarnation while in a trance. Paul was the real founder of Christianity, and wrote his so-called revelations long before the gospels were written. He wrote purely from hallucination, and the story of Christ, written long afterward, was made up from this hallucination. So were many of the other facts connected with the Israelites, where the events of history were perverted and thrown back, as many other facts in history hav been done.

The Bible is not a revelation, but has come about as a natural result of evolution as an abundance of other history has been made. After the new sect were first called Christians at Antioch, they gradually drifted to Rome, and a bitter struggle ensued between the new spiritual power and the Roman power. But this does not prove the truth of the revelation. Later, about the year 1600, there came a new disintegration, and the pope began to tremble. This disintegration has gone on until it has brought us here. The church has sought to strangle modern astronomy because it interferes with their "heaven above." The Mosaic account of creation is not consistent with modern astronomy. Man began to see that it was idle to talk about being the children of one father when there was no father up there. Theology had to fight or die; and it fought and still fights. It tried to put down the other gods, as evidence the crusades, but the gods checkmated each other and they made a perfect pudding of it. The corruption of the priesthood was followed with the Protestant reform, which was an effort to readjust the matter. This reformation was the great bridge that brought us over from the slough of slavery, and we will ever giv thanks to Luther and his cohorts. To make this readjustment they had to step down in superstition, but this stepping down opened the path to reason. We are a new rebellion, throwing out the idea of individual liberty, and we are clear that we are one humanity in continuity, and that the old God has vanished, and in his stead is the universe. Ths ideal Christ has turned into man growing better and better through the ages. This givs us a new idea of the future and grander ideas of life and of the heaven that is to be. Those who are to take the charge of the world and its affairs are those who hav grasped this new idea. As a man, my opponent is a gentleman, and is as good as his religion will let him be, but as a Christian he is a tiger. If his theory is true, we ought to go to hell. If the old story is true, we are done for sure.

The key of the future is in our hands, and upon us rests the responsibility; with want staring us in the face, and with persecution following us we are bound to succeed. The most pitiable man in the world is the one that goes about trying to save his own soul, eternally selfish. Our hell is the fear that we shan't be able to get our work done while we liv.

Mr. Wakeman's address was listened to with close attention and when he closed it was ten minutes past 10 o'clock. The quartet sang "The Tyrolian Ducks" with such pleasure to the audience as to elicit a hearty encore, which they acknowledged with a bow.

Rev. Mr. Mitchell arose to giv a twenty minutes' reply. He expressed his gratification at having Mr. Wakeman to answer his arguments. He was a capable man in his line. He was surprised at being taken to account for questioning certain scientific statements. If this questioning was Freethought, he was happy to say that he did not hav any of it. It had been constantly enunciated from this platform that it was right to question the opinions of others and it had not even been thought out of place to call God Almighty in question. But he said he could not be crowded down in that manner, for he was a Freethinker. That would not go down. He said he traced his pedigree to Adam, and not to a monkey. He had not sought to teach, but to reason and to come to conclusions. He had a right to expect that these arguments and conclusions would be analyzed and shown reasonably false, if possible. Not one of the forty syllogisms given had been called in question, and not an argument had been given to show that one argument adduced was false, and if any one would show that a single one was thus overthrown he would defend it. His speech was on record and let the gentleman's be placed side by side with it and published to the world as given. In response to the invitation of the speaker a number of gentlemen in the audience sought to question him, but he objected to answering all at once. Continuing, he said he dared to differ with Spencer, and continued at some length to refute the arguments of evolutionists. Having exhausted his time, the audience, at 10:45 o'clock, generously voted him all the time he wanted, with the right for Mr. Wakeman to hav five minutes to close. Mr. Mitchell then continued for some time paying his respects to spontaneous generation, and other theories of evolution. He said that if these theories were true it didn't make any difference whether a potato had an eye or not, it would grow, and a man would be born whether he had a mother or not, and life, he said, was a combination of all the vital organs, the removal of any one of which was fatal to life.

Mr. Wakeman replied briefly, saying that he had supplied facts, leaving it to the audience to supply the reasons, and closed by remarking that the audience was an intelligent one and needed no further light.

A vote of thanks was then given to Rev. Mr. Mitchell for coming to the convention to speak. Mr. Hall then gave a recitation, following it with a song, which he accompanied with music upon the guitar, after which the convention adjourned. Most of the audience remained until the close, notwithstanding it was past 11 o'clock, and both speakers were heartily applauded.

J. H. Burnham presided over the convention Saturday morning in the absence of President Brown; Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows,

President—T. L. Brown, of Binghamton.
Treasurer—W. S. Bell, of Boston, Mass.
Recording Secretary—A. B. Stebbins, Canisteo.
Corresponding Secretary—H. L. Green, Salamanca.
Vice-Presidents—Albany county, H. Wilbur, Green Island, Allegany county, William R. Mills, Hume; Browne county; George Sims, Binghamton; Cattaraugus county, Clark Burchard, East Otto; Cayuga county, L. DeWitt Griswold, Auburn; Chemung county, M. Herty, Elmira; Clinton county, G. P. Lappelle, More; Columbia county, Oliver Prentiss, Mt. Lebanon; Cortland county, Wm. C. Hunt, Scott; Delaware county, Benjamin Green, Bartonsville; Erie county, E. M. Seikman, Hamburg; Essex county, Dr. F. L. Lyon, Bloomingdale; Franklin county, J. C. Reynolds, Bombay; Fulton county, Lawrence Fay, Gloversville; Genessee county, Dr. Charles Holton, Batavia; Green county, John Carrie, Leeds; Herkimer county, C. W. S. Lewis, Ilion; Jefferson county, L. D. Olney, Waterson; Kings county, W. R. Cameron, Brooklyn; Lewis county, Thomas Bacon, Leydon; Livingston county, H. B. McNair, Dansville; Madison county, H. Hannibal, H. Cady, Peterborough; Monroe county, Moses Hayes, Rochester; Montgomery county, Henry Clapman, Fulton; New York county, E. W. Chamberlain, New York city; Niagara county, J. M. Harwood, Hess Road; Oneida county, O. H. White, Utica; Onondaga county, Isaac Van Schoeck; Orleans county, Peter Yanner, Albion; Ontario county, John Peck, Naples; Orange county, Henry W. Mier, Middleton; Oswego county, W. J. Bredt, N. Hannibal; Otsego county, A. E. Can, Collinsville; Queens county, Charles E. Townsend, Locust Valley: Rensselaer county, M. A. Morrison; Richmond county, J. E. Haynes, East Brighton; St. Lawrence county, O. C. Gleson, Hennellon; Rockland county, J. Brooks, Sloatsburg; Saratoga county, J. J. Dunlap, Waterford; Schenectady county, Jonathan Baker, Schenectady; Seneca county, Dr. J. H. Purdy, Seneca Falls; Schuyler county, George G. Mosher, Watkins; Steuben county, D. F. Sweetland, Hornellsville; Suffolk county, C. M. Bennett, Narrowsburg; Tioga county, Gilbert Newell, Owego; Tompkins county, Stephen Brown, Ithaca; Ulster county, A. Hoadley, Ellenville; Washington county, R. J. Hurbert, Whitehall; Wayne county, Conrad Wolcott; Westchester county, W. E. Sutton, Mt. Kisco; Wyoming county, W. S. Graves, Castile; Yates county, S. Sall, Penn Yan.

Executiv Committee—S. P. Putnam, New York city; O. H. P. Kinney, Waverly; Dr. A. Robinson, McLean; Sigismond Block, Cape Vincent; John Peck, Naples; Mrs. Asenath C. Macdonald, New York city; Clement Austin, Rochester; C. Houghton, Batavia; Amy Post, of Rochester.

Courtlandt Palmer, of New York, from the committee on resolutions, presented the following, which were adopted:

We, Freethinkers of the state of New York, in convention assembled, agree to and adopt the following statement as expressiv of our aims and objects:

1. Believing with Ralph Waldo Emerson that "thoughts rule the world," we feel that this Freethinkers' Association, in common with all sister organizations, has as its mission the two grandest objects that can animate the mind and stimulate the effort of mankind; first, the disproof, destruction and removal of all the errors of theological dogmas, together with the attendant evils which such errors hav fastened and must fasten upon the race, and second, the demonstration, construction, and establishment of a new order based on liberty, science, and humanity, thus to constitute a real providence and inspiration in regard to the entire direction of this world in all its departments of life, whether of thought, art, industry, politics, or morals.

2. We reaffirm the general principles of the National Liberal League in its advocacy of the total separation of church and state; of the protection of all citizens in their equal religious, civil, and political rights; of universal secular, scientific, and compulsory education; of the impartial secular administration and enforcement of the laws by secular authorities only; of free speech, free press, and free mail, and we recommend the formation everywhere of auxiliary Leagues.

3. We advocate the removal of all the disabilities of woman to the end that, being man's equal, she may possess with him equality of opportunity in regard to all rights and privileges, be they political, industrial, marital, educational, or religious.

4. We sympathize with the cause of struggling labor throughout the world. We believe in the rights of the many as against the privileges of the few. As labor produces all it should be better paid, less taxed, and hav accorded to it more leisure. To this end all the monopolies which result from the fierce stress of our present competitiv system should gradually be replaced by co-operativ methods, whether under state or private control, which, through the wholesome amelioration of rent, interest, and profit, shall result in a fairer distribution into toil of the wealth that produces.

5. In order to carry into effect the objects of this association, we recommend, after first secured state organization, that the Liberals band themselvs together by availing themselvs of the existing school district system, thus unifying and strengthening our forces for practical work.

6. We cordially extend the right hand of fellowship to all Liberal organizations throughout the world, which are as one of us in our general purposes, especially to those now convened in England, France, and Holland.

The following resolution was offered by S. P. Putnam and adopted:

Resolved, That the convention express its sympathy with Mrs. Mary W. Bennett in the loss of her husband, whose noble services in behalf of mental emancipation hav linked his name with the undying history of Freethought, and whose unflinching heroism places him among the pioneers of human progress.

George G. Meikle, of Canada, spoke briefly of the progress of Freethought in the Dominion. H. H. Hall sang "Live for Something," after which C. Fannie Allyn, of Boston, discussed science and religion. She quoted largely from King James's version of the Bible, applying the teachings of science, as she claimed them, to an explanation of the extracts. In the future light she thought we should understand our children better, and a girl would not be ashamed to acknowledge to her mother that she had a lover. Freethought was to redeem the world, and she hailed the public press as one of the mighty educators.

John E. Remsburg, of Kansas, spoke upon the subject "False Claims." His address will be found complete on another page.

The convention re-assembled at two o'clock in the afternoon, the first speaker of the session being William Foley, of New Orleans, who delivered an address on "Philosophy and Reason." He characterized Christianity as protean, and said that it had falsified history. That power, assisted by the superstition of the church, has always been too much for the people, and that for 1,000 years we had heard nothing but the divine rights of kings. At the close of the address the quartet sang "If thou art sleeping." Prof. W. S. Bell, of Boston, was next introduced to the audience and spoke substantially as follows on the subject of "Liberty and Morality:"

These are among the commonest words in daily use, and yet, perhaps, there are but few words in our language less understood, or more greatly misused. It is surprising how few, even among those who are "educated," hav anything more than a vague notion of the meaning of these terms. When such persons are asked to define morality, some will giv you to understand that piety is its principal element; others will lay all stress upon right opinions, which means orthodox opinions; and still others will insist that sexual purity is the basis of morality. We soon discover that there is no definition of the term which finds general acceptation. And the fact is no definition of morality can be given in precise terms, as we shall soon see. When we come right down to it, the pivotal point of the question is, How far may the individual act according to his own choice, and at what limit may society restrict his actions? Where is the boundary line between the sovereignty of the individual and the authority of society? We find, when we come to grapple with the subject, that morality invests the individual with the fullest liberty compatible with the same liberty to others. All Sunday laws are a violation of equal rights. Individual liberty is the right of every one to act as he chooses on Sunday as well as on any other day, provided he does not interfere with the equal liberty of others. It is his right to go a fishing, a hunting, or a sailing, or indulge in amusements.

To earnest men and women the cause of liberty means positiv work for the improvement of society. We hav been tearing down and destroying old superstitions and customs, not simply because they were superstitions, but because they barred man's way. As long as these lay across his pathway, man's progress was impossible. We aim to inspire man with a love of truth, liberty, and morality.

But how can this grand work be best promoted? It cannot be done by praying or fasting. It is not a new Jerusalem to be let down from heaven, but it is to be the kingdom of man, the work of his own head, hands, and heart. And the first step toward setting up this new condition of things is man's struggle for greater individuality. He must acquire and exercise greater liberty at every step he takes in advance.

The doctrins of the fall of man, total depravity, atonement, rewards and punishments, are immoral. More than this, the people were immoral who invented them, and, what is still more fundamental, the God they worshiped was immoral. It was he who ordained evil. What for? To show his mercy. He created the universe for his own glory. He created hell, and foreordained nine-tenths of the human race to suffer its endless tortures, all for his own glory. In fact, we find that he has failed in all that he has ever undertaking. He created Adam and Eve, but they proved an utter failure. Then he drowned the world, all except eight persons. From these he hoped to start a new and perfect race; but in a short time the world was as wicked as ever; and as this proved another failure, he turned himself into his own son, and died to save the world; but here, again, he has signally failed. His own people are now deserting him by denying the story about creation, and refusing to accept total depravity, election and reprobation, and many other heavenly decress, and last of all their audacity has waxed so wanton, they hav dared to close the doors of hell in the face of heaven. But a new age is dawning upon the world. The despotisms of superstition and barbarism are challenged every hour; the old myths and miracles are fading away, to giv place to the moral teachings of common sense and science. The Liberals are carrying forward the great work of destroying error and of enfranchising man with liberty and morality.

At the close of the address, "Who Knows What the Bells are Saying?" was rendered by the quartet. Samuel P. Putnam then read the following resolution, which was adopted by a rising vote.

Resolved, That this convention extends a cordial welcome to Charles Watts, the president of the British Secular Union, and through him extends the right hand of fellowship to English Liberals. We heartly co-operate with the purpose and methods of the secular movement and recognize the importance of Mr. Watts's visit to our country in the added impulse which we shall receive for our own work, and we hope that every Liberal community will make an effort to secure the services of this noble and eloquent exponent of our cause, and thus help to establish the new integration wherein the progress of the race shall be based forever upon liberty, science, and humanity.

Mr. Watts was then introduced and spoke briefly as follows on "The Decline of Christianity and the Triumph of Freethought."

There has been and there is no continuity in the doctrins and general teachings of Christianity. The only continuous feature in connection with it is its name; but what that name represented has depended upon the condition of the nation and the intellectual status of the people where and by whom it was professed. There are certain features allied with Christianity that will probably never decline. For instance, the practical ethical teachings of the New Testament show no signs of decay; but then it should be remembered that they form no necessary part of the Christian system; they were in the world long before this faith was heard of, and doubtless they will survive the various theologies now extant. The human recognitions of Christianity are also activ, while it may be admitted that its professors are as numerous as ever. These features, however, do not constitute Christianity. To be a Christian, as understood by the many churches bearing that name, a person is required to accept and believe such cardinal teachings as Bible theism, the fall of man, the salvation of the world through the death of Christ, mankind's impotency for self-reformation, the divine inspiration of the scriptures, and the efficacy of prayer. These are teachings that hav been demented by time and hallowed by a false education, but to-day in the world of intellect they are not accepted as rites any more than precepts ascribed to Christ are practiced in every-day life. The neglect of this world, non-existence of evil, humility, regarding poverty as a virtue, and the ignoring of physical wants, as propounded by Jesus, hav become practically dead in modern society. As proofs that Christianity is declining, Mr. Watts cited ist failure in inspiring its adherents to respect the principle of liberty and justice toward those who differed from them. The speaker dwelt at some length upon the bigotry manifested in England in excluding a duly elected member of Parliament from taking his seat in the British House of Commons on account of his heresy; in imprisoning three men during the present year for alleged blasphemy, and in the disgraceful persecution of the late D. M. Bennett in this country. If Christianity possesses a "transcendent power" for good, it should rely upon that power instead of upon the enforcement of cruel, unjust, and bigoted laws, worthy only of the Christian times of the Inquisition, the star chamber, and the Smithfield fires. Another class of proofs adduced by Mr. Watts in defense of his position was the vain endeavor which was now made to harmonize Christian teachings with modern thought. Instead, as of old, maintaining that Christianity is the fixed, unchanging revelation from God, its advocates urge that, like other systems, it is progressiv. this claim, however, destroys the supposition of its divine origin.

If eighteen hundred years ago the Christian faith emanated from a perfect God it must hav been perfect; in that case it could not hav progressed; for where perfection obtains, progress is impossible. In these days when it has been shown that the Bible and science are not in harmony, it is contended that the Bible does not profess to teach science. Upon the supposition that the Bible is the word of God, surely it ought to teach that which is acknowledged to hav been of the greatest service to mankind. Prayer in those days is regarded by intelligent Christians only as an emotional gratification. But this is not New Testament Christianity, inasmuch as therein prayer is taught as a means of supplicating the deity for the gratification of certain human wants. Another instance given of the decline of Christianity was the unwillingness of the ablest men in the church to debate the relativ value of their system with that of secularism. Such men know too much to be induced to attempt to defend their faith at the bar of cultivated reason. In spite of the profession of Christianity, which is in reality a national hypocrisy, Freethought is triumphant. This is evident from the fact, that "Infidelity" is increasing on every hand. The principle of eclecticism is applied alike to faiths and literature. It is pre-eminently an age of critical examination, not of implicit belief; of intellectual doubt, not blind acceptance of priestly begotten dogmas. To-day faith has to conform to reason in opposition to the habit of Christian times, of compelling reason to yield to faith. Having illustrated these various points, Mr. Watts concluded as follows: Our duty as Freethinkers is to earnestly and honestly assail whatever interferes with mental worth and moral development. Never let it be said that we hesitate to work to destroy a faith that has been an enemy to progress in all ages. To do so would be utter subjugation of freedom and a melancholy prostration of manly independence. The brave pioneers of the past faced the enemy with all the courage and ability at their command. As faithful sons of such self-denying sires, should we do less? A grateful posterity will justify us in resisting the encroachments of a mind-degrading theology. Too long hav men submitted their reason and stifled their judgments with the teachings of the Biblical records; too long hav the intellects of scientists been paralyzed by the dictates of a persecuting church. For centuries their aspirations were crushed by the threats of a state-protected religion—a religion that has held their minds with magic charm. Be it our duty to dispel this charm; to impress upon mankind the necessity of accepting as a guide of life a system based not upon the fears, but upon the requirements of human nature. We would test the value of principles not by the weakness of the past, but the utility of the present. Let every man exercise his reasoning powers, and inspired by the traditions of past achievements; by that heroism and virtue with which progress in all ages has been associated; by the efforts of those men whose noble efforts will be emblazoned on the banners of posterity; by the remembrance of the sufferings and tortures of the mighty dead. I say by all that is noble in the past, useful in the present, and hopeful in the future, let us dedicate our lives to the destruction of the shams and errors of our time, and also to establish the reign of thought and the power of intellectual grandeur.

The Saturday evening session appointed for was 7 o'clock, and the members of the convention had promised President Brown in the afternoon to be present promptly. But 7 o'clock came and went, and the audience failed to put in an appearance. The quartet entertained those arriving with "My Love is Like a Red, Red Rose." S. P. Putnam then said that it had been the feature of the convention to listen to the most remarkable address—that of Mr. Wakeman—ever delivered. It was the science of Liberalism. He said it was proposed to hav it published, so that all might hav it and read it. Courtlandt Palmer had already subscribed $20, and Mr. Putnam and Secretary Green proceeded to interview the audience for subscriptions of $1 each. About $50 were raised. At Mr. Palmer's request the quartet sang, "Lead Kindly, Light." Mr. Palmer was then introduced, and addressed the convention. He said, quoting from Emerson:

"Our life is an apprenticeship to the truth that around every circle another circle can be drawn; that there is no end in nature, but every end is a beginning; that there is always another dawn risen on midnoon, and under every deep a lower deep opens.

"We know that all spiritual being is in man."

Some day, Mr. Palmer said, there will appear the coming bard of man's beliefs, who will pen the greatest poem of earth—the poem of time, the epic of religion—whose strains will ring the symphony of man's advance from savagery to civilization. The future bard would doubtless relate how along the centuries religious progress has occurred through ever-increasing enlargements of the successiv kirks or circles of the religious experience of the race. He would trace religions, like all other thought, back to its primal source in the irritability, the action and reaction, of a globulous speck of protoplasm. In the rude minds of men, when they had reached only a grade or two above the chimpanzee, the bard would find the faint beginnings of the spirit life. In their attempts to solve the deeper problems of their existence he would discover the establishment of the first circle, kirk, or church of social man. He would describe how the phenomena of organic nature, and of dreams, impressed upon our savage ancestors the notion of double existence, and how their vague consciousness of a controling impulse within themselvs, which we now know as the will, led them to a belief in spirits or ghosts directing the universe. So the imaginary bard, singing his epic, which might well be called the Humanitad, would rise from one expanding kirk or circle to another, until, in the flow of the great story, he arrived at the kirk or circle which most immediately concerns our own civilization; that is, the Christian, and which is the last one previous to that in which we are beginning to stand to-day.

After sketching upon the same plan the rise of Christianity, Mr. Palmer added:

"But the poem would not stop here, for even as individuals must die, and just as Jupiter and Apollo and all the Grecian gods hav sunk into the limbo of mere legend, so seems it fated that Christianity itself must likewise disappear as being the last great act in the wondrous drama of mythology. God, the greatest of the ghosts, must go the way of all his previous ancestry, from whom his lineage is traceable in direct descent. . . . Bidding farewell to our conjectural bard. I, myself, in the first person, proceed to affirm, without hesitation, that the signs of the times are emphatically pronouncing that the kingdom of Christ must pass away, and that in its stead the republic of man is at hand. This new kirk or circle has already entered in."

Quoting from Swinburne's "Hymn of Man," and ending with the line:

"Glory to man in the highest! For man is the master of things."

Mr. Palmer said this line, and the second text from Emerson, suggested another, wider, what should be a more acceptable, and to him was, if possible, a truer, view of this stupendous subject. By this pathway we were enabled to approach toward a constructiv and affirmativ, instead of a negativ and iconoclastic position. In the literal sense, the old ideas of a separate spirit life, and a separate spirit land, had all vanished, but in a larger, better, and truer sense, in the sense of George Eliot when she aspired to "join the choir invisible of those immortal dead who liv again in minds made better by their presence," he would affirm that God, the spirit-land, the angels, heaven and hell, the soul, the atonement, salvation, immortality, and so on, are still our part and portion, and, after a manner, more grandly real than ever before.

Art, he declared, will in the future renovate and adorn not merely buildings or localities, but the whole earth itself. The fields, under the artists' wands, will become gardens, and the cities will surpass Jerusalem the golden. With such creators will be associated those whose subjects will be human souls, and whose beauteous productions will be nobler men and fairer woman, blessed with traits that shall make life a joy. Under the new afflatus industry must be changed from competition to some form of co-operation. Individualism must giv way to socialism. The new spiritual life, he said, sets the seal of its approval on the vast tread of republicanism now so triumphant throughout the world.

Mr. Palmers's address occupied one hour and thirty-five minntes in its delivery, and it was ranked as one of the best delivered before the association. He was frequently applauded by the audience. The quartet then sang, by request of Mr. Palmer, the sacred song, "Jerusalem the Golden."

Miss Ellen Wright and George Chainey, of Boston, then gave Shaksperean selections, and Jessie Bonesteel, well-known in Rochester, gave several recitations. The program was as follows: Closet scene from "Hamlet," Ellen Wright and George Chainey; recitation, Jessie Bonesteel; death scene of Queen Katharine, Ellen Wright; recitation, Jessie Bonesteel; German kitchen maid, Ellen Wright; recitation, Jessie Bonesteel; murder scene, "Macbeth," Ellen Wright and George Chainey. This closed the exercises for Saturday.

Sunday was the closing day of the convention, and the attendance was larger than on any previous day. The morning session opened at ten o'clock. While the audience was assembling the Rev. Mr. Mitchell, by request, continued his exposition of evolution. He was replied to by President Brown, after which the convention was called to order and Hon. Elizur Wright introduced. He delivered an elaborate address on the subject of "Miracles," of which the following is a brief abstract:

Not an eye of fish, bird, beast, or man ever opened on this planet without beholding a miracle. Everything within the scope of vision, or any other sense, is wonderful. The senses teach that what is, will be. This is more wonderful. The senses teach that what is, will be. This is more wonderful than if they taught otherwise. The sharper the senses and the more carefully they are exercised the less of chaos do they find. Chaos, disorder, self-contradiction in nature, exists nowhere but in the faculty of imagination. Outside of intelligent mind, apparently an attribute of finit personal organization, there is probably nothing but self-existed, self-executing law, so far as we know, or ever can know.

A personal god, as first cause, can exist only in a person's imagination, and in moral character cannot rise, and never has risen, above the person conceiving such God. A just person can never be reconciled to an unjust God, whether imaginary or real. It is as easy for the mind to conceive of uncaused matter as if uncaused mind—of mind as an attribute of neither, as the recourse.

The word miracle in its usual narrow sense, implies that a personality, distinct from the boundless universe outside of himself, or, according to the absurd monotheistic conception, an infinit part of the infinit whole, can and does, or once did, at his pleasure introduce now and then little bits of chaos into the order of the universe for the purpose of proving to certain inferior intelligences that he exists! How futil! If we saw a willow grow from an acorn, or a man born of a virgin, would that tend to prove anything but the non-existence of any god worthy of respect? If the best men that ever existed was born of a virgin, why did God create any human being other than a virgin? Why did he create anybody except his own mother?

No reversal of natural laws which history, either sacred or profane, records, can possibly or ever did inspire in any mind such wholesome reverence as comes from an understanding of the natural laws themselvs, and the abstract, eternal verities on which they rest, the grand, unceasing miracle always present in contact with every living organism. Imagination may giv pleasure or may giv pain, but truth is probably the greatest, if not the only, savior. It is a mistake to suppose that a miracles, in the narrow sense of the word, hav been the cause of faith. On the contrary, faith has been the cause of miracles.

All theological theories, whether polytheistic or monotheistic, hav produced miracles. They hav been believed and expected, and that is why we find such multitudes of them on record. Those who believe in the existence of an omnipotent, personal author of nature, creator of all men and things, hav never yet been able to bring a single instance of a plain and unequivocal reversal of natural law, resting on testimony that would be received in an ordinary court of justice to establish an individual's right of property. The recorded miracles as often tend to prove the existence of a bad God as a good one, and though they may hav been satisfactory to the witnesses, it is the very hight of absurdity and arrogance for such witnesses to think they can be so to others. And especially is this so if the miracles hav been unworthy of any person who could be conceived to be the creator of all things. The recorded and canonized miracles, taken as a whole, so far from proving the existence of a spiritual creator and moral governor of the universe, go toward disproving the existence of any such person. Even if admitted to be facts, they would only show powers not only finite but often malign. According to the miracle records themselvs, the natural laws hav always prevailed over momentary or brief reversals of them. Among the last words of the greatest worker of miracles, before his alleged miraculous ascension off from this planet, was that his faithful disciples should hav the miraculous power to preserve themselvs unharmed from poisons and serpents. Either this assurance was false, or the faithful since hav been very few. If the Christian gospels prove anything, they prove that Jesus was disappointed, and found himself utterly mistaken as to the purpose of his imaginary God in sending him into this world. No doubt there lived at some time within the two centuries before Titus besieged Jerusalem a man of remarkable genius and character, an enthusiastic and unsophisticated Jew, whose theological ideas rose considerably above those of his nation, who, in earnest sympathy with the oppressed, deluded, and down-trodden class in which he was born, really believed the national God, according to his prophets, was soon to appear to deliver them from both the hypocritical scribes and pharisees and Romans to whom the above mercenary upper class had sold God's own nation. History by no means makes us certain that any such man suffered death under Pontius Pilate, but that he did suffer a tragical death at the end of his earthly career, whenever that happened, is as certain as that he lived, and really about as certain as anything in ancient history, for myths are generally founded on facts. Even in the orthodox churches physical miracles are now very little believed. They are rather apologized for. But these churches stick with great tenacity to the spiritual miracle of regeneration. Everyone, to get into such a church, has to profess to hav been born again by the direct influence of the third person in the trinity, though he may not profess to hav seen, like St. Paul, "the light from heaven above the brightness of the sun, shining round about" him, or, like St. Augustine, to hav heard a loud voice out of the air repeating the words "tolle, lege; tolle, lege—take, read; take, read." It is to be observed that in both these cases of miraculous regeneration, without denying that there was a considerable change in the course of the life for the better, it can be accounted for on perfectly natural principles of self-reformation. And what is more, the subsequent life in both cases showed that if the regeneration was the work of the Holy Spirit, he did the work in the most bungling and imperfect manner.

The next speaker to address the convention was George Chainey, of Boston, who discussed the subject of "Christianity versus Humanity," substantially as follows:

Modern society is divided into two opposing factions. Under the banner of Christianity are gathered various companies—Catholics, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and many smaller divisions. Under the flag of Humanity we find arrayed Materialists, Spiritualists, Atheists, Infidels, Secularists, Positivists, and Agnostics. It is my purpose to leave unnoticed these smaller parties and look at the two great divisions that comprehend all lesser ones. I wish to present them both to your attention without prejudice. I once was a sincere and devout Christian, and I know that many of the truest and best of people are earnest believers in the Christian religion. But the position they occupy is to me one that stands in the way of the highest interests of the human race; and so, while saying no word against any individual, I am compelled by my devotion to mankind to point out the falsity and evil of the system.

To be a Christian, you must believe in God Almighty as the creator of all things; that man started in this world as a child of God, made in his (God's) image; that he fell from this estate through disobedience, became totally depraved, and was righteously condemned to suffer in eternal hell; that this God came into the world in the manhood of Jesus of Nazareth, suffered and died, so that whoever should believe in him might not perish but hav eternal life. In order that we might know first that we are fallen and afterward how to be saved, the book called the Bible was written by divine inspiration; hence in order to be Christians we must believe in the inspiration and infallibity of this book. Many books and millions of sermons hav been written to make all this plain. Still this is the alpha and omega, the first and last and all that goes between of Christianity. If this system of religion is true, the most brutal wretch in human shape is more worthy of our worship than such a God. A being who could cast a single man or woman into hell to be tortured by devils through eternity would be guilty of a greater crime than the faults of mankind all put together, and the nearest crime to it would be to knowingly worship such a deity. But I do not believe that this God was ever truly worshiped. Man has knelt, prayed, and cowered before him, impelled by fear and calling it love because he fancied such impossible affection could alone secure him from being tormented forever. Some people imagin it a great misfortune to lose one's faith in God. But I hold it about the best fortune that can befall any one.

The only advantage of believing in God is that you bear the blame of all the sins of your deity and ascribe to him the credit of all your virtues. If this god sends a cyclone, goes on a spree, and cuts up in the shape of a tornado, or earthquake, or sets a city on fire, leaving thousands homeless and unprotected from cruelest want, the preachers all tell us that it is on account of the wickedness of man. But if men and women feed the hungry, visit the poor, and clothe the naked, it is all owing to the goodness of God. The beginning of true humanity is the denial of God. The highest dignity that man can attain to is to feel that he belongs to himself and extend that supreme right of the individual to any one else. However much good desire there may be in the heart of the religious devotees, the giving up the right to think for himself, the loss of his own self-respect, makes him a criminal against humanity. He deepens the cloud of our ignorance, casts a stain upon our honor, and drags us deeper, by all the weight of his character, into the mire of degradation. To reason, there is nothing greater than to be a man. We gladly cast aside the livery of divine servitude and clothe ourselvs anew in the beautiful garments of humanity. Reason's brightening lamp leads up to ever higher and nobler paths. No longer quenching wonder in a name, or darkening truth with remorseless omnipotence, nature feeds us silently our full, to liv beneath the sun by day, and the moon and stars by night; to tread this green earth, so thickly strewn with wonders; to stand related to our fellow-men in all the unspeakable joys and sorrows of life. How dull and stupid must be the mind that needs a voice from the skies to instruct him to walk worthy of so high a calling. The great and noble of earth are not those who are feasted, trusted, and run after by the crowd, but the patient pioneers, who, with giant blows, are making a clearing in the forests of superstition, causing the wilderness to blossom as a rose, and for the sickening, deadly malaria of piety that saps away our manhood, bringing the health of self-reliance and the true joy of self-respect. They are those who through the long night watches of the world's ignorance keep brightly flaming the torch of thought and so are constantly widening the skirts of light and making the struggle with darkness narrower. When man comes to his own; when each child born into the world finds all the avenues of truth open to his exploring mind; when art gladdens every eye with its cheering ray; when right and justice between man and man are the only gods; when the state, in its devotion to the happiness of all, is but the outward expression of the best instincts of humanity; when the heaven men strive to win is on the earth, and the highest honor known is to be a man, all belief in God will hav departed from the earth.

Secretary Green opened the afternoon exercises by presenting a resolution, expressing the thanks of the association to the newspapers of Rochester for the very full and very accurate reports of the proceedings of the convention. The resolution was unanimously adopted, and Mr. Green followed with a few timely remarks upon Liberalism, as it was generally understood. The quartet then sang "The Mariner" in a charming manner, and President Brown introduced the first speaker of the afternoon, the ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, of Michigan, who chose for the subject of his discourse, "The Republic of Thought," of which the following is a synopsis;

The point which we occupy and that of our savage ancestry are separated by almost an impassible gulf. Yet as wide apart as we are, we can trace in the genesis of history a relationship. And thus it is true, also, that our savage ancestry and the first form of aboriginal thought are widely asunder; yet they shake hands across the wide gulf in the blood of relationship. And also is it true that the lowest forms of aboriginal thought shake hands in the line of blood relationship with the lowest forms of protoplasmic life. So we are inclined to think that these facts inspire in us the hope that something higher and better is waiting for us, and perchance giv birth to the idea of a coming republic of thought. But since the birth of historic time, with the strength of all these ages, man has not arisen to that hight from whence he could proclaim the emancipation of thought. It has been the slave of dynasties of woe. It has been forced to dwell in prisons and breathe the foul air of damp cells. It has been nursed and cradled in the lap of superstition and fed at the breast of bigotry. It has been forced to slumber in the brain of the sycophant, and lies a condemned criminal in the dust at the feet of kingly and imperial authority.

But what is thought? This is hardly the place nor hav we the time to enter upon any extended discussion of this most profound question. Yet, suffice it to say, as far as our purpose is concerned, that thought implies an order of sequence, a relation in this order of sequence of something that thinks. That something that thinks is when individualized an ego. Here is seemingly a duality, yet in that seeming duality, as real as you please, there is a unity. Conscience reaches for that unity. Thought is the basis of the ego. Ego is a differentiation which has taken place in the order of sequence, as in a system of things. The point now which we aim at is this—that the ego, thus differentiated, shall hav its egoistic liberty, as against all aggregated egoists. A republic of thought is therefore a possibility hoped for, and this hope is rendered possible through the genesis of evolution. That is, we are taught in this evolution that we hav passed through every phase seemingly embracing all of the antecedents to this for which we now hope. The first thing we hope for in this republic of thought is the full recognition of that which is fundamental in human nature. This, granted, will be the distinction of caste, and hence the unity of the race, not fragmental through different creator's acts—a unity in homogeneity and heterogeneity, when the lowest and the highest types are one in their fundamental relation, and thus we will hav diversity in unity co-ordinated—and denies insidious distinction which makes anyone the slave of the gods. The second thing we hope for in this republic of thought is that every one shall hav the right to think. No barricades shall be thrown in the way of that thought, each one having the right of their thought. It is his or her property. No one has a right to imprison it or stop its productions. It has a lien upon the universe, through its relationship to every part of that universe. The third thing we hope for in this republic of thought is not only the right to think our thoughts, to put that thought in speech, or to act that thought, or liv it out in the complex relations of life. This is hoping for much. How much we do not nor can we see in all of its fulness. Hope for the time to come when our thoughts burning within us can be spoken without fear of harm to ourself or friends; to speak that thought and suffer not, nor lose the respect of those whom we love; when we can speak our thoughts without jeopardy to our business or our social standing, and when all will respect us for this honest expression. I confess that this is hoping for much. But it is destined to come in this republic of thought. It is only a question of time. In this republic of thought we will find incentivs to the highest deeds of mercy, heroism, bravery, and greatness, without a god or a devil, heaven or a hell—incentivs which this republic of thought alone can create—the relief of human needs. The fact that there are needs is an incentiv to help to aid immeasurably higher than those that can be drawn from mansions in the skies, the gift of the sacrifice of the innocent. This moral value of all action will be in vieing with each other in meeting human needs. The next thing in this republic of thought is this: Man may be the hero of a hundred well-fought battles where no blood is shed. We will find here that antagonism counsels no weapons, but that conflict in opinions will only highten our mental respect for each other. Conflict of opinion will not engender hate. We will not hate the man or woman who differs with us in opinion. We will love them still as being with us in this co-ordination, and difference of opinion will not dig a gulf as it does now, which consigns one to heaven and the other to hell. We will hav no use for such a thought, and our gods will be human. In this new republic wealth will not be supreme. It will not be the synonym of power. Money and power will be the servants of the people. The world will not be owned by a few. No one will dare to say, "I own 500 acres of land" while there is one on the continent that has not a house to shelter him from the weather. In this new republic woman has ceased to be a slave. No invidious distinction will be made which will deny to her the right to be man's competitor for any position to which she is eligible. And finally, in this republic of thought the universe will be the property of all alike, and the property of none. All lands of thought will be open equally for all. There will be no intellectual giant standing at the door bidding you away. There will be no superstitious wand in the hands of an ignorant priesthood to turn you out of your chosen Eden.

Samuel P. Putnam, of New York, the chairman of the executiv committee of the association, introduced the following resolutions at the conclusion of Mr. Burnham's address, and they were adopted unanimously, with comment:

Resolved, That this convention expresses its sympathy with those who, in the excercise of their individual rights, hav suffered from the tyranny of the state, united with eclesiastical bigotry; namely: Messrs. Foote and Ramsay in England, Prince Krapotkine and others in France, and Heywood in America.

Resolved, That we affirm the right of private judgment, for which Luther stood, and that the best morality of the race is maintained and advanced by the greatest liberty. Government is for the administration of justice, and it is the highest injustice to imprison men for holding opinions and for the honest expression of those opinions according to their own conscience. Truth and virtue do not need to be defended by the sword. They are strong only in liberty and reason.

The chairman then introduced Mrs. A. H. Colby, who, stepping to the front of the rostrum, was greeted with applause. Her subject was "The Necessity for a Union of the Radical Liberalists of the Present, as a Voice to Mankind." Mrs. Colby is a Spiritualist, and therefore took a positiv position against the Materialists' idea of death. She presented her arguments with great force and decision of character.

She claimed that cause, effects, and results are of little use, if it has taken the universe untold ages, through natural law, to involve and evolve matter from which a human body might be perfected, that man might hav the power of unfolding to his present intellectual status, and then be destroyed by the power of death, ere he could possibly attain to that summit of wisdom necessary to meet his intellectual demand; that if death meant nonentity of individuality, nature was a blank everywhere; it were better to hav let life's highest forms stop in the animal who roamed wildly over mountains, through the forests, across the plains, and required no time for philosophy or art, than to hav brought into existence myriads of human beings, demanding a much greater amount of knowledge than can possibly be obtained in earth life. Her eulogy on women was exceedingly beautiful. In referring to a resolution that had been previously passed by the convention, conferring upon woman and man equal rights and privileges, socially, religiously and politically, she asked that the Freethinkers' Association see that the great state of New York, on its next national representativ election, should elect men, that, should woman sue at their feet for what the resolutions declare to be just, they may not be spurned with contempt, as in the past. At the present, your government declares that woman is neither a person, citizen, nor member of a race of people. Though she is the mother of all the nations of the earth, yet society treats her as a mere toy, a plaything, something beautiful to look upon, adorned and decorated with ribbons, flowers, plumes, feathers, and styles of every class and kind, until her body is deformed and her intellect in a state of nudity. How unsafe this condition of human society, when we know that maternity stamps all life with its future destinies. Every mother loves every other mother's child, because of the love she bears her own, whether it be dressed in purple and fine linen or in rags and tatters. No mother but that knows that every baby has been baptized in the sacred fountain of a mother's love.

The lecturer then gave a eulogy upon death, which, to the Spiritualistic mind, conveyed a pretty, beautiful idea of life's changes, from the low to high form of intellectual and spiritual growth, and not of decomposition and destruction. She asked the sires of our nation to bless their people, and thanked the audience for the present occasion. "For," said she, "the great thinking population of the globe hav sought the presence of a God, for whom, through prayer and supplication, they might obtain knowledge so necessary for life and happiness; but all in vain, and the heretic and Christian alike, with manacled hands uplifted toward the heavens, begging in prayer and solemn chant in song for an especial favor; but silence reigned and God refused to speak. Hence I offer to these, the children of human life, my prayer." The lecture was closed with the saying, "I would prefer the sunshine of human life rather than the dazzling brilliancy from the throne of a God." The most radical points were applauded with much feeling, showing that the audience was in sympathy with the present radical movement.

The last and evening session of the convention was called to order at 8 o'clock, a large audience being in attendance. After a selection by H. H. Hall, the president introduced Mrs. Krekel, of Missouri, as the first speaker of the evening. Before commencing her address, the speaker offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, Freethinkers of America, in convention assembled, extend our sympathy to Annie Besant, of England, the wronged mother whose own flesh and blood hav been torn from her arms by ecclesiastical power, the brave woman who has stood nearest to and most ably defended Charles Bradlaugh in his unequal struggle to obtain the seat to which a responsible constituency elected him, who now finds herself excluded from finishing a course of study in an institute of science purely on the ground of prejudice against a noble and heroic woman; and that we now express our admiration and love for her, with full confidence that such brave courage and unselfish devotion to a cause must succeed.

The speaker then discussed the subject, "Mental Evolution," which she claimed was the legitimate and necessary sequence of physical evolution. She said she did not propose to discuss the primal causes of things. Regarding them, she thought one man knows just as much as another, and that is absolutely nothing. The line at which evolution begins, the speaker said, is the line between organic and inorganic life. She traced man's mental development at length, from the improved tools and machinery invented by his rapidly growing mind, and said that anyone who has ever given the world a thought for which society has been made the better by his living in it, has established a religion of his own, the influence of which will be felt in all succeeding ages. The speaker characterized the church as a sort of social insurance company, but said she did not wish to carry the impression that she considered all Christians dishonest in their beliefs, but on the other hand, had many acquaintances who she knew were honest in their convictions. The address was listened to with the greatest of interest by the audience from its beginning to its close. Messrs. W. F. Brace and Philip Fried then sang a piece entitled "Love and War," which elicited loud applause.

The president then introduced Charles Watts, of London, who chose as the subject of his elaborate address, "Secularism: its Principles and Objects." The following is a brief abstract of the address:

At the present time, when secularism is so frequently mentioned, it is necessary that we should hav a clear exposition of its principles. Secularism is the safest gospel for mankind, inasmuch as it contains all that is sufficient to satisfy its legitimate needs. It is necessary to discriminate between wants and needs. Persons frequently want things from habit which is not a natural need at all. This explains to a large extent the support given to the different superstitions of the world. In the morning of life persons are induced to habituate themselvs to a certain worship until they imagin that it is a need, whereas it is merely a want, the result of want. The real needs of mankind are physical, intellectual, social, domestic, emotional, and moral. Secularism ratifies them by teaching that science is the truest provider of the physical needs of man. Intellectually it urges that the reason should be cultivated in order that it may guide us aright in life. Socially, secularism maintains that no difference of opinion should interfere with mutual co-operation in the domestic circle. Secularism urges that there should be no superiority between man and wife, but that the happiness of the one should be regarded as the happiness of the other. Emotion we do cultivate, but we urge the necessity of its being governed by reason and judment; if not, in pleasure it would degenerate into licentiousness, and in religion, to fanaticism. There are three standards of morality extant at the present day, first the will of God, which we cannot accept because we hav no clear indication of what it is. Even the Bible on this point is thoroughly contradictory. Second, intention is not satisfactory to us because it is the result of the condition of the mind, which varies with time and place. Third, conscience is no standard. Its function is not to tell you why to do, that being the duty of reason and judgment. When they hav decided the course to take, conscience tells you to be faithful to their dictates. Our standard is the result of actions, or the doctrin of utility, not that this is perfect, but that it is superior to any other standard we now hav. Our ethical obligation is the welfare of society and that we are better for being moral. Our incentiv is individual and general happiness, which consists in the knowledge that our actions to others hav no injurious effects upon ourselvs. The requisits to this morality are the love and practice of truth, justice to all, and fidelity to our convictions. Our moral guides, therefore, are experience, which tells us what to do; reason, how to do it; utility, which tests the value of what is done.

Secularism teaches the inherent goodness of human nature in opposition to the theological dogma of human depravity. The cradle is not the husk of new depravity, but rather the receptacle of human goodness awaiting development and cultivation. The relation of Secularism to the religion of the Bible is as follows: It selects what is practical and good from each, relying upon the value of what is written, rather than on its supposed authority. Its mode of conversion is to reach the heart through the head, instead of the theological mode of reaching the head through the heart. Secularism does not profess to giv anything for the loss of Christianity, inasmuch as no man should giv up his faith if he considers it to be a loss. We seek not to make hypocrits but honest converts, and when a man is once convinced that Secularism is superior to Christianity, to giv up the latter is no loss but a gain. Secularism is the safest belief at death because it urges that the highest credential for another life is the wisest and most intellectual use of this. A just God could not possibly condemn an honest skeptic. As for the hope of a reunion hereafter, the Secularists are as safe as to a realization of it, if it is a reality, as the Christian. Secular immortality consists in the perpetuation of the good and true. The legacy of thought left by the great dead is handed down to us in the brain power preserved in ink. Our duty is to strive to make our brain power worthy of such a preservation. Let us so liv that after death the world shall reproach us not; that those dear ones bound to us by ties of nature shall venerate our memories, and that society shall be the better for our having lived in it. Mr. Watts pointed out as the destructiv features of Secularism, the right of dissent from any attention to this life and the reliance upon science instead of faith. The necessity for Secularism is found to be in the failure of theological systems in regenerating the world, the impossibility of uniformity in belief, and that modern thought requires a higher and more intellectual faith than that offered by orthodox Christianity. The object of Secularism was shown to be the endeavor to destroy the errors, shams, and priestcraft of our time; to do good purely from natural inspiration.

The quartet sang the "Star Spangled Banner," and T. B. Wakeman made a few closing remarks—or, as the president put it, pronounced the benediction—and the convention was finally adjourned.

The Death of Robert Shoemaker.

The subject of this notice, Robert S. Shoemaker, was born fifty-one years ago and died at Camptown in his own nativ county of Bradford, Pa., July 29, 1883.

For several years he was a great sufferer from consumption and yet bearing pain patiently and heroically.

He was a man of decided views in all questions affecting humanity. By a life of unswerving integrity he secured the respect of his fellow-men. Yet owing to his Liberal ideas on religious and moral questions, he oftentimes gave offense to some by his masterly defense of his opinions. His worst enemies could bring no graver charge against him than that he was an "Infidel," "Freethinker," "Atheist." These names had no terrors for him. Conscious in the rectitude of his intentions, he "kept the even tenor of his way," unmoved by the jeers of bigots or the denunciation of priests.

He had no reverence for idols, no patience with superstition, and no dread of religious intolerance and bigotry.

For twenty-five years he subscribed for and read the Boston Investigator. An omnivorous reader, he was acquainted with Freethought literature and that of its enemies. He gave liberally of his means for the support and propagation of Freethought.

Socially, to his friends he was tried, true, and hospitable; to the poor, humane and generous; to the brute creation, kind and merciful; to his family, loving and self-sacrificing; to all men, just.

A wife and three daughters, an aged father and mother, and four brothers, feel and bewail their sad loss. His remains were laid to rest in the Snyder burial ground, near the home of his parents in Rush township, Susquehanna county, Pa.

The reading by a friend of a few well-chosen words of Col. Ingersoll was all the simple service at the grave, eloquent words containing a just summary of the virtues of the dead, closing with these beautiful expressions: "With morn, with noon, with night, with changing clouds and changeless stars, with grass, with trees and birds, with leaf and bud, with flower and blossoming vine, with all the sweet influences of nature we leave our dead. Again, farewell."

Rush, Pa., August 26, 1883. J. B. OVERTON.

What Mr. Bradlaugh Proposes to Do.

From the National Reformer of Sept. 2d.

The Saturday Review is good enough to suggest that, backed by "a straggling and harmless little mob," I hav in this last session of Parliament levied my "accustomed toll on the time of the nation." If the Saturday Review would prefer that the "mob" should be harmful instead of harmless, its preference may possibly be gratified before the struggle finishes. I hav nearly exhausted every fashion of obtaining justice, and the people are not quite disposed to be insulted because they hav been law-abiding.

The Daily Telegraph says that it is not to be supposed that "Mr. Bradlaugh will stop the way" in Parliament next year. Unless the House givs me my seat, or my constituents ask me to resign, I shall stop the way next year far more vigorously than ever. Patient waiting has little effect on the House of Commons.

Giv the Devil a Chance.

"It might hav been wise to hav kept the churches open these cool summer Sundays, and shut them instead when the bitter winds of January are blowing, but it wouldn't hav been fashionable. Comfort rarely is."—Boston Christian Statesman.

No, you better keep on in the good old way and giv the alleged devil a chance to get in his work in the beautiful summer days, so he can stay at home in the winter, and toast his shins by the fire, while the truly good are wading in snow a foot deep and sitting in cold pews, listening to an icicle sermon. The way we fool away our opportunities to do good, the devil has the softest kind of a snap.—Peck's Sun.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent three months to trial subscribers for 50 cents.

Letters from Friends.

FRENCH CREEK, IOWA, Aug. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: The trial subscription has satisfied me of the value of your paper. Oh, how much the world could be benefited if your paper, or one like it, could enter every home! But the time will come and that too ere long, when at least a majority of our civilized part of the world will be liberally inclined; and I, ere the remaining two-thirds of my life which I expect to liv are spent, hope to enjoy that time. Much and hard labor is required before this can be accomplished. The world must be deprived of its ignorance first, and then superstition must inevitably follow; for it is ignorance that causes all superstition. Inclosed find $12; fifty cents for Monument Fund, the rest use as directed.

JOHN H. HIRT.

BURTON, Aug. 24, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1 to be added to Monument Fund. I wish I were able to donate a thousand more in the same way, that it might be increased in size to contain much more inscription of his sensible productions, which all sensible people will like to read, and only such cranks as the Pittsburgh Post correspondent will object to. Mr. Bennett was as much above his sort in every sense of the word as this lying article is below the level of truth and deceny. It is the purpose of such dupes to pile their filth upon the graves of those whose shoes, even, they are unworth to clean, and the good Mr. Bennett has done will liv after him, whilst such as this foul-mouthed defamer will be forgotten before he dies, and go the way of his slang.

I remain your friend, H. B. JONES.

EATON RAPIDS, MICH., Sept. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $2.50 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I hav read it for the last three years, and I would not do without it should you treble the price of it. I would do with one meal per day in preference to doing without THE TRUTH SEEKER. I feared it would not be as well conducted after the death of that great and good man, D. M. Bennett, but I see no difference; in fact, it was and is filled with that which will satisfy the soul of any reasonable person. There are a number of Liberals here, but the most of them stand in fear of Mrs. Grundy. However, I think with one of the champions of our cause, that if God never made a man that dare think for himself and stand straight up and express his thoughts, he better keep on making men until he has. There is a vast amount of priestcraft in this place, and there is one little imp of a priest who says Liberals are no better than dogs, and he tries to make his church believe it. Perhaps some of them do.

E. COWLES.

PARSONS, KAN., Aug. 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I am a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for six years and shall be as long as I liv. I must giv our departed friends D. M. Bennett and Thomas Paine credit that the good book is not inspired. They hav convinced me of the fact that it is manufactured for the benefit to the preacher. When a boy I learned to translate the Hebrew Bible in German, and of course I was made to believe to eat pork was a great crime and sin, but strange to say I can eat all the pork I want and fear no more their devils; and for refusing to play the harp to their Jehovah, my Christian friend in the F. A. M. lodge preferred charges against me, and suspended me, to giv me a chance to get converted; but that day will never come. Those charges were made by a deacon of the Baptist church here, and I hav proof of two living witnesses that he, out of spite, poisoned a dog of mine. And I tell them now they hav a Infidel out and a dog poisoner in. Inclosed please find $3.50; place $1 of the sum to Monument Fund; and the balance for your valuable paper. Hoping and wishing you well, I remain,

Very truly yours, W. M. BLAU.

HANNIBAL, MO., Sept. 3, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: My brother F. H. Sherwood, who has been a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER for some four or five years, passed from this life to mother earth the 17th of August in the city of Quincy, Ill. He had been sick for fourteen weeks, and at the time of his death was merely a shadow of his former self. Nature's laws seem hard, to cut down those who hav not lived out their usefulness. He was a firm believer in the doctrins of the Freethinkers and always lent a helping hand and opened his purse to help the cause when able to do so. He passed from this life to the unknown at the age of 27 years, and I can truthfully say, and which would be vouched for by many, that he was known for his honesty and morals, loved and respected by all whom he came in contact with. His religious views were not acceptable to many, but all seemed to respect his honesty upon that question. Mother loses a loving son, I lose an only brother, and the Liberals of America lose a warm supporter to the cause for one so young in years. He died without a struggle or a gasp, was conscious within five minutes of his death, and passed away as if going to sleep; no scenes, no regrets, no doubts, only accepting the inevitable.

HORACE E. SHERWOOD.

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
MRS. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid.

FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrines. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrins, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.00.

A REMARKABLE BOOK!

JUST PUBLISHED.

BOTTOM FACTS

CONCERNING

SPIRITUALISM!

The result of careful investigations, covering a period of twenty-five years, by John W. Truesdell. A bold and utter revelation of the whole inside history of Spiritualism; intensely interesting, and most startling and revolutionary in its character. Full of descriptiv illustrations; beautifully bound.

Copies of "Bottom Facts" will be sent by mail, postage free, to any address on receipt of $1.50.

Address,

JOHN W. TRUESDELL,
30tf Syracuse, N. Y.

LOUIS MASQUERIER'S

SOCIOLOGY;

OR,

The Scientific and Liberty-giving Reconstruction of Society, Morality, Government, and Property into States, Townships, and Farmsteads.

WITH AN APPENDIX

ILLUSTRATED.

Together with his Phonology, developing the English language, spelled according to the sound of the twelve vowels and modifying power of the twenty-two consonants, or the first time, so far as known, in literature. For sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER office, 33 Clinton Place, New York city. Price, $1.

Also, an English School Phonetic Spelling and Pronouncing Dictionary with definitions, in course of publication. Price, same as above one.

Also a new Science of Music in preparation. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office

---

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 10 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles,
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 50 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life;
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

WETTSTEIN'S

JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire.

200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY,
28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" 'The Declaration of Independence,' "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound, Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man

Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER,

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separately, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "By-stander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, LL. D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS EINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By MARTEN HAUG, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the German by GEORGE ELIOT. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By HALSEY R. STEVENS, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. MIDDLETON. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. GROTE, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of BARON D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by CHARLES MORAN. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," COLLINS and WATTS. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. SCHLESINGER, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. DORSEY. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusivly that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge CHAS. B. WAITE. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By EDWARD W. SEARING. 15 cents.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.
Write for Catalogues and Terms.
10teom14 J R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland. Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations.
290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.
IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
TRUTH SEEKER Office.
Price, $2.00. 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.

Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.

Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.

"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).

40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

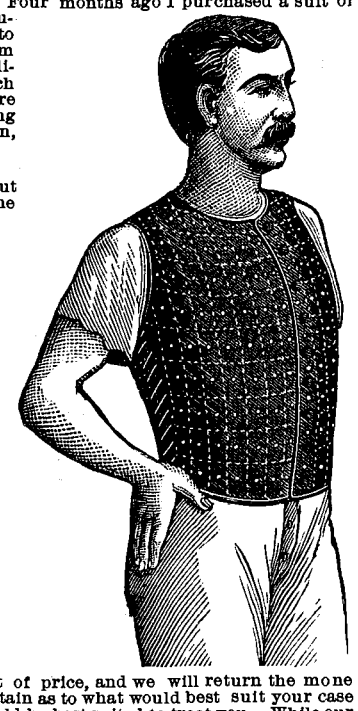
Address all communications to

DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

TESTIMONIALS:
Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.
CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.



Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.

Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.
SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:
OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by any one desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.
SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators, -	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts, - - -	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts, - -	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each, - -	5.00
Leg Belts, each, - - -	4.00
Knee Caps, each, - - -	3.00
Wristlets, each, - - -	1.50
Sleeping Caps, - - - -	4.00
Ladies Jacket, - - -	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests, - - -	15.00
Superfine Insoles, - - -	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the mone if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magneticquality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.

And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,

So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.

Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.

AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information,
Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.

History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and

A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.

With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.

Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00
Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine. "By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.

Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!

All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.

Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6m15

DR. FELLOWS
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.

☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"
Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.

A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.

The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life: or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man, Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring, etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

(1) IF any opinion is compelled to silence, that opinion may, for aught we can certainly know, be true. To deny this is to assume our own infallibility. (2) Though the silenced opinion be an error, it may, and very commonly does, contain a portion of truth, and since the general or prevailing opinion on any subject is rarely or never the whole truth, it is only by the collision of adverse opinions that the remainder of the truth has any chance of being supplied. (3) Even if the received opinion be not only true, but the whole truth; unless it is suffered to be and actually is vigorously and earnestly contested, it will, by most of those who receive it, be held in the manner of a prejudice, with little comprehension or feeling of its rational grounds. And not only this, but (4) the meaning of the doctrin itself will be in danger of being lost, or enfeebled and deprived of its vital effect on the character and conduct, the dogma becoming a mere formal profession, inefficacious for good, but cumbering the ground and preventing the growth of any real and heartfelt conviction, from reason or personal experience.—Mill's Liberty.

WE must all learn to depend upon our efforts for the amount of virtue and happiness we secure and are able to impart to others, and not look to an imaginary being somewhere in the sky, or to the merits of the blood of an individual who died nearly two thousand years ago. Each person must be responsible for the good or ill he does, and each man is, to a great extent, the creator and arbiter of his own happiness or his own misery. We, of course, greatly influence and affect each other. We can largely increase or lessen the happiness of those around us. Here is our duty, here is our allegiance, and not in the sky above us. We must make our heaven on the earth and not in the air.—D. M. Bennett. [Such is the concluding paragraph of No. 64 of the Truth Seeker Tracts entitled "The Ills We Endure; Their Cause and Cure." It is surely unnecessary, after the many extracts that I hav, during the last few weeks, given from this Tract to say much in its favor. To those who know it and appreciate it, as I do, I would merely say, "Spread it then, and let its power be known!" To such of my young readers as hav not yet seen it, I would say send for it at once and rest not satisfied till you hav not merely read, but "chewed and thoroughly digested it." No. 64 is one of the best of a series of excellent Tracts, calculated to open the eyes of the blind and to unstop the ears of the deaf, unless they prefer darkness to light and dull, dead silence to the voice of reason.—C. W. C.]

LYING is not only dishonest, but cowardly. "Dare to be true," said George Herbert, "nothing can ever need a lie." The most mischievous liars are those who keep on the verge of truth. They hav not the courage to speak out the fact, but go round about it and tell what is really untrue. A lie which is half the truth is the worst of lies.—Dr. Sam Smiles.

AND the parson made it his text next week, and he said likewise,
That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies,
That a lie which is all a lie may be met with outright,
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight. —Tennyson's Grandmother.

THE pride which is proud of its want of pride is the most intolerable of all.—Antoninus.

A MAN must conform himself to nature's laws, be verily in communion with nature and the truth of things, or nature will answer him, No, not at all! Speciosities are specious—ah me! a Cagliostro, many Cagliostros, prominent world-leaders, do prosper by their quackery for a day. It is like a forged banknote; they get it passed out of their worthless hands; others, not they, hav to smart for it. Nature bursts up in fire-flames, French revolutions, and the like, proclaiming with terrible veracity that forged notes are forged.—Carlyle's Hero-Worship.

MUCH as it has been disputed wherein virtue consists, or whatever ground for doubt there may be about particulars, yet, in general, there is in reality a universally acknowledged standard of it. It is that which all ages and all countries hav made profession of in public; it is that which every man you meet puts on the show of; it is that which the primary and fundamental laws of all civil constitutions over the face of the earth make it their business and endeavor to enforce the practice of upon mankind—namely, justice, veracity, and regard to common good.—Butler's Analogy.

A VERY curious thing about the Ten Commandments is that their supposed author violated nearly every one. From Sinai, according to the account, God said, "Thou shalt not kill," and yet he ordered the murder of millions; "Thou shalt not commit adultery," yet he gave captured maidens to gratify the lust of the captors; "Thou shalt not steal," and yet he gave to Jewish marauders the flocks and herds of others; "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house, nor his wife," and yet he allowed his chosen people to destroy the homes of neighbors and steal their wives; "Honor thy father and thy mother," and yet this same God had thousands of fathers butchered, and with the sword of war killed children yet unborn; "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," and yet he sent abroad "lying spirits" to deceive his own prophets and in a hundred ways paid tribute to deceit. So far as we know, Jehovah kept only one of these commandments—he worshiped no other God.—Ingersoll.

THAT man, I think, has had a liberal education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold, logical engin, with all its parts of equal strength, and in smooth working order—ready, like a steam engin, to be turned to any kind of work, and spin gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature, and of the laws of her operations; one who, no stunted ascetic, is full of life and fire, and whose passions are trained from crown to heel by a rigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or art, to hate all vileness, and to respect others as himself.—Huxley.

Odds and Ends.

A GIBL in Alabama has three tongues, but there is no particular advantage in the possession. She can not do more than talk all the time, and a woman with one tongue can do that.

A SCOTCH minister was asked if he was not very much exhausted after preaching three hours. "Oh, no," he replied; "but it would hav done you good to see how worried the people were."

CHRIST'S coat was without a seam. Our irreverent young man says this is a proof of the prescience of Christ. He anticipated Longfellow's line and could say, "My things are not what they seam."

"WHERE'S youse gwine, Bill Simpson, wid dat banjo?" inquired Mose Puffer one evening last week. "Me? Ise gwine down de ribber to play fur a darnse." "Play fur a darnse, eh? I say, Brudder Simpson, I tho't youse all got religion at de camp-meetin' las' Sunday." "Yaas, I got religion, Brudder Puffer, an' me an' de ole woman ain't nebber gwine ter darnse eny mo', but yer see ef I doan' play fur de darnse some odder niggah will imperil his immortal soul, an' we're mos' out ob side meat, the chilluns am hungry, an' besides dat, Brudder Puffer, doan' de Bible say dat dey dat darnse mus' pay fur de music? G'way from me, niggah, Ise follerin' de scriptar."

A NEW prison chaplain was recently appointed in a certain town in Scotland. He was a man who greatly magnified his office, and entering one of the cells on his first round of inspection, he, with much pomposity, thus addressed the prisoner who occupied it: "Well, sir, do you know who I am?" "No, nor I dinna care," was the nonchalant reply. "Well, I'm your new chaplain." "Oh, ye are? Weel, I has heard o' ye before." "And what did you hear?" returned the chaplain, his curiosity getting the better of his dignity. "Weel, I heerd that the last twa kirks ye war in ye preached them baith empty; but I'll be hanged if ye'll find it such an easy matter to do the same with this ane!"

"WHAT about that fuss at the social at the deacon's night before last?" asked the grocery man, as he picked the fly-specks off from a lot of maple sugar he was putting away for "new maple sugar" next spring. "I heard the whole church was mad at each other over a grab-bag, and the presiding elder had all he could do to quiet things down." "That don't amount to much," replied the boy. "There's always something turns up when the sociable season first starts in. You see, ma was appointed a committee to fix up a grab-bag. Me and my chum were digging bait that morning to go fishing, when pa came out and said, "Hennery, I believe you put up that chicken job on me, and I don't believe anything but hard work will reform you. I want you to spade up the ground under the currant bushes.' I asked him if he wanted a hump-backed, disfigured boy, made so by hard work. Pa said he would risk the hump, and told me to pitch in, and then went down town. My chum said he would help me, and me and him got the job done before two o'clock. When we got done I come in and found ma had finished the grab-bag, and had it all loaded, with the top fastened with a puckering string, and hung on the back of a chair. Ma was up stairs getting her Sunday clothes on, to go to the sociable, so it didn't take me and my chum long to empty the bag and get first choice. Then I got our mouse-trap and took it to the barn, and caught two nice big fat mice, and put 'em in a collar-box with holes cut in it to giv 'em air, and dropped that in the bag. Then my chum remembered a big snapping-turtle he had in the swill-barrel, and me and him got that and wiped it as dry as we could, and tied it all up but its head, and put that in just as the deacon's hired man came to take the bag over to the sociable. Me and my chum went down to his house, and waited till the people got over to the sociable, and then we went over and got up in a tree where we could see through the open window and hear all that was going on. Pa he stood over by the bag and shouted, 'Ten cents a grab; don't let anybody be backward in a good cause.' Three or four had put up their ten cents and made a grab, when an old maid from Oshkosh, who had been to the springs for hysterics, got in her work on the collar-box. When she got the cover off, one of the mice, that knew his business, jumped on her shoulder and crawled down her neck, and the other dropped down on the floor and started round to meet the other one. You'd a dide to seen her flop and show her stockings and scream. The deacon's folks thought it was another attack of hysterics, and pa and the deacon got her on the sofa and held her while they poured paregoric and cayenne pepper down her. When she got loose she screamed all the harder. Then one of the other women seen the mouse and got up in a chair and shook her skirts and asked the young minister to help her catch the mouse. The poor fellow looked as though he would like to, but he failed. Just then the bottom of the chair broke and let her fall over on ma, and tore her bangs all down. Ma called her a 'hateful thing,' and told her she ought to be ashamed of herself. Finally they got things in order, but no one wanted to tackle the bag, and as here was where the profits came in, pa braced up and said he'd like to know why everybody acted so 'spicious. He'd like to see a grab-bag that would giv him the hysterics, and said 'women are always gettin' scared at nothin'.' He then put down ten cents and jammed his hand way down in the bottom of the bag, but he didn't keep it there long. He gave a jump and yanked his hand out, yellin' 'thunder!' Then he swung it over his head to shake it off, and brought it down on the deacon's head, and smashed his specs. Then he swung it the other way, and struck the woman president of the sewing society in the stomach and knocked her down in the deacon's lap. After pa had hollered himself hoarse, the turtle let go, and pa said he 'could lick the man that put that steel trap in the grab-bag.' Then pa and ma got mad, and everybody began to jaw, and they all went home. There's been a sort of coldness among the members ever since. I guess pa won't hav a hump-backed boy, but I'll get even with him, you just see if I don't." And the boy went out and took a sign, "Warranted Fresh," from the fruit stand, and hung it on a blind horse that was hitched to a garbage wagon in front of the store.—Peck's Sun.

BIBLE SCIENCE.—To organize and restore the Holy Communion practiced by Christ and his apostles. Also to maintain the "Perfect Law of Liberty" by showing the difference between God's Righteousness and all other notions of right and wrong. This is Masonic Christianity, and intended only for zealous persons tired of talk and ready for business. Return papers, 10 cents.
Address, "REWARD,"
3t37 710 Broadway, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.
USE THE
Liberal Hymn-Book
In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting. The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 50 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.
A TRUTH SEEKER
Around the World.
FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.
With a steel plate engraving of the author in Vol. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.
BY D. M. BENNETT,
Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, author of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.
Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.
Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances under which this work was written. The last words penned by the great author were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an account of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a
Freethinker's History of the World.
This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" should be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place,
New York city.

THE
GOLDEN THRONE
By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."
A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the future.
PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE
BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES
OF
The Pilgrims in the Land of Yhweh.
D. M. Bennett, Scribe.
ALSO
THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.
From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."
Price $1.00 D. M. BENNETT
33 Clinton Place, New York

THE SECULAR REVIEW,
A JOURNAL OF
ENGLISH LIBERALISM.
CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . Editors.
The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.
Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.
For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY
—OF—
RELIGIOUS CAPITALS
BY JAMES PARTON.
A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.
In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."
Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

THE
"WILSONIA,"
INVENTED BY
WILLIAM WILSON,
MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS, AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF MEDICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.
80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N.Y.
63 Broadway, Brooklyn, E. D.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and have been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

MR. WILSON, Dear Sir: Please send me a few circulars in regard to your curativ garments. I hav been telling several parties about them. I hav some friends who hav used them with great and pleasing results, and I would like to promote their use.
Yours, THOMAS W. BREWER,
Manasquan, N. J.

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to
DAVID J. COTTER,
80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 38. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, September 22, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

A NEW YORK wine firm sends a circular to clergymen offering to send them wine, with each case plainly marked "Canned Peaches." That is a compliment to ministerial integrity which will be appreciated.

THE Catholic priesthood in Atlanta, Ga., finding that they could not use the public schools of that city for sectarian purposes, hav taken the ground that the children of Catholics shall not attend those schools.

CONSIDERABLE activity is noticeable just now about churches that hav been closed during the summer. Contribution boxes are being polished up, and other matters attended to preparatory to the rush of ministers from abroad.

"YES," said the Vermont deacon, "I always go down to camp-meeting and always come back feeling good. Do you see that magnificent horse there in the field? Well, you ought to hav seen the old plug I took down there."

REV. GEORGE WASHINGTON MANLY, a Baptist clergyman of Aiken, S. C., who is studying in Germany, writes home for credentials, he being under surveillance of the police as a suspected dynamite conspirator. Mr. Manly had not been preaching in Germany.

EVOLUTIONISTS will read with interest that a white monkey recently brought to this country from Siam bears a strong physical resemblance to the Albinos of the human family. His eyesight is dim, and when he looks closely at some object he covers one eye with one of his hands.

SOME workmen digging a ditch near Muncie, Ind., a few days ago, found at a shallow depth the skeleton of a huge mastodon, the thigh bone measuring over four feet in length and 18 inches in diameter and the ribs over 4 feet in length. The bones are in a good state of preservation.

AMONG five prisoners who hav just been committed to the Kansas penitentiary, is Rev. John Harris, on a five years' sentence. He will be recognized as the Olathe banker, arrested for receiving deposits while his bank was in a failing condition, he knowing it to be so. His defalcation was $54,000.

THE National Reformer is pleased to record that a witness who claimed to affirm as a Freethinker, at Stratford police court, was not only courteously treated in the administration of the affirmation, but was afterward publicly complimented by the magistrate on the manner in which he gave evidence.

THE politicians of Iowa, who some time ago addressed circulars to the Methodist ministers of that state asking prayers for the success of prohibition, and for $10 toward campaign expenses, hav now replaced that circular with a second omitting the call for money, but requesting that the prayers be continued. By thus putting the Almighty upon the stump, so to speak, it is hoped to giv the cause an unexampled boom.

MR. ASTOR, of this city, is said to hav deeded the whole of his vast estate to his son, reserving to himself an annuity of one hundred thousand dollars a year during his lifetime. The theory of this action is to keep the whole of the estate together in a solid lump, which is contrary to the policy of this country, and equally so to the best interests of society. Cornelius Vanderbilt acted on the same theory in giving nearly all his property to his son William.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Indianapolis Journal, traveling from Bismarck to the Little Missouri, saw a burning mine. He says: "It givs off so sulphurous an odor that I at first thought the heat due to the decomposition of sulpeides. But the glow is red; little sulphurous acid is formed; you can stand over the crevasse without fear of either burning or suffocation. Sulphur is volatilized and recrystallized on the edges of the crevices. There is no smoke; the air quivers with the heat. The burning area is from ten to fifteen rods square, and has been on fire since the first visit by white men, and no one knows how many centuries before. It is only one of a number of fires that are known on the Bad Lands." The writer goes on to say that the Bad Lands are probably the ashes of extinct coal fires.

COL. INGERSOLL says that the only minister who feels absolutely safe regarding the orthodoxy of his congregation "seems to be the Rev. Joseph Pullman. He declares that the young people in his church don't know enough to hav intelligent doubts, and that the old people are in substantially the same condition. Mr. Pullman feels that he is behind a breastwork so strong that other defense is unnecessary." Mr. Pullman is the man who used to feed the Methodist flock at Winsted, Conn. He opened a controversy in the Winsted Press columns on religious matters with one of its contributors, but never found time to continue it.

AT the sitting of the International Congress of Freethinkers at Amsterdam Sept. 2d, Dr. Ludwig Buchner and Mr. Charles Bradlaugh made earnest speeches on behalf of the recognition of the political and social equality of men and women. A motion was adopted expressing the indignation of the congress at the persecution of the Jews, and inviting all Freethinkers to unite in opposition to persecution for matters of belief. It was decided to contribute to the fund for the erection of a memorial to Giordano Bruno. The next congress is to be held at Brussels. The proceedings closed in the afternoon.

A DISTRAINT for rent took place on Monday at St. Joseph's Catholic church, Hartlepool. Of the goods put up for auction several sacred lots were sold, though they scarcely fetched the price of salt. A large brass crucifix from the center of the altar went for 8s.; some holy water, vat, and a gong were knocked down for 2s. 2d.; an oaken lectern went for 1s. 2d.; and fourteen paintings representing the stations of the cross fetched 2s. each. The chalice, etc., were seized by the auctioneer's men and about to be removed, but the priest dared them to take these very sacred things away. They were allowed to remain. This sale must be a knock-down blow to the heavenly host, particularly to Peter.—London Freethinker.

THE case brought by Miss Elizabeth K. Miller against the Rev. Alexander S. Keiser, of Pottsville, Pa., for breach of promis of marriage, was called on the 11th. A verdict for damages was awarded to Miss Miller. While Keiser was attending a theological seminary he was intimate with Miss Miller, and a child was born. Keiser promised to marry her after he became a minister, but married another lady of Pottsville a short time ago, whereupon Miss Miller brought suit, claiming $10,000 damages. Some time ago she decided to settle and withdraw the suit, but could not come to satisfactory terms. The court now givs her a verdict of $1,000. She had previously received $500 from the Rev. Mr. Keiser for maintenance of the child.

A MAN in North Stonington, Conn., now 84 years of age, deposited $100 in a savings bank on his twenty-first birthday, and has never withdrawn a dollar of the principal or interest since.—Memphis Appeal. Perhaps there was a Sunday-school superintendent connected with the bank as cashier, and fixed things so the man couldn't draw anything out.——During the Sunday morning services recently at a certain popular church, the preacher waxed very impressiv and earnest in his discourse. The congregation hung breathless upon his words of burning eloquence. Suddenly a tall, athletic stranger in the audience was seen to throw his long arms over his head, stretch, yawn, and finally he said: "Well, I believe I'll go home." A buzz of surprise ran through the congregation, and a zealous deacon rushed up to the man, shook him excitedly, and said: "If you can't keep still, sir you will hav to go out." "I will?" inquired the stranger. "Yes." "Well, that's blamed kind of you. I don't know what I'm here for, anyway."——Mr. Talmage, it is said, while in Kentucky, drew more decidedly than any circus. It is not stated whether he drew to three queens or a bob-tailed flush.——An exchange speaks of him as Rev. Joseph Cook. Who is he? We hav often heard of Jo Cook. —Religious Editor of Texas Siftings.

A DISPATCH from St. Petersburg to the London Times says: "Another blow has just been dealt against Russian Jews; not by any new law, but by the enforcement of a special decree issued as far back as 1835. The senate has decided, in reply to representations made through the governor of Eastern Siberia, Gen. Anoutchine, that, according to the decree mentioned, Jews are distinctly forbidden to keep distilleries or retail spirituous liquors. All Hebrew distillers and retail venders of vodka in that part of the empire must liquidate their affairs within a prescribed period or giv their business over into Christian hands." It is very appropriate that the liquor business should be in the hands of Christians, A liquor saloon is usually a good sample of their hell.

THIS yarn comes from Arizona: A religious miner, White by name, had labored long and was poor. He was reading the Bible on Sunday, as always, when he fell asleep (as always?) and the book fell over a precipice fifty feet high. White climbed down the canyon, and found it open, with a piece of quartz lying on the verse: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Accepting this as a good omen, Mr. White searched, and in but a few moments succeeded in locating the ledge, which was over two feet in width, and assays $235, on an average, to the ton. Wonder how it would hav worked if he'd been reading a copy of "Hoyle" at a point where it says a flush beats two pairs. Probably in that case he wouldn't hav gone to sleep.—Boston Post.

A CORRESPONDENT of the St. Louis Globe Democrat sends these "mournful tidings" concerning the missionaries in Alaska. He weeps copiously over the "disgrace to the cause of religion," but worldly people see nothing to be surprised at in the account. Ministerial falls are too common: "At Sitka and along shore the missionaries and the Indians hav had great times together, and, through unfortunate choice in its agents, the Presbyterian board has not accomplished all the good that it might among these peaceful, happy-go-lucky nativs. The Rev. Sheldon Jackson came up and organized a mission, and then went East to work up the interest of good people. Boxes of clothing and books came up on every steamer, sent by pious old ladies and good Sunday-school children in the East, and the Indians believed that verily a Providence cared for them. The mission buildings burned, and before a new home could be erected the missionary took up his talents and ink bottle and joined partnership with a trader. He has prospered beyond all measure in his commercial venture; and, though others hav taken his place in the soul-saving work, the Indians hav now a grain of skepticism among them, and fully believe that the boxes of goods and all the articles in his store are things that hav been sent for them from the missionary societies of the East. Unfortunately the missionaries will not liv at peace with their white neighbors, and the stories of missionary greed and worldliness that one hears are appalling. The reverend gentleman in charge of one of these stations on this coast calmly said, in my presence, that there was a great temptation for the missionaries to relapse into traders or exercise the land functions, and that without doubt many had come to the Alaska field in order that they make or save money. Although most of the white residents are guarded in their statements concerning mission affairs, enough is heard on all sides to put some of these teachers of Christianity in a sad and doubtful light."

News of the Week.

DELMONICO, the famous restaurant man, is dead.

WILLIAM S. HOLMAN, of Indiana, is considerably talked of as Democratic candidate for president in 1884.

IT is reported that China and France may submit the differences between them to the joint mediation of England and the United States.

DISASTROUS floods are prevailing in the district of Taranto, Italy. Many lives hav been lost, and a large number of cattle hav been swept away.

THE Martin Luther festival in Germany has awakened the Catholics of that country, and they are holding rival religious meetings praying for Catholic unification.

THE post-office department last Saturday began the distribution of the new two-cent postage stamps, which are to supersede three cent stamps as the price of letter postage.

NOTHING new of especial interest has been brought out in the Rose Ambler murder case in Stratford, Conn. The murdered woman's lover, William Lewis, is the latest object of suspicion.

A HORSE called Jay-Eye-See trotted a mile in two minutes ten and three-fourths seconds at Providence, R. I., on the 15th. This time has never been beaten but once, and that was by Maud S., who made the mile in 2:10 1-4.

THE Bleecker street branch of the Salvation Army of this city is much complained of by persons in the neighborhood of its headquarters. Legal proceedings hav been resorted to with a view to an abatement of the nuisance.

BARBARA MILLER, a colored murderess of Richmond, Va., hanged on Friday, the 14th, went to the gallows in a white robe, ready to be taken up among the angels; and without shoes, expecting to be immediately presented with a pair of golden slippers.

PROFESSOR WARNER, the aeronaut, made an ascension from Pittsburgh, Pa., one day last week. At a hight of 7,000 feet the balloon collapsed. The professor fell to the ground with his balloon, sustaining no other serious injury than partial suffocation by gas.

THERE hav been fresh anti-Jewish disorders in the Zala district, Hungary. Kemiz, a well-known agitator, is among the persons arrested in connection with the disturbance. A conflict between the military and the people has taken place at Kostainicza, in Croatia, many persons being killed and wounded.

A SPECIAL to the Galveston, Tex., News, from Lovelady, dated Sept. 12th, says: "Last night, five miles west of here, Thomas Smith went into a church meeting slightly intoxicated, and stepped on the toes of one Brown, the clergyman's son. A few words passed, but the quarrel was dropped until after service, when it was renewed. Smith was stabbed and killed. Brown's brother was also killed. The Rev. B. D. Brown, who is supposed to be implicated, will be arrested.

A CASE for Historian Billings's next edition of "Crimes of Preachers" has just been unearthed in Albany, N. Y. Alfred F. Vedder is the minister's name. He has had charge of a Methodist church at West Milton, this state, for some time. He is about 30 years old, and has a wife and one child. Anna Walter, 25 years of age, and good looking, has been in the habit of frequenting Mr. Vedder's church. An improper intimacy has for a long time existed between these two, and they hav performed several short journeys in each other's company. The latest developments in the case show that the girl has been nearly killed by a successful attempt at abortion. The minister, who was arrested as he was about to enter church last Sunday morning, is in jail, as is also his medical accomplice, one Dr. Patterson. The girl has made an affidavit setting forth the facts as above stated.

Communications.

Infidel Philosophy.

Was a miracle ever wrought? In other words, can God or man make an impossibility possible? After all that has been said and written about miracles, the question still arises, Is a miracle possible?

Many who hav believed in miracles hav never stopped to inquire what a miracle really is. A miracle is a phenomenon outside of and contrary to the laws of nature. Many of the reported miracles are no miracles at all. It would be a miracle for a dead man to be brought to life, and yet the stories about raising the dead are mere fabrications.

I hav seen a man who was pronounced dead by his physician, and believed to be dead by his friends, and yet he called from his coffin for water. A finer chance for a first-class miracle was never offered, if it had been properly managed.

Now, suppose such a case of resuscitation had occurred to Jemima Wilkinson, she having prophesied that she would arise after her death. The religion which she attempted to promulgate, based on a miracle, would hav been firmly established, and two hundred years later, as in the case of the Christian religion, her followers would hav been boasting that "the gates of hell should not prevail against it."

An old physician told me that a child once died in his arms; and he said that he was ready to swear, from all that was laid down in the books, and from anything which he was able to determin, that the child was dead; and yet, said he: "I don't know of a more healthy woman to-day than that child grew to be."

Now, suppose at precisely the right time some religious enthusiast had prayed and crossed himself, and sprinkled holy water on the child, and performed certain hifalutin tricks over the body, and then commanded it to arise—it would hav been as good a miracle as was ever attested, and all the parts could hav been successfully played. I don't take stock in raising the dead.

Three things are necessary to the success of a miracle—a plot, a lie, and a pack of fools.

If I could be led to believe that a miracle had ever been performed, what assurance could I hav that the relation of numbers might not be changed, or the law of gravitation reversed, or that the universe itself might not be blotted out in a moment.

Cases of miracles where the dumb are made to speak, the deaf to hear, the lame to walk, and where the sick are healed and devils cast out, are only commonplace. All that is required in such cases are an ignorant people and some designing person willing to impose upon them.

We hav a man in our village who had not walked a step nor stood upon his feet for a length of time. On a day when there was a public parade the old man was carried to the street on a litter. The martial band was playing (of which music the old man was very fond), and he jumped from the litter and marched up and down the streets, and played the fife all day. In an age of ignorance, with expert manipulators, all such cases could be turned into first-class miracles.

I think it would be a miracle to get a devil into a man, and then it would be a devil of a miracle to get him out again. Now, my Christian friend, although you may hav read the fifth chapter of Mark a hundred times, I ask you to read it again carefully, and then ask yourself how you ever came to believe such Munchausenisms as are therein related.

Webster says a legion is from three to five thousand, and yet there were that many devils all crammed into one man—as many as two thousand hogs could hold. Here was a man who could not be bound with the strongest chains, because it had been tried and he burst them asunder. To such a man the big chain which was stretched across the North River in the time of the Revolution wouldn't amount to a curl of smoke.

Let the Christian tax himself to the utmost, and he cannot even imagin a greater absurdity. Can the Christian giv any reason for believing such nonsense? Only this: Father believes it, and mother knows it is true; it is written down in a book which the minister says is the word of God, and the minister is a good man. But the Christian never seems to realize that early impressions are the most lasting and hardest to be eradicated.

I hav but one way of disposing of the miraculous. Ever since I can remember men hav lied while old nature has ever been true. Consequently whenever I hear any narration of the marvelous, I hav only to ask one question: Is a violation of any known law of nature involved in the statement? If so, it is rejected at once, for I should discredit all human testimony sooner than believe that a law of nature has been varied one jot or tittle. Nature remains true though every man may lie.

Being taught from early youth to regard the Bible as the word of God, prepares the mind to receive as truth that which would be regarded with derision if written in any other book. If you call the attention of a Christian to a palpable contradiction, he will tell you that there may be a "mystery," but there can be no contradiction in the word of God. And so he believes everything recorded in the Bible, even to the talking of asses, without the exercise of sense or reason. The more impossible the statement the greater and more powerful his God appears to him.

I hav seen magicians perform some wonderful feats in my day, and hav read of many others. I hav seen a man put his hand under his cloak and take out a large goblet filled with pure water, in which were living fish; take off his cloak, shake it, and replace it, and then take from under it another goblet filled with water containing living fish; and this I saw repeated five or six times. John B. Gough said it was the nearest approach to a miracle of anything he ever witnessed. I hav seen a man cut up into quarters and restored to life again; and from the old world comes the report that individuals are disemboweled and buried for a longer period than Dr. Tanner fasted, and taken out of the grave alive and "ready to be tried again."

Now, suppose all the magicians, and sorcerers, and enchanters, and necromancers in the world had combined together and the report should be promulgated that on a certain time all the rivers (including the great father of waters), and lakes, and streams, and springs, and ponds should be turned into blood, would any Christian be alarmed? Not at all; because he knows such a thing would be impossible. And yet the magicians up in Egypt did so with their enchantments (Ex. vii, 19–22), and the Christian believes the statement.

Now, let him satisfy himself if he can why he believes the waters in Egypt were all turned to blood, and still believes it impossible at the present time. Why can't he be reasonable enough to see that if such a thing is impossible to-day it was always impossible? The laws of nature are immutable. There is only one way that the belief in these holy absurdities can be accounted for, and that is that the reason of riper years is often powerless to eradicate erroneous doctrin taught us in our youth.

It may be asked if there were no great and wise men in days when miracles were said to hav been wrought. I answer that the great and the wise believe only in the natural, and the more men believe in the unnatural the farther they are removed from the great and the wise. The miracle game could only be successfully played in a very ignorant age.

Miracles were in some repute in the days of Josephus, for he says that he was present at the working of one. The whole account will be found in the "Antiquities of the Jews," book viii, c. ii, sec. v.

Now, it will be remembered that Josephus was born about the time Christ is said to hav been crucified, and his statements often lift the curtain and introduce us directly to the character of the people upon the stage in his day.

In speaking of Solomon he says that he "composed such incantations also by which distempers are alleviated, and he left behind him the manner of using exorcisms by which they drive away demons, so that they never return, and this method of cure is in great force unto this day."

Now, if so great and learned a man as Josephus is acknowledged to hav been, believed in incantations and exorcisms and demons, what must hav been the condition of the masses? Then he goes on to tell about being present when a devil was cast out of a man. He says that one Eleazar drew the devil out of the man's nostrils, and that he used a ring and a root, and in order to let the people know that it was a real devil, and that he had power over him, he set a vessel of water a little way off, and commanded the devil to tip over the water as he left the man. Now this is related with all the candor of a great historian. Moreover he says that the devil was cast out in the presence of Vespasian, and his family and his officers and his army, showing that the whole people were steeped in superstition. Doesn't this look a little too much like the tricks played by these traveling sleight-of-hand performers? Doesn't it betray a hocus pocus plot to deceive the people? and does the Christian believe that there is any God in such tricks? But the people believed and the historian recorded it as fact, and that is all that can be said of any miracle.

If all the people who were ever born were still upon the face of the earth, and the Christian had the privilege of talking with living witnesses, as to past events, he never could find one who heard a jackass talk, or saw all the waters of Egypt turned to blood, or saw the children of Israel pass through the Red Sea, or saw the sun and moon appear to stop in the heavens, or who saw the ark, or who witnessed the great feats of Samson, for the good reason that none of those events ever occurred. In every age there hav been those who were interested in deceiving the people, and it is no wonder that such stories obtained currency in an age when the people were held down in ignorance, and nearly all power lodged in the hands of the priesthood.

Did you know, my Christian friend, that the pagan world was full of miracles, and did you know that much has been written to disprove pagan miracles, and to establish those recorded in the old Jew book? You certainly cannot think that God had anything to do with pagan miracles, and yet they are as fine specimens of sleight-of-hand as God ever helped a Christian to perform.

And do you know that the Right Rev. John Milner, D.D., admitted that "a vast number of incredible and false miracles had been forged in every age of the church, including that of the apostles?"

And do you know, my Protestant friend, that the Roman Catholic church still claims the power to work miracles? And do you know that at intervals she is still reporting some of the most astounding miracles which hav ever been recorded?

At Saragossa, one Michael Pellicer lost his leg, and through God's instrumentality a new leg was grown from the old stump. In Africa the tongues of some pious Catholics were "cut out to the roots," and still they exhorted and prayed as well as ever. And I might cite a hundred other miracles equally wonderful, and all good enough miracles for Catholics. How can it happen that they believe these impossibilities to be true? Because the church has declared them to be true, and the Catholic believes his church to be infallible. The Protestant rejects these, but givs credence to the others which I hav mentioned because they are written down in a book which he believes is infallible.

I don't believe there is one man out of a thousand (unless he be a Catholic) who believes in these Catholic miracles, and yet every one of them was sworn to in the most solemn manner by witnesses who were considered competent. I want my Christian friends to know how easy it is to perform miracles.

Man has always sought for distinction, and in an age of superstition and ignorance nothing gave a man such power among the masses as to make them believe that he was favored by and derived power from heaven. Hence the grip of the Catholic church upon her deluded and superstitiously insane devotees is still retained by the performance of miracles. But the mystery is that the Protestant will laugh at the credulity of the Catholic, and never realize that he is imposed upon in precisely the same way.

There is nothing which rests upon a more solid foundation, as far as human testimony is concerned, than the truth of witchcraft. Hundreds of the most substantial and reliable men and women hav sworn in the most solemn manner to its reality. And yet to-day if a man should declare his belief in witchcraft he would expose himself to the ridicule of sensible people.

The miracles said to hav been performed at the grave of Deacon Paris ought to satisfy every Christian how easy it is for the superstitious to be imposed upon and deceived. All manner of diseases which human flesh is heir to were said to hav been cured at his grave. Acts the most wonderful and incredible were performed. Women were crucified, having their hands and feet nailed to the cross with large square iron spikes six inches long. The wounds being rubbed with a small cross which had been sanctified immediately healed. Swords were thrust through the bodies of individuals without leaving a wound. One woman received two thousand blows, "each one of which would hav felled an ox." Another woman received, without harm, thirty thousand blows of the fist from relays of strong men; and still another was beaten for fifty-five minutes with a "huge oaken club" at the rate of thirty blows per minute without receiving hurt or injury.

Now, the Christians claim to believe that the three Hebrew children passed through a superheated furnace without harm; that Samson burnt the corn with the fiery foxes, and sucked sufficient water from the dry jawbone of an ass to quench his thirst; but not one in a thousand will believe the statements which I hav made concerning the miracles performed at the grave of Deacon Paris. And yet James Parton says that the evidence taken in each one of these cases would hang a man in any of our courts. Even Rollin, the great historian, believed them to be true. Not one Christian in a hundred will believe these Paris miracles, and yet the names of the men and women who swore to the truth of these statements are obtainable, for their depositions are on record. So far as human testimony is concerned, nothing rests upon a firmer basis than the truth of these miracles. Yet none believe them except perhaps a few ignorant Catholics. Let the Christian satisfy himself, if he can, why he rejects the Paris miracles and yet believes the story of Jonah and the whale. My Christian friend, do you know the name of the vessel in which he took passage? Do you know the names of the men who threw him overboard and saw the whale gulp him down? Do you know anything about the veracity of the men who saw him when the conductor took up his ticket and left him at the depot? How hot was the furnace in which the three Hebrew children were cast? Do you know who testified in the case? What reason hav you to believe that they could stand the fire any more than the woman could stand the blows from a heavy club at the grave of Deacon Paris?

You believe these miracles because they are recorded in an old book which you hav been taught to reverence. Do you know anything about the authorship of the book—when it was written or by whom?

When forced down to bottom facts will it not appear that positivly you know nothing about it? Then where is the chance to found a rational belief?

I might go on and tell you about the miracles wrought in the old pagan world, and about the wonderful miracles wrought in the time of Mohammed, and then it might be pertinent to ask the Christian on what grounds he rejects all these, but vindicates the Bible miracles.

In my own county the plates were found from which the "Book of Mormon" was translated. This was certainly a very miraculous find. Does any Christian believe that John Smith found any engraved plates, and was helped to interpret them in a miraculous manner? Yet if human testimony is to be taken it is all true. Joseph Smith says: "I would inform you that I translated by the gift and power of God, and caused the same to be written," etc. "Wherefore to be obedient to the commandments of God I hav, through his grace and mercy, accomplished that which he commanded me respecting this thing. I also inform you that the plates of which hath been spoken were found in the township of Manchester, Ontario county, state of New York."

Eleven witnesses, viz., Oliver Cowdry, David Whitmer, Martin Harris, Christian Whitmer, Peter Whitmer, John Whitmer, Hiram Page, Joseph Smith, Sr., Hyrum Smith, and Samuel H. Smith testify to the truth of the following statements: "We testify that we hav seen the engravings which are upon the plates, and they hav been shown to us by the power of God and not of man. And we declare with words of soberness that an angel of God came down from heaven, and he brought and laid before our eyes; that we beheld and saw the plates and the engravings thereon, which hav the appearance of gold, all of which has the appearance of ancient work and curious workmanship, for we hav seen and hefted and know of a surety that the said Smith has got the plates of which we hav spoken, and we know that it is by the grace of God the father and our Lord Jesus Christ that we beheld and bear record that these things are true, and it is marvelous in our eyes. Nevertheless the voice of the Lord commanded us that we should bear record of it. Wherefore to be obedient to the commandments of God we bear testimony of these things."

My Christian friend, these things hav occurred in my day; these witnesses lived in my own county, and yet you do not believe that Joseph Smith found the golden plates. But the truth of these statements is established by testimony inconceivably stronger than that of any Bible miracle.

The pagans believe in their miracles, the Mohammedans in theirs, the Catholics in theirs, and the Mormons in theirs. The Protestant Christian rejects all except those recorded in the Bible. There is just about as good ground for believing one as the other. Wisdom would teach that all are false.

It is wonderful to observe how one system of religion has grown out of another all along the ages. We are now on the heel of another revolution. The marvelous is soon to giv place to the real. Everything which cannot be made to harmonize with the laws of nature must be cast out among the myths and lies and impossibilities. Soon science will wave her magic wand over the civilized nations of the globe, and their gods and ghosts and the unnatural must giv way to the real, the true, and the natural.

Naples, N. Y., Sept. 9, 283. JOHN PECK.

Pennsylvania Organizes a State League.

On Saturday, the 9th inst., the first session of the first state Liberal convention that has ever been held in Pennsylvania was opened in Maltby Hall, Pittsburgh. Mr. Harry Hoover, of the Provincial Committee appointed by the National Liberal League, called the meeting to order, and Mrs. Juliette H. Severance, of Milwaukee, was elected chairman. That lady upon assuming the duties, which she acceptably discharged during the entire convention, made a brief address upon the aims and objects of Liberalism. The main purpose of the convention was to unite the Liberals of Pennsylvania in a state League auxiliary to the National League.

The following committees were appointed by the chair: Credentials—Messrs. Hoover, Seymour, and Mahaffey. Permanent Organizations — S. F. De Jones, John R. Kemp, and Roman Staley. Resolutions —H. Hoover, Thomas Grundy, and Prof. Seymour.

Eighteen delegates were reported as present at the opening of the first session. The report of the Provisional Committee was read and adopted. The committee appointed to draft a constitution for the state convention reported, and the constitution was read. On motion action upon it was deferred until the meeting of the convention Sunday. The convention then adjourned until evening.

At eight o'clock in the evening the League assembled in Lafayette Hall. The stage was attractivly ornamented with floral emblems, and Staley's band furnished some lively airs. The meeting was addressed by Mrs. Dr. Severance.

The second day's session was resumed at ten o'clock Sunday morning at Lafayette Hall. The new constitution was then taken up and its provisions discussed by Messrs. Leland, Luse, De Jones, and others, after which it was adopted as read. The report of the Committe on Permanent Organization was then read by the secretary and adopted.

The permanent organization of the State League was effected by the election of the following officers: President, Jas. E. Emerson, Beaver Falls, Pa.; Vice-Presidents, Hon. A. B. Bradford, Enon Valley, Pa.; John E. Kemp, Altoona, and Prof. Wm. Seymour, Philadelphia; Secretary, Harry Hoover, Pittsburgh; Treasurer, S. F. De Jones, Pittsburgh; Executiv Committee, Messrs. W. F. Porter, Philadelphia; D. R. Christian, Altoona; Roman Staley, Pittsburgh; Pulaski Carter, Scranton; Finance Committee, Louis Plock, Altoona; Wm. Crookston, Irwin Station, Pa. The following resolution was unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That this convention appreciates the loss sustained by the Liberal world by the recent death of the indefatigable worker, true and tried Liberal, Kersey Graves, of Richmond, Ind., the well-known author of "The Bible of Bibles," the "World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and other radical works. The sympathy of this convention is hereby extended to his bereaved family.

Twenty-two new members were enrolled, and after stirring addresses from Messrs. Leland, Grundy, McCarl, Douthett, Hoover, Heathcothe, and Dr. Severance, the convention adjourned until 2 P. M. At the hour appointed for the afternoon session quite a large audience had assembled in Lafayette Hall to hear the addresses which had been previously announced for that occasion. A violin and organ furnished some enlivening music, after which Prof. Wm. Seymour, was introduced to the audience.

At the conclusion of his remarks, Mrs. Juliette H. Severance, M. D., of Milwaukee, was introduced and made an eloquent address on "Evolution or Growth" with pleasing and telling effect upon her hearers. The speaker strongly condemned the use of both liquor and tobacco, but more especially denounced the tobacco habit. She held that people paid far more attention to the successful raising of fine horses, cattle, sheep, swine, etc., than to the improvement of the human race. Moral, mental, and physical education should be adapted to each individual. Let the love of liberty and fraternity prevail until the whole world became united in the bonds of fellowship and love, and then will all the human race become gods morally, mentally, and physically, and will thus find their heaven to be upon this earth here and now. Freethinkers are the most moral of people or else are too smart to be found out and punished by confinement in penal institutions. The statistics as produced by the speaker were as follows: Of the entire number of convicts in penal institutions in this country 13 1-2 per cent were represented by clergymen, while of the entire population of this country only 2 1-2 per cent were criminals in confinement. She closed by charging the Christian religion with having caused the degradation and inferiority of women in all countries and all times. The convention then adjourned until eight o'clock in the evening.

At the evening session the assembly was addressed by Hon. T. B. Wakeman, president of the National Liberal League. The subject of the address was "Evolution," and was substantially that delivered at the Rochester convention. Mr. Hoover, the chairman of the Commitee on Organization, reported that over one hundred new or charter members had been enrolled since the convention had assembled. After arranging for the appointment of delegates to the National Liberal Convention at Milwaukee on the 21st, the convention adjourned to reassemble at the call of the president of the State Liberal League.

The Liberalistic Bond of Union.

What is it? An important question, surely, for Liberals. I find it often "answered" by our oracular brethren—"scientific"—and am much amused by some of their answers.

While rusticating on my summer vacation, among country churches, and noting the rapid dying out of the churchy spirit among members and preachers of the old institutions, and the growing power of natural, liberal, fraternal fellowship over society creeds, I hav nevertheless found their provender rather thin and weak for my appetite, and hav read THE TRUTH SEEKER for more hearty mental food. I hav found much of it there; and not that only, for while it serves up the strengthening meat, it givs us a fair allowance of the desserts to excite the livelier gustatory taste; and among the richest of these are the frequent excommunication bulls from some of our "Liberal" popes, casting heretics out of the fold. Why, the longest, gloomiest face which the prosiest, try-to-be-orthodox sermon puts on me is completely transfigured into mirth by a five minutes' reading of some of these. One, especially, is uncommonly funny—"The Bond of Union," by Mr. Putnam.

What is the bond of union among Liberals? Clearly, if they are chiefly Liberals—more Liberals than anything else—it is devotion to individual liberty. Our worship is defending this against whatever or whoever attacks it; against priestcraft chiefly, because that is the chief foe—priests' craft, not the individual opinions of men who preach. In so far as their opinions are individual opinions, we as Liberals hav nothing to do with opposing or indorsing them, whether errors or truths, unless they oppose personal liberty. Priestcraft is the craft that establishes institutions with society creeds as conditions of fellowship. Whoever works for the establishment of a society creed of any kind—moral, social, philosophical, religious or non-religious, superstitious or scientific—aiming to make it the test of fellowship, is a priest; is working, under the influence of the priestly spirit, at priestcraft—at organizing priestly governments, of some name, and fencing out all who do not accept their authority. Such persons are priests at priestly work as really if their creeds are true as if they are erroneous. And as Liberals we must oppose them in this; while as Liberals we are to fellowship superstitions even, if they are of a kind that work for rather than against individual freedom. Don't misunderstand me—fellowshiping them as Liberals has nothing to do with indorsing their opinions. This will soon answer the question whether Spiritualism or Materialism—other-worldism or this-worldism—is Liberalism. Neither is. They are philosophies, whose disciples are working with some success to discover enough of the facts of nature to enable humanity to build a perfected system of thought, a philosophy which may properly be called scientific. It is of course important, for this purpose, to ascertain which of these has most truth, and truth most freed from distortions. I work at that question, but work then as one of a sect in philosophy. For, testing Liberalism, I waive it as not to the point. But whether Spiritualists or Materialists are the best philosophers, the most correct in explaining nature's facts, is a different question from those which inquire if they are Liberals, and, if so, which are most Liberalized. To learn about the first, we must watch the disciples of each, and see which most readily and with least prejudice investigate the other's facts, and all systems of thought. To answer the latter question, we must see which most heartily fellowship all workers for mental liberty, whether they agree or differ with them in philosophy or theology, and which hav most of those who try to make their own opinions a society creed and test of fellowship.

Of the Materialists and Spiritualists, one of them has for more than a quarter of a century maintained in New York a weekly meeting for discussion, to which opponents are invited to a free platform, and, with or without becoming members, are equal in rights there—are invited thus, not as a privilege accorded by courtesy, but as a right established in the organization of the meeting. I will not here say which branch of Liberalism has done this. Let those who do not know look into the fact and study the matter, and also observe generally which has the largest proportion of those who, like churchists, must be differed with gingerly, if at all, if we would avoid offending them and incurring their prejudice. Both hav enough of such; which has most? I will not attempt to decide this. Perhaps I hav not observed sufficiently to tell correctly. I oppose this authoritativ creed-building work in whoever I find at it. If it happens to be the ones who in general are nearest correct in philosophy, they can all the better afford to stand such efforts; and they will stand it best.

Just at present, and for a few weeks past, I hav noticed more "this-worldists" than "other-worldists" at that work in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The most zealous and bitter of these "Liberalistic" sectarians —creed establishers—seems to be our friend, T. Winter. He has the impetuous ardor which would make a good official to carry out a pope's orders; but if he could convert all Liberals to his creed, and then they should decide to hav a pope, they would not elect him, for he has not deliberation enough to be politic. He would drive off the allies needed while his church was weak, and which wise management would make useful, and, perhaps, in time convert. Popes need sagacity. I need not say more of him. He is a representativ man.

But another class is represented by Mr. Putnam. He would be a worse failure as pope than the other. Or a better failure. He would not burst the machine, but would take everybody in, and let them run it as they pleased. He thinks some of the other-worldists should be excommunicated, but he constructs his anti-creedal creed so broad as to keep in pretty much all modern Spiritualists—all except a few crazy ones; and I think a little political ingenuity would interpret it so as to hold them too. His broad, Liberal, humanitarian, poetically-inspired spirit, after constructing a Liberal society creed so broad that the real excommunicators would spurn it as no good, then marches through it with a double-quick step, patting every anti-ecclesiastic kindly, and bidding him come in and make himself at home. Pshaw! he wouldn't do for a pope at all, and as a creed-builder he is an intolerable botch. His priestcraft is too flimsy. "It won't do." It's not fit to be ordained. He needs the Winter wind to cool his warm humanitarian heart and conquer his poetic muse, before he can succeed at this. He is chiefly a Liberal. Unitarianism could not hold him, and the tinge it leaves on him is very thin; and this-worldism, while he professes it, don't hold him. He don't sectarianize worth a cent. Brother Winter, can't you do something for him?

CALEB S. WEEKS.

The Liberal Club.

The three hundred and fifth regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club was held on the evening of Friday, the 14th. Lawyer Chamberlain was in the chair. Mrs. Macdonald, the secretary, read the minutes of the previous meeting from a large book, in which it was set forth that on the occasion of the previous meeting aforesaid Col. A. H. H. Dawson had been introduced and had proceeded to the delivery of his lecture, as previously announced, entitled "The Liberal Club Itself;" that the lecture was followed by the usual discussion, in which Messrs. Chamberlain, Andrews, Weeks, Putnam, and King participated; that the same was closed by the speaker, and, furthermore, that at the usual hour the club adjourned. No personal violence following the reading of the minutes, the chairman intimated that they might be considered as accepted. He then alluded in graceful and complimentary terms to THE TRUTH SEEKER on sale in the hall and containing the report of the Rochester Convention and Mr. Remsburg's oration. A number of intelligent persons thereupon purchased THE TRUTH SEEKER. The lecturer of the evening was Mr. Channing Burnz, who would oblige in the absence of Professor Fairfield, who had not turned up or otherwise made himself visible. Mr. Burnz is a well built young man with an intellectual head. The subject of his lecture, which he denominated a sermon, and which was in fact an essay, was, "If a Man Die, Shall He Liv Again?" This interrogatory thesis he had extracted from the book of Job, chapter xiv and verse xiv. Mr. Burnz would answer the question in the negativ. He saw no evidence of a future state of existence for mankind. The grub and butterfly argument was practically played out, and there was nothing else for the dogma of immortality to rest upon. The essay was a mildly philosophical discussion of the question, and was not of an exciting nature. Much of it seemed to hav been written in the form of an epic poem. At the end of about forty minutes, while the audience were waiting for the demonstration, Mr. Burnz said that he trusted he had made his position impregnable, and sat down. It cannot be denied that the essay was a scholarly production.

The chairman remarked that the subject was open to discussion by members of the club. There was no immediate rush for the platform. Mrs. Leonard was the first to respond. She did not regard the question of a future life as of so much moment as the question of the present life. It was important that we should be born right. The laws of propagation and reproduction needed attention. Woman in all time had been the slave of man, and down through the last quarter-stretch of the nineteenth century the villian still pursued her. The speaker did not know whether there was a future life or not, and did not believe any one else knew. Those who had the least information on the subject were inclined to talk the most about it. Mrs. Leonard was energetically applauded by Mr. S. P. Putnam.

Mr. Henry Stone then ascended to the platform. He was not a Spiritualist, but he could not deny the existence of facts that could be accounted for only upon the hypothesis of a future life. He recounted several incidents that bore on the question, showing there was some sort of an existence following this. Whether it was immortal he knew not, and, as he expressed it, he cared less.

Samuel Leavitt said he was a Spiritualist. He had pigeon-holed Spiritualism years ago as one of the exact sciences. The lecturer of the evening, he said, had set forth in mellifluous language the stock platitudes of Materialism. He regretted that they had not been accompanied by the stained-glass attitudes that usually went along with them. Mr. Leavitt then with some hesitancy and with an appropriate apology repeated the Latin phrase, Cæsar, morituras te saluto, or words to that effect, which evoked enthusiasm.

Mr. Edward King was called for by the audience. He came forward bringing with him his mackinaw hat, which he utilized as a tamborine, and upon which with a lead pencil he beat a rhythmic accompaniment to his subsequent remarks. The lecture had produced a soporific influence upon him. It was not adequately pervaded with the tomahawk and scalping-knife. He also regarded the lecture as funereal. This impression had been strengthened by finding the advertisment of an undertaker in his seat. The literary excellence of Mr. Burnz's sermon was worthy of remark, but it wasn't appropriate to the audience.

Dr. Caleb S. Weeks, generally voluble and always interesting, made a consecutiv argument in favor of the Spiritualistic philosophy, during which the audience entertained themselvs by conversing pleasantly with one another, many going outside for that purpose and to avoid annoyance to the speaker, who, however, omitted to express his gratitude for the consideration shown in this act of courtesy.

Mr. Chamberlain announced that Professor Lawson of the Boston Liberal Club was present, and was invited to speak. The professor was readily induced to accept. He is an astronomer, and this fact may account for the meteoric method of his oratory, which was indeed most unexpected, and startling in the extreme. He called attention to the stars, those "glittering orbits" that revolved throughout illimitable profundity, the least of which was millions of times the size of the whole solar system. He thought that man, who was only a bifurcated bit of animalculæ crawling around over this mote of cosmic dust, must hav considerable gall to imagin they were all made for his especial benefit. Professor Lawson thought it more heroic to die for this world than for the next. The idea of the theological heaven was a superstition unworthy of any intelligent person, and following upon its heels came the worse and more accursed infamy of Spiritualism. When the professor left the stand the audience were at a loss to know whether the building had been struck by lightning or whether a keg of beer had exploded in the saloon under the hall. The explanation is that Professor Lawson is a comet in disguise.

Dr. Atkinson alluded to the subdermal tissue of worms. He believed that subject demanded attention. If the audience would call at his house, 41 East Ninth street, he would show them some silkworms that were getting in their work on an oleanthus tree. These worms exhibited an intelligence that was superior to instinct. Some of the doctor's sesquipedalian words left his hearers in great doubt as to the direction of his line of thought.

Mr. Burnz closed the exercises by replying to those who had criticised the subject matter of his sermon. He was too much of a poet, or artist, or something or other to deny anything. He had merely examined the argument, if such the dogma of a future life might be called, and he did not consider it good. He hoped his treatment of the subject had had the effect intended.

As the audience left the hall the reporter looked in vain for the person of Mr. Shook. He was not there. Neither was the Great Universal Preacher, Mr. Andrews. Mr. Wakeman is carrying his Higher Integration through the wild, wild West. Mr. Leland, of Man—which cometh forth as a flower and is cut down, and fleeth also as a shadow and continueth not—was also abroad. THE TRUTH SEEKER was the only literature that adorned the table. Man may come and Man may go: THE TRUTH SEEKER is still continued under the able management, etc.

On Friday night next Professor Vaughan, of Virginia, will speak on "The American Hell." It is thought that the American hell will be shown to be much superior to the article found in the effete dynasties of the Old World.

No one can justify the self-sacrifice of staying away from the meetings of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

A Glorious Lecture.

The Toronto Globe of the 10th has this extended report of Mr. Watts's lecture at that place:

Albert Hall was full to overflowing yesterday afternoon on the occasion of the delivery of a lecture by Mr. Charles Watts, an English secular lecturer, on the subject of "The Decline of Christianity the Triumph of Freethought." The lecture was given under the auspices of the Secular Society, the chair being occupied by Mr. A. Fiddington.

Mr. Watts, who is a clear reader, incisiv speaker, of fine elocutionary abilities, commenced his address by referring to the continuity claimed for Christianity. He denied that such continuity existed except in name. Christianity had passed through several different phases. The Christianity of Paul differed from that of Christ. That of the reformation was the very antithesis of the faith of Rome. There was no comparison between the creeds of to-day and that of the early church. Many Christians admitted that the Bible should be tried by the standard of reason. Christianity in Rome and Spain was a miserable superstition, in Scotland a gloomy nightmare, in England an emotional pastime, and in America a commercial commodity. (Applause and laughter.) The human recognition of Christianity would always remain. The public profession of Christianity was not falling off—it was too profitable a game. No system ever entirely perished. In accordance with evolution the truth embraced in various systems survived the errors with which they were bound up. The religion of the future would be based upon a cultured humanity, not on creeds or dogmas. The cardinal doctrins of supernatural religion were dying out. Many people prayed to God, but it was not to the God of the Bible. When God placed man in the garden of Eden did he know that he would fall? ("Yes" from several voices). Then, if he did, he laid a miserable trap to catch his weak children in. (Applause.) He acted as no father in this audience would act. The church had given up the devil. It was base ingratitude, for the devil had done more for the church than any other power. Were Christ to come on earth to-day, he would be more at home in this hall than in any church. Christ commanded giving up other things of this world. He taught humility and non-resistance. Why, even a member of the Salvation Army, if anyone smote him on the one cheek, would not offer the other to be operated upon. Christ said, "Swear not at all." Christians said, "You must swear, or we will deprive you of your civil rights."

Christianity had failed to inspire within its adherents a love for justice, truth, and manly conduct toward opponents. The lecturer referred to the Bradlaugh case and the imprisonment of the editors of the London Freethinker as instances in point. Christians treated other religions with ridicule. They should not be surprised if their opponents ridiculed theirs. Religion was divorced from politics in the eighteenth century, but some bigots in the British House of Commons wished to remarry them. It was alleged that Atheists should be excluded from power because they acknowledged no responsibility. This was false; they all admitted that they were responsible to society for their actions. The greatest political crimes had been committed by Theists, such as the Stuarts, the four Georges, the late emperor of Russia—all good Christians, and greater scoundrels never lived. All the political corruption and rascality in the United States and Canada was the work of Christians. The Inquisition, the Star Chamber, the flames of Smithfield, the persecution of those who dared to think for themselvs—these were the triumphs of Christianity.

That Christianity was dying was shown in the vain endeavor to harmonize Christianity with modern thought. The defenders of Christianity had shifted their ground. Now they contended that Christianity was progressiv. If it had progressed, then there was a time when it was not perfect, and if so, it could not be of divine origin. If it was divine, why had God left two-thirds of mankind ignorant of the name of Christ. The belief in the special act of creation had been given up. ["No!" from one of the audience.] The lecturer said he hoped the gentleman who had not given up the belief in special creation would defend it on the platform at the close of the debate.

The marked improvement in the condition of society and individual life was due to science. There was a great change of front on the question of prayer. Many Christians prayed as an emotional gratification. But the Christian prayer of supplication was gone out of the field. Another proof of the decline of Christianity was that they had no debaters among them who would defend Christianity on the platform. There were men of scholarship, men of ability, in the church. Why would they not come forward to meet those who assailed their belief? They knew too much. It was only those who knew a little who were rash enough to defend orthodoxy.

Gladstone, in speaking on the Affirmation bill, admitted that Agnosticism is everywhere on the increase. Critical examination, instead of implicit belief, was the rule. Goethe spoke truth when he said, "With knowledge doubt increases." Reason takes the place occupied by faith. So far as society was to-day redeemed from the wrongs of the past, it was done by human means. The lecturer referred to several recent instances in which secular ideas had prevailed in public matters. He closed by appealing to the audience to exercise their reasoning faculties, and work for the establishment of the reign of thought and the power of intellectual grandeur, and took his seat amid loud and prolonged applause.

Death of Kersey Graves.

This well-known writer, we sincerely regret to learn, passed away on the 4th, at his home in Richmond, Ind. Though suffering from ill-health for several months, he did not regard his malady as likely to terminate fatally, and it was even considered unnecessary for his sons to return home. His wife and two daughters were with him at the end, which was peaceful and happy. A few hours before his death he said to his wife, "A wave of comfort passes over me." An hour before the end he said, "It is right."

Mr. Graves was born in Brownsville, Pa., in the year 1813, in the orthodox Quaker church, so to speak. His father went with the Hicksites in the split that divided the Quaker church, but his mother remained with the orthodox branch. With this branch Kersey Graves continued until "disowned" by his church for making his abolition sentiments public. His church approved of abolitionism, but its approval did not go to the extent of making it public by any of its members. Non-compliance with this part of the church disciplin was the cause of Kersey Graves's "disownment." His voice and pen did good work for the cause of abolitionism when it required courage to sound the one or to wield the other. And this has been the attitude of Kersey Graves in all great public crises. He was the friend of the poor slave, and the friend of the workingman. In a word, he was a loyalist to what was right; but not a loyalist to party simply as a party.

Kersey Graves's life-work was for the improvement of the race and the destruction of superstition. As teacher, as author, as speaker, as farmer, he strove to improve himself and to improve others. And he always felt that there was some way or other for the accomplishment of this end. As teacher he would hold for the highest culture; as author he essayed to found his belief upon the solid, indubitable facts of history and of nature. Upon this basic principle he wrought his works entitled, "Bible of Bibles," "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and "Sixteen Saviors or None," the last of which was written in reply to Mr. Perry's "Sixteen Saviors or One." These works are unanswerable protests against Christianity, and a thorough revelation of its worthlessness as a system of ethics. As a collector of facts, and as a deducer of reasons therefrom, Kersey Graves has won distinction. His works show the possession of the historical faculty in a high degree. It is recorded that a study of the science of phrenology shook his faith in the doctrins of the orthodox church.

He married Lydia Michener, a first cousin to Edwin M. Stanton, secretary of war under Abraham Lincoln, who still survives him. He was married in the Smyrna meeting-house, in Wayne Co., Ind. It was this church that disowned him for his public avowal of his antislavery sentiments. He lived for about twenty years in Harveysburg, Ohio, a noted stronghold of abolitionism, where he wrote his "Biography of Satan," the copyright of which he sold to his publisher.

He is the author of five works, some of which hav sold largely, extending in the aggregate to about twenty thousand copies. Besides, he contributed to a number of newspapers. He served as an associate editor on the Indianapolis Sun and also on the Globe. He published his views as to financial and other questions in a pamphlet entitled "Robbery by Law," and left unfinished a work he was getting ready for the press on the tariff question.

The Sun thus introduces to the public the loved ones of the deceased: "The family consists of four children—two sons and two daughters. The elder son, Benjamin, was graduated at Cornell University, and is engaged in business in New York. The younger son, Alonzo, is a telegraph operator at Ridgeville, Ind. He is a man of culture, and has, we believe, given two or three years to teaching. Elizabeth, the elder daughter, is at home. She attended college, and afterward engaged in teaching, as did also Elma, who has been teaching for the last two or three years. She will teach at Sevastopol, Wayne Co., Ind., the coming school term."

The remains of Mr. Graves were interred at Old Goshem Cemetery, near Middleboro', Wayne Co., Ind., at 2 o'clock P.M., on Thursday, the 6th inst.

Mr. Graves was a Spiritualist, but his life-work consisted not so much in demonstrating a continued existence as in helping the oppressed in this sphere, and in removing the mental shackles that bind so many of his fellow-men. He was more of an iconoclast than a builder, yet he destroyed without acrimony. He hated systems, not persons. In his death humanitarians hav lost an untiring worker, the laboring man an able friend, and Freethought a powerful ally. The sympathy of all who knew him will be extended to his bereaved family.

Silly Syllogisms.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The Rev. Thomas Mitchell has hatched out a brood of what he calls aphorisms and syllogisms. They are silly enough. See:

Persons exist; impersonality cannot create persons; therefore the Creator is a person.	Persons exist; a person cannot create impersonality; therefore God is impersonal.
A person has a locality; space has no locality; therefore space is not God.	A person has a locality; God has no locality; therefore God is nowhere.
A thing has a locality; God is something; therefore God has a locality.	A thing has a locality; God is no thing; therefore God has no locality.
All things in nature are effects; effects are less than their causes; therefore the ultimate cause was supernatural.	All things in nature are effects; effects are equal to their causes; therefore the first cause was equal to the effect.
The cause could not hav begun; this would hav made it an effect; therefore the cause was uncaused.	The cause must hav begun; otherwise there could hav been no effect; therefore God had a beginning.
Created minds cannot create the simplest thing in nature; therefore the cause was uncaused.	Created minds cannot create the simplest thing; therefore the first cause created itself.
Everything is a miracle of which nature is incapable; nature is incapable of making a living plant or animal; therefore the origin of living animals or plants was miraculous.	Everything is a miracle of which nature is capable; nature is capable of making a living plant or animal; therefore the origin of living animals or plants was natural.
There was a time before nature existed; a thing cannot act until it exists; therefore nature did not cause her own existence.	There was a time before time existed; a thing cannot act until it exists; therefore time did not cause its own existence.
Inorganic things move by necessity; that which moves by necessity had no power to commence its motion; therefore this power was supernatural.	Organic things move by necessity; that which moves by necessity had no power to commense its motion; therefore this power was necessity.
Each species has natural parents; the first pair of each species had no natural parents; therefore the first were creations.	Each jackass has natural parents; the first mule was the product of an unnatural parent; therefore the first mule was a recreation.
Each species preserves its own identity; no new species has ever come into existence; therefore the first pair of each species were created at the beginning of the world.	Each species of early geological time has lost its identity; it no longer exists; therefore each later species did not begin in the beginning.
Man is a being of mercy; a merciless being could not hav made one of mercy, because he would hav been better than himself; therefore God is merciful.	Man is a being of cruelty; a merciful being could not hav made one of cruelty, because he would hav been worse than himself; therefore God is cruel.

My advise to everybody who is inclined to make syllogisms is to repeat the last part of the Lord's Prayer, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one." W. H. B.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 14th.

Work All Together.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The conventions are about to culminate in the congress at Milwaukee. I hav participated in two of these, and am about to attend the third. The Michigan Convention of "Liberalists and Spiritualists"—so called—has had a short report in your columns, from the pen of the able secretary, Mr. McCracken. I, however, wish to add that while I greatly enjoyed certain phases of the meeting, there were certain other phases which annoyed me. For instance: I disliked the clinging to the old term "Spiritualists and Liberalists." It seems to me that the real, progressive organizations should classify themselvs as Liberal organizations, and not foster this antagonism between the two classes of Infidels called Materialists and Spiritualists. I am a Spiritualist, but I am opposed to excluding my brother Materialist from any platform upon which he will stand with us, for the purpose of making the world better.

I know the Radical Review takes the position that Materialists and Spiritualists cannot possible unite for work. But I am not satisfied that such is the case, when I find such Materialists as E. C. Walker, and such Spiritualists as Dr. Juliet Severance, and others whom I might name, fraternizing in the great League movement.

Your radical readers will be glad to learn that the Kansas State Convention avowed itself in favor of a perfectly free platform, for the presentation of any subject which the speaker desired to express himself upon; that, under this arrangement, a Christian minister held a debate, during one evening of the session, with C. W. Stewart, and was courteously listened to by the large audience assembled. Mr. Stewart replied to the gentleman very bravely and ably, and all felt that Liberalism had a very capable champion in him. The convention resulted in the organization of a state League, well officered, which will be represented in the coming congress at Milwaukee.

I am now on my way to speak at the state Spiritualist convention to be held at Omro, Wisconsin. This meeting, also, proposes to hav a free platform, and, though devoted to the elucidation of the Spiritual philosophy, I think I can safely say that no question will be ruled out. At the close of that meeting I shall go to the League congress, and parties wishing to arrange for lectures will please address me at once at Milwaukee, Wis.

Sept. 11, 283. MRS. H. S. LAKE.

Persecutions by Baptists.

When our religious contemporaries fall out they usually "giv away" some damaging facts about each other. The Baptist organ, the Examiner, recently asserted in behalf of that sect, that they never persecuted. To this astonishing claim the Independent retorts:

The Examiner insists upon harping on the strings of its theory that "(1) The Baptists never persecuted; (2) Baptists never advocated persecution nor defended persecution; (3) Baptists were the earliest and hav been the most consistent champions of complete religious liberty;" and upon charging our Puritan sires with intolerance. Professor Albert H. Newman has come to the rescue of the Examiner, and insists "that advocacy and practice of absolute freedom of conscience has been from the beginning not simply a constant characteristic of the Baptists, but a fundamental principle, without which the identity of the body could not be maintained." It is far from our thought to antagonize Baptist principles, or to rob our Baptist brethren of the honor that is due them; but we cannot permit the Examiner and Professor Newman, or any one else to heap reproaches upon our Puritan sires and the chiefs of the Reformation and their defenders, in order to glorify certain obscure men who were in more or less accord with the Baptist churches of our day.

It should be noted that the Examiner calls upon us to disprove the three points given above. The question is not whether all Baptists in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries persecuted, but whether any ever persecuted? It is not whether some Baptists advocated "soul liberty," but whether this has been a constant characteristic of the Baptists as such, and whether they were the earliest champions of religious liberty? We are astonished at the way in which the Examiner has made up its case. Its simplicity and boldness are charming; and the method of its advocacy by Prof. Newman is magnificent. "I assert," says the professor, "therefore, with the utmost confidence, that Baptists could never by any possibility hav persecuted; for any party that persecutes is, ipso facto, non-Baptist, anti-Baptist."

We understand the significance of thus begging the question in debate by this ingenious circle of reasoning. We ventured in our last issue to call the attention of the Examiner to John of Leiden and the astrocities committed by the Anabaptists at Munster. We are met by the objection: These persecuted, and therefore they were not Baptists. Baptists never persecute.

All historians recognize them as Anabaptists; but the Examiner reserves the right of picking out from the Anabaptists of the sixteenth century such men as suit its purpose, and building on them the theory of the denomination. But our friends are cutting the ground from beneath their own feet. They reduce the earlier Baptists to a mere handful; and with reference to these it may questioned whether they were not the forerunners of the Quakers rather than the Baptists; for if John Denck and the Mennonites were the representativs of Baptist principles in the sixteenth century, then our modern Baptists hav so erred from their faith as to become children that their parents would not recognize. The Anabaptists of the sixteenth century embraced diverse elements; but they were all actuated by a common impulse to abandon the historic church as antichristian and set up a new apostolic church of saints in its place They were not reformers, but were revolutionists. They differed in methods of bringing about the desired result.

The great majority of the Anabaptists of the sixteenth century were for immediate results by fire and sword. The movement in Saxony under Storck and Munzer was fanatical and bloodthirsty. Hans Hut in Southern Germany, taught that believers were to destroy the wicked and the magistrates with the sword. John of Leiden made Munster the Zion of the Anabaptist, and cruelly put to death all but "the saints." The more moderate men, such as Blaurock, Hubmaier, and Denck, could not restrain the radicals. They were compromised by them and suffered with them. The tragedy of Munster made a decided break in the Anabaptist ranks; and Menno Simons founded the sect of the Mennonites. But the radical element continued in David Joris; and in Henry Nicholas and others passed over into England.

It is an historic fact that the vast majority of the Anabaptists of the sixteenth century were persecutors, and had not the slightest conception of religious liberty. The other part held the doctrin of non-resistance to civil authority; but were no less intolerant in spirit and language than the others.

Turning our attention to England in the seventeenth century, we find the same diverse elements of Anabaptism as we hav found in the sixteenth century on the continent. The Radical party seems to hav prevailed among the Baptists of England during the commonwealth times. It is not sufficient for the Examiner to quote from the "Tracts on Liberty of Conscience and Persecution," selected and published by the Hanserd Knollys Society. These are only a few of a vast number of others that tell a different story. John Canne was the author of the "Necessity of Separation," published by that society; but he was also the author of "The Time of the End," which that society neglected to publish. No one will deny that John Canne was a leading Baptist preacher. But he was also a leader of the Fifth Monarch men who were constantly plotting to overthrow Cromwell, and introduce the kingdom of heaven on earth—that is, the rule of the church, as they understood it, over the state—and introduce the reign of the messiah by the sword. He was twice arrested by Cromwell's orders, once at Hull, and subsequently at the Fifth Monarchy headquarters in London. This book of Canne is introduced by Feake and Rogers, two other Fifth Monarchy men, and is full of abuse of Cromwell, and reference to armed rebellion against him.

It will hardly be denied that Major General Harrison, the chief of the Fifth Monarchy men, and Quarter-master General Courtney and Col. Overton, and other leaders, were prominent Baptists of the time. The Fifth Monarchy men held essentially the same position in England as the radical Anabaptists of the continent. Their favorit motto was, "Let the saints be joyful with glory, let them rejoice in their beds; let the praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hands, to be avenged of the heathen, and to rebuke the people; to bind their kings in chains, and their nobles with links of iron, that they may be avenged of them, as it is written, Such honor hav all his saints" (Ps. cxlix, v, 9). It is impossible to disprove the close connection of the British Baptists with the Fifth Monarchy men. We do not deny that a few Baptists opposed these disorders, but it should not be questioned that the drift of Baptist feeling was against the Protector Cromwell and in favor of revolution and bloodshed, and that for a religious and not a political purpose. If our contemporary will read Ivimey's "History of English Baptists," and Hanbury's "Historical Memorials," and other trustworthy historical documents, it will find abundant evidence that the "Baptists intermeddled with the civil affairs of the country." It will read:

> "The Baptists who were in opposition to Cromwell must hav been very uncomfortable during the remainder of his government, as he never suffered them to act up to the full extent of their principles. But those who acted peaceably and who were denominated the sober party, were much esteemed and universally protected."

Will our contemporary modify its statement so as to say the sober party "among the Baptists never persecuted," or will it now affirm that all Baptists are sober? A Baptist not sober is a non-Baptist; an anti-Baptist. Therefore, sobriety is a distinguishing characteristic of the Baptists. But the sobriety of our contemporary may well be questioned when it encourages even so scholarly a man as Prof. Newman to slander the Reformers in this fashion:

> "To pass from the controversial writings of Luther and Zwingli, to those of Hubmaier or Denck, is like passing from Billingsgate into the parlor of a Christian gentleman. There is here an absolute absence of the coarse ribaldry and disregard of truth and decency by which nearly every page of the former is disfigured."

Let the Examiner stop its railing if it wishes the public to believe that it is an advocate of "soul liberty," and giv us a definition of a sixteenth and a seventeenth century Baptist, that will sustain historical criticism.

Communications.

From Tyre to Cesarea

In the next verse of Acts we find a discrepancy in a proper name.

"And we sailed from Tyre, and arrived at the city of Acco; and we saluted the brethren there and stopped with them one day" (xxi, 7).

Accho was the original name of the place, and Akka or Acre is its name now. But during the Macedonian and Roman periods it was called Ptolemais, and so it is named in the Greek codices. The Syrian scribe seems to hav preferred the ancient name.

"And the next day we departed and came to Cesarea."

Strato's Tower, a decayed city, was rebuilt by Herod the Great 22–12 B.C., and called Cesarea. It is possible that Paul passed through the place between those years, but rather doubtful whether he knew it as Cesarea; but a later writer would be likely to use the new name.

"And we went and put up at the house of Philip, the evangelist, who was one of the seven."

That is, one of the seven deacons mentioned in Acts vi, 5, namely, Stephen, Philip, Procherus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas. The last named is called an Antiochian proselyte; all the rest of course were Jews; and they were all elected deacons before the gospel began to be preached to the Arameans or gentiles.

But just here there is a muddle about the identity of this Philip which we are unable to clear up. The writer of Acts says:

"He had four virgin daughters who were prophetesses."

Now Eusebius tells us that Polycritus, who was bishop of the church of Ephesus, wrote to Victor, bishop of Rome (A.D. 190–202), concerning John and Philip, saying:

"For in Asia, also, mighty luminaries hav fallen asleep, . . . Philip, one of the twelve apostles, who sleeps at Hieropolis [in Phrygia], and his two aged virgin daughters. Another of his daughters, who lived in the Holy Spirit, rests at Ephesus" (Eccl. Hist. iii, 31).

Again, in a disputation between Caius, bishop of Rome (A.D. 283–296), and Proclus, the former is quoted by Eusebius as saying:

"After this there were four prophetesses, the daughters of Philip of Hieropolis in Asia, whose tomb, and that of their father, are to be seen there" (Ibid).

And Eusebius adds:

"Such is his (Caius's) statement. But Luke, in the Acts of the Apostles, mentions the daughters of Philip tarrying at Cesarea of Judea, and as endued with the gift of prophecy" (Ibid).

Now let us parallel the three testimonies about Philip, the deacon, evangelist, or apostle.

The writer of Acts says that Philip, the evangelist and deacon, was living at Cesarea with four virgin daughters who were prophetesses.	Polycrates says that Philip, one of the twelve apostles, with two aged virgin daughters, sleeps at Hierapolis, and another daughter rests at Ephesus.	Caius says that the tombs of Philip and his four daughters, who were prophetesses, are to be seen at Hieropolis in Asia.

The questions that need to be settled are:

1. Was Philip of Cesarea an evangelist and deacon, or was he one of the twelve apostles?
2. Was he buried at Hieropolis with two or four aged virgin daughters?
3. Was another daughter buried at Ephesus?
4. If only two daughters were buried at Hieropolis, and one at Ephesus, where was the fourth one buried?
5. Was this the same evangelist (not the apostle) who baptized Simon Magus in Samaria, and the Ethiopian in Judea? (Acts viii, 13, 38).
6. Is it true that all or any of his daughters were old maids? Clement of Alexandria, citing the example of the apostles, says, "Peter and Philip begat children; and Philip gave his daughters to men in marriage" (Misc. iii, 6; Eus. Eccl. Hist. iii, 30).

And now to aggravate these uncertainties Eusebius further says:

"That the apostle Philip continued at Hierapolis, with his daughters, has been already stated above. But we must now show how Papias, coming to them, received a wonderful account from the daughters of Philip. For he writes that in his time there was one raised from the dead" (iii, 39).

Papias of Hierapolis is believed to hav died about A.D. 165, at an advanced age. He was therefore probably born in the first century. Now mark it is Eusebius who says that Papias received a wonderful account from the daughters of the apostle Philip, which wonderful account was that in Papias's time "there was one [daughter?] raised from the dead." Surely if Philip lived till A.D. 60, or later, Papias must hav known his aged daughters; but it does not so appear, though Eusebius may hav thought so. The most plausible inference is that one of Philip's daughters appeared to Papias just as Jesus appeared to Paul, and that they were all dead before Papias was born.

But leaving these questions about Philip and his daughters unsettled, we come to what occurred at Cesarea.

"And as we were there many days, a certain prophet came down from Judea whose name was Agabus" (xxi, 10).

This same Agabus, the prophet of Jerusalem, who foretold a famin some sixteen years before, according to the marginal chronology of Acts, is now introduced as if for the first time. Did the compiler of the book forget about Agabus's first appearance, or was that an interpolation by a later scribe?

"And he came in to us, and took the girdle of Paul's loins, and bound his own feet and hands, and said: Thus saith the Holy Spirit, So will the Jews in Jerusalem bind the man who owns this girdle, and they will deliver him into the hands of the gentiles. And when we heard these words, we and the residents of the place begged of him that he would not go to Jerusalem. Then Paul answered and said: What do ye, weeping and crushing my heart? For I am prepared, not only to be bound, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the name of our Lord Jesus Messiah. And as he was not to be persuaded by us, we desisted; and we said, Let the pleasure of our Lord take place" (11–14).

Paul seemed as determined to die at Jerusalem as Ignatius (A.D. 115) was to die at Rome. But neither of them was gratified as to the place of martyrdom.

FROM CESAREA TO JERUSALEM.

In spite of the repeated warnings by the Holy Spirit not to go to Jerusalem—first through the mediumship of the disciples at Tyre, and again through the prophet Agabus at Cesarea, seconded not only by the evangelist Philip and his daughters, but by Paul's own companions—he continued his journey up to the holy city.

"And some disciples of Cesarea went along with us, taking with them a brother from among the earlier disciples, whose name was Mnason, and who was from Cyprus, that he might entertain us at his house" (xxi, 16).

The Vulgate has Jason, and it is quite possible that that was his other name, just as Barnabas's original name was Joseph (iv, 36); and as they were both Cyprians it is probable that Joseph Barnabas knew Jason M.Nason.

Information Picked Up Afoot.

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Since last writing you, I hav been taking a pedestrian tour through the Eastern counties, Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk, walking fifteen to twenty miles a day, avoiding the large towns and keeping more amongst the villages, stopping here and there for rest and refreshment, and picking up at each place sundry scraps of information that I could hav obtained in no other way. I generally made it a point to look into the churches, and ask questions about the spiritual welfare of each place. As a rule, I found the clergy are not held in much honor; the rectors being a lazy lot, pocketing the tithes and living like fighting-cocks, paying curates about £100 per annum to do the work, if work it can be called. In many cases, however, these latter individuals are spoken of very well, as being conscientious men, going about their parishes, occasionally some miles in extent, visiting the sick, and helping the poorer members of the flock as far as their small means will allow.

Many of these village churches are large enough to contain within their walls double or treble the population of the place, though what the object was in building such large places the inhabitants were unable to say. In some instances, no doubt, at the date the edifice was reared the population was larger, but through the action of those high and mighty individuals, the lords of the manor, much land, formerly tilled and applied to a useful purpose, has been thrown out of cultivation and turned into parks and game preserves, thereby throwing many of the inhabitants out of the means of gaining a livelihood, and compelling them to migrate to the towns. All such cases of depredation were backed up by the parsons, and the rustics are waking up to the fact of how they hav been despoiled by the drones of society, and when the time comes will not hesitate to pay back the long-incurred debt. The rectors think so little of their churches and flocks that in many places the former are literally tumbling to pieces. I saw one large church where the tiles constituting the floor were all broken up, making it dangerous to walk along the aisles, and the wooden pews were all mildewed and rotting away in consequence of the rain on a wet day dripping from the roof, so that the worshipers who went there on such occasions would hav to sit with their umbrellas over them or suffer the consequences. The parson's income was pretty considerable, but he did not see the force of fooling any of it away in repairs, and so he got his deputy to whip round the county to solicit subscriptions to put the concern right again.

The Dissenters are not held in much greater esteem than the church party. In one of the chapels I was told of two worthy members, both of them preachers, one of whom was a horse dealer, and at one time had to make a composition with his creditors, which, with the assistance of his friend, he managed very well, and was enabled to start in life again, doubtless assisted pecuniarily "from on high." A scoffer once asked him if, being a Christian, he was an exception to the rule that horse-dealers always swear? His reply was that swearing was quite necessary in his business, and the Lord would look upon it in that light, as he did not, as a rule, use profane language on Sundays. One shining light was pointed out to me who never missed going to church on Sunday, but got regularly drunk every other night in the week.

I witnessed the performance of a branch of the Salvation Army at a small town in Suffolk, led by a female lieutenant, a well favored, but sly looking young woman, who, I was told, was pretty well known there, and did not err too much on the side of chastity. She spoke to the audience in a sanctimonious manner with her eyes modestly cast down to suit the occasion, conversing pleasantly about the devil and hell and such like matters, as is the custom with this very peculiar people. I saw the wife of one of the male speakers trying to induce him to come home with her, but he refused in a brutish manner, expressing his fixed intention of going with the other saved souls to a night meeting at their hall; perhaps he was sweet on the lieutenant.

A woman who kept a little way-side inn was very indignant with her parson, because he wanted her to pay a fee for being churched. She said she had undergone the operation ten times free of cost, and she did not intend establishing a bad precedent with the eleventh child; and as the parson wouldn't giv in the good woman went without the churching. I asked her if the omission of this most important ceremony had in any way affected her health, and she laughed and said as far as she knew she felt just as well without it as with it, and in the event of another addition to her family she wouldn't hav it done, even for nothing.

I rather regret I did not make a note of all I heard, but trusted to my memory, and having heard so much hav got it a good deal mixed in my mind, but shall remember a few of the tales by and by, when they hav settled down a bit. The first day or two I did jot a few down, but as I did it while walking along, could not make head or tail of the words when I came to look at them at night; so concluded to do it at the end of each day, but was generally too sleepy, and put it off till to-morrow, which did not happen to arrive.

Being away during the Bradlaugh demonstration, I was unable to attend the meeting, which, from what I hear, was a grand success as far as numbers and voting went, but whether the desired effect will be secured remains to be seen. The governing powers, as a rule, do not take much notice of a peaceable gathering; they seem to think people are not in earnest unless there is a riot—and windows and heads get broken—then, and only then, are they willing to come to terms.

Booth, it appears, has compromised matters and has opened the "Eagle" as a public-house. I presume he will sell his liquors at about the same prices as other publicans, and adulterate them in the same manner. He hasn't said yet what he intends doing with the profits; perhaps he will swear there are none—just as likely as not. Yours fraternally,

London, Aug. 20, 1883. J. D.

Three Falsehoods Charged on the "Index."

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The following appears in the Index of August 30th:

"Indeed, the junior editor of the Index has, during the past few weeks, received a number of letters from the secretary of the New York Freethinkers' Association, urging him to address the Rochester Convention this month, once at least, offering him a choice of sessions, and requesting him to reply to a Christian minister who had consented to speak at the convention in defense of his faith, and who, it is now announced, is to be answered by the president of the National Liberal League."

Further on in the same editorial article we read:

"Our objection to the New York Freethinkers' Association, as we before stated, is that it permitted itself, by the sharp practice and adroit management of a few individuals, to become an auxiliary organization which has excluded from membership good men like Judge Hurlburt, George William Curtis, F. E. Abbot, R. G. Ingersoll, and R. C. Spencer."

The above quotations contain at least three falsehoods.

1. The secretary of the Freethinkers' Association never invited the junior editor of the Index to reply to a Christian minister who had consented to speak at the Freethinkers' convention.

2. No "few individuals," or any one else, "by sharp practice or otherwise," since its first organization, hav changed the Freethinkers' Association to an auxiliary Liberal League.

3. George William Curtis never was excluded from the National Liberal League or from the Freethinkers' Association, and the Index has no right to use his name in any such manner.

Now for a few facts. In the last number of the Freethinkers' Magazine I published a page advertisment for the Index for which the Index paid me $7.00 cash.

There were a number of letters passed between Mr. B. F. Underwood and the writer in relation to that advertisment. In one of my first letters I invited Mr. Underwood to attend and speak before the association, to which he replied under date of June 13th: "In regard to other matters mentioned in your letter I cannot find time to write now, but may in a day or two." In that or one of my following letters I said to him that I would set him down to speak on some day that would accommodate him. In a letter I wrote him about the advertisment I said that Mr. Mitchell had consented to speak before our convention, and that I was in hopes I could get Mr. Wakeman or himself to reply to Mr. Mitchell. But this was written after I had requested Mr. Wakeman to reply and before I had heard from Mr. Wakeman. But I did not directly or indirectly invite Mr. Underwood to reply to Mr. Mitchell, and only complimented Mr. Underwood in this way to influence him to attend at Rochester. If any letter I wrote Mr. Underwood is not in accord with this statement, Mr. Underwood is at liberty to publish it, and I request that he do so. Mr. Underwood finally replied to my invitation to speak at Rochester in these words, that left me in doubt whether he would attend or not: "I do not think I shall attend the Rochester Convention. As you may know, I am troubled every year, from middle of August till November, with hay fever, and some years it quite unfits me for public speaking." But in this nor any other letter which he wrote me did he mention a word in relation to Mr. Mitchell or his replying to him. That was all there was of that matter.

Now as to the Freethinkers' convention being turned into an auxiliary Liberal League.

The "articles of association" of this association were drawn up by me before the Wolcott Convention, the place where the association was organized. Before the convention met I mailed these "articles" to Francis E. Abbot and requested him to make such alterations as he thought best. And he inserted the following words:

"2d. To act as an auxiliary to the National Liberal League in its efforts to accomplish the total separation of the church and state, and to organize local Liberal Leagues in the state of New York in accordance with the provision of the Constitution of the National Liberal League."

I then and there changed the other portions of the articles so that they would accord with the change Mr. Abbot had made, and they were thus adopted. Since then no change has been made in these articles excepting that the association has been changed from "The Central and Western New York Association" to "The New York State Association." So that the person who is responsible more than any one else for making the association an auxiliary Liberal League is F. E. Abbot, one of the persons whom the Index says is excluded by reason of the association being an auxiliary Liberal League.

As to excluding Mr. Curtis, there is no evidence that he was ever favorable to the Liberal League organization, and his name was evidently dragged into the Index for effect.

For myself, I must say that I hav always been very desirous to see all branches of the Liberal party working together for the cause of Freethought, and I hav been in favor of sacrificing most everything to bring about so desirable a result. What a work we could do if the Free Religionists, the Spiritualists, the Materialists, could all stand shoulder to shoulder in this great conflict! And in my zeal I hav often been more conciliatory than many of my friends hav thought was right, and for this I hav been often blamed. I attack no one, and will hav no unfriendly controversy with Freethinkers, and I never would hav noticed this article if it had not stated so many falsehoods, one of which placed me in a very unfavorable position.

Mr. Underwood is an able advocate of Freethought, and it is greatly to be regretted that his disposition is such that he is inclined so often to attack his own friends in place of the common enemy. He took especial pains last week to strike a blow at the Freethinkers' Association, by stating these three falsehoods and sending the paper to the Rochester journals, where they would be published to the detriment of the convention. I am now convinced that he is beneath the notice of any respectable person, and that for myself I shall never again invite him to any convention nor ever again communicate with him in any manner or hav anything more to do with him. And no falsehood or statement he can make relating to myself will influence me to refer to him through the press again. I hav always treated him with the greatest respect, but he seems to be destitute of those qualifications necessary to appreciate good treatment. So I bid him an everlasting good-bye.

H. L. GREEN.

Predictions.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A writer in your pages, signing "Holt," has given us some quaint lines from some source, dating possibly back to 1789. He quotes two lines as singularly verified in the discovery of the phonograph and telephone, and he quotes other two lines as having no sense to us. These latter are:

"The commonest of stone or stick
Other shall be than long, broad, thick."

Now, these lines hav a direct reference to the "space of four dimensions" theory, receiving to-day the highest scientific attention. The lines may be a fraud; but "Holt" would do us a great service if he would send to you all the lines, and tell us all he knows about them.

A TRUTH SEEKER.

Another Crime Laid at Christianity's Door.

In despatches from Buffalo, N. Y., of the 2d inst., a horrible outrage is made public which must shake the confidence of many in the prevailing religion of the country. It is by no means an isolated case. Such occurrences are but too frequent. It will not do to say the man was crazy, and dismiss the subject. The church cannot thus easily escape. It is Christianity that made the man crazy. And, as in some states the rumseller is held responsible for the damage his victims may do, so will intelligent public opinion hold the cause of this man's insanity responsible for his crime. This is the sad story:

"Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 2, 1883.—Sylvester Knott, a well-to-do farmer living in a comparativly isolated spot on the banks of Lake Erie, near the city of Erie, has become a religious fanatic. Some months ago he attended a meeting of the Salvation Army at Franklin, where the first seeds of insanity were sown. Since then his brain has by degrees grown more and more inflamed, and now his frenzy knows no check. For two weeks past he has wandered up and down the lake shore declaiming on salvation schemes, picturing the horrors of judgment day, and calling upon sinners to worship God or be eternally lost. Yesterday morning he planted a large cross in the woods, upon which to nail his eight-year-old son, believing the boy would be tormented in hell fire forever unless he died the death of mankind's redeemer. With strength well nigh superhuman, Knott hell the lad firmly while driving a large nail through the little fellow's hand, unheeding his piteous pleas for mercy. The dreadful work was interrupted by some wood cutters, who chanced to be passing. Leaving his son hanging, the maniac fled, first striking down one of the rescuers with a hammer, then leaping into the lake. A search for his hiding-place proved fruitless, and it was thought he had been drowned, but such was not the case. Before midnight the crazy fiend returned, smashed the door of his house, and knocked Mrs. Knott insensible at a single blow. Entering a chamber in which his only daughter, Minnie, a beautiful girl of seventeen, lay sleeping, he bound her hand and foot and carried her to a lonely place in the forest, where hundreds of cords of wood were piled. An altar was quickly built, and upon it the madman secured his child. 'Even as Abraham did with Isaac, will I offer you as a burnt offering unto the Lord,' chanted the maniac, setting the funeral pyre on fire. The climbing flames soon licked the exposed limbs of the girl, whose shrieks of agony and prayers for a more merciful death were music to the madman's ears. He implored the Almighty to accept the sacrifice as atonement for the sinful deeds committed by him in years long gone, and added fresh fuel to the altar. But help arrived in time to prevent the consummation of the fearful design. Two young men crossing the woods, on their way home from a party, saw a bright light and heard the young lady's screams. One felled the demented sire, while his companion scattered the blazing fagots and lifted the almost nude maiden from her fiery bed. Miss Knott is painfully burnt about the lower extremities, and there are large blisters on her shoulders, arms, and sides. So awful was her experience that the doors of an asylum may open to admit the daughter as well as the father. She raves night and day, and it is feared her reason is permanently dethroned."

The Brooklyn Eagle, though scarcely bold enough to place the guilt where it belongs, talks very strongly upon the subject. In its issue of the 4th, it says:

"Since the 2d of May, 1879, when Charles F. Freeman, who has been recently discharged as cured from an insane asylum, murdered his five-year-old daughter, Edith, at Pocasset, in alleged obedience to a divine command, we do not remember to hav read anything so horrible in the shape of religious intelligence as the attempt of Sylvester Knott, a well-to-do farmer and a recent convert of the Salvation Army, to crucify his son and burn his daughter alive.

"Charles Freeman, of Pocasset, was a Second Adventist. He saw visions and dreamed 'dreams' of the judge descending through the riven skies, and, moreover, heard a voice, real as his insane fanaticism, bidding him slay his innocent child of five in the presence of her mother, who consented to the sacrifice. She was to rise again in three days, 'according to the scriptures,' as he assured his wife when he plunged a butcher's knife into the side of the sleeping innocent and spread her body on the table, which he called the altar of sacrifice. 'Without shedding of blood is no remission of sins,' argued this 'Christian,' or Second Adventist, and that blood must be the dearest upon earth, as Christ the Lamb's blood was to the angry Father.

"It may be answered that we are very unjust in attributing the fanaticism and insane crimes of Sylvester Knott and Charles Freeman to these harmless lunatics who only march and sing and shout to the disturbance of the public peace, the annoyance of private citizens, and the ruin of the neighborhoods which they depopulate by their nuisances. But the simple question is: What drove these murderers mad but the horrible dogmas of the Salvation Army and the Second Adventists? It is no answer to say there must hav been a predisposition to insanity, so long as it is this superstition which called it into action. But if there were no such predisposition any human being who can so far lose his reason as to believe this hell and sacrifice delusion is not safe from paroxysms of insanity dangerous to the lives of others.

"This is a negativ and comparativly harmless stage of the disease, such as was produced by Mr. Moody, who filled the lunatic asylums of England and Scotland on his first visit, so that the magistrates and keepers used to say, despairingly, 'Here is another Moody and Sankey case!' Hysteria and nervous apprehension rather than violence characterized most of these cases. The sect in England which has been partially suppressed by the conviction of one of them for manslaughter, in refusing to giv food and medicin to his child for fear of thwarting the Lord's will concerning it, may be classed also among the negativ religious lunatics.

"But there is no limit to the mental perversion which the theology in question is capable of producing. It will make one victim despondent and another violent. It will set one woman to weeping and another to tearing her hair. It will transform one man into an ass and another into a tiger thirsting for blood. One convert will keep the neighborhood awake by singing and praying all night on the strength of such a text as 'Watch, therefore, for ye know not the hour when the Son of Man cometh,' and another will show his love to God by murdering a beloved son in supposed imitation of the sacrifice of Christ and in imaginary obedience to a divine command. It will put in one man's eyes the vacant stare of imbecility, in another's the fiery light of homicidal madness. One victim will quietly make his exit from a life in which he cannot sleep or work for fear of hell; another will sharpen the sacrificial knife that he may 'giv his first born for his transgression, the fruit of his body for the sin of his soul.'"

Freethought in Sydney, New South Wales.

Robert White, in National Reformer.

Freethinkers hav been very activ in Sydney during the last twelve months, and there has been a great increase in their number during that time. This increase is largely due to the work of William Denton, the eminent scientific and Freethought lecturer. He visited us twice in a short space of time, and on each occasion the largest hall in Sydney was crowded for his lecture. He delivered four or five lectures a week on geology and kindred sciences, and the last time he was with us he gave Freethought lectures each Sunday evening. Mr. Denton is certainly the best speaker that has yet appeared in Sydney. He had no chairman. He always commenced his lectures without any introductory remarks. He dove right into the heart of his subject at once, and with his piled up facts, beauty of illustration, convincing theories, broad generalizations, and his powerful eloquence, fairly took the audience by storm. He will long be admiringly and affectionately remembered in Sydney. At present he is making a tour of Northern Queensland.

Mrs. Watson, an American Spiritualist lecturer, has lectured in Victoria Hall to large audiences each Sunday evening during her stay. Spiritualism was the theme of her discourses, and she caused a great interest to be taken in its principles and phenomena.

Mr. Charles Bright returned, his health completely restored by his tour through America, where his lectures hav been very successful, and where he had the pleasure of meeting Ingersoll, and many other Freethought worthies. Since his return his lectures hav been so successful that the clergy are afraid we shall soon become a Freethought colony if something is not done. So, after divers consultations, it was resolved to utterly confute the Infidel in argument, as it would be unwise in the present time and place to burn his body.

The Rev. Mr. Spicer eagerly volunteered to do this agreeable work. He met Mr. Bright on the platform of the Protestant Hall, in a set debate, which occupied two nights. The champion of Christianity rushed into the arena with science as his sword, the Bible as his shield, and public opinion as his helmet. The first night his sword was broken, his shield abandoned, and his helmet became so heavy it almost crushed him to earth. On the second night he refused to fight at all, having neither weapons of offense nor defense. He persisted in taking the audience, Mr. Bright, and the chairman to Egypt to behold how the truth of the Bible was demonstrated in that ancient land. But, strange to say, all that the audience, Mr. Bright, and the chairman could see was bomb-shells and cannon balls crashing into the houses and public buildings of Alexandria.

Mr. Spicer began the debate by attacking the character of Professor Denton, and ended it by slandering Annie Besant and Charles Bradlaugh, but the audience in each instance resented it by drowning the voice of Mr. Spicer with cries of shame and groans. Mr. Bright conducted his part of the debate in a very able and judicious manner. His speeches were courteous, clear, forcible, and to the point. The subject was, "Science and Genesis do not Agree." The Hon. Mr. J. Reid, minister for public instruction, was chairman. After all the expenses were met, Mr. Bright received a little over £80 as his share of the contest. He intends to giv it to the Liberal Association of New South Wales as the nucleus of a fund to provide for the better accommodation of Liberals.

The annual meeting of the Liberal Association was held in the City Hall, on May 30th. There was a good attendance of members, who number between three and four hundred. At this meeting a president, six vice-presidents, twelve members of committee, and a corresponding secretary were elected, three ladies being elected on the committee, and one to a vice-presidency, who, I believe, will attend and be useful.

The friends of the late Mr. Tyerman are making an effort to erect some kind of monument to him. If anyone ever deserved an outward mark of remembrance for able, disinterested, and conscientious work, certainly John Tyerman did. It is to be hoped this effort will be successful.

We are now having a beautiful winter. We had a splendid season last summer, there being plenty of rain, abundance of fruit, and produce of all kind.

TALMAGE has returned from his lecturing trip, and this is one of the tales he brings: "Wonders of self-sacrifice! A clergyman told me in the Northwest a few weeks ago that for six years he was a missionary at the extreme North, living 400 miles from a post-office, and sometimes he slept out of doors in winter, the thermometer 60 and 65 degrees below zero, wrapped in rabbit-skins woven together. I said: "Is it possible? You do not mean 60 and 65 degrees below zero?" He said: "I do, and I was happy. All for Christ." A man who can tell a lie like that deserves a front seat in the kingdom of liars. Giv him a crown!

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

MRS. MARY W. BENNETT, - - - Proprietor.

CONDUCTED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $2.50 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing seven hundred square inches more reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make al Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to MARY W. BENNETT.

SATURDAY, - - - SEPTEMBER 22, 1883.

A Fatal Admission.

Bewailing the loose morals and tendency to indulge in vicious pleasures so common among the youth of our large cities, the official organ of the Methodist church cites several cases of premature wickedness that has come to its notice, and says:

"The conclusion is painfully forced upon us that both law and religion are failing to stem the destructiv tides of vice and crime which threaten to engulf our cities."

It has been contended by the advocates of Christianity that, if for no other reason, the churches should be sustained for the beneficent moral influence they exercise. They hav been alluded to as social policemen, and the minister is quoted as the club held over evil doers' heads. Great stress has been laid upon this point, and when driven from one position to another Christians hav fallen back upon this as a dernier resort. In fact, at the present time this is about their sole argument—their only remaining fortress. That this fortress has been used principally to protect the persons propagating the most immoral dogmas, and slandering their opponents in a most immoral manner, does not detract, in the opinion of good church-members, from the force of the argument.

But now we hav the admission of the official organ of the largest Protestant sect in this country, that religion has failed as a policeman; that the churches cannot make good their claim to be considered a breakwater against which the tides of vice impotently dash; that the ministerial club is no longer feared —indeed the ministers themselvs hav been the first and most numerous party to laugh at its threatenings. What excuse, therefore, can the church giv for its continued existence? Hell is not believed in to any large extent by the majority of the world's people, and its commercial value to the churches is almost nothing; heaven's rewards are too unsubstantial to attract the attention and money of the masses, and they will now ask why they should continue to support the church if it is of no benefit to society. Alas for the preachers! there is no reason, and the church must go!

What the people want is a common-sense system of ethics—a system with rewards and punishments adequate to their virtues and crimes, and not one in which an inconsequential act is recompensed with infinit joy or chastised with infinit woe. Statute law cannot properly take cognizance of immorality that does not show itself to be acting against the interests of society. It cannot restrain corrupt thoughts, forbid associations that easily degenerate into calamity, nor perform the thousand and one functions necessary to make honest men and virtuous women. Law, in short, is only the brutal constable, not the winning teacher.

What, then, is there to guide the youth? Probably nine-tenths of the pious people will shout all at once, Religion! But here we hav the positiv conclusion of the Methodist church that religion has failed in this work. And this conclusion was formed long ago by impartial statisticians, and has been proclaimed time and again by the Liberal journals. Not only has religion failed to prevent crime, but it has been a positiv incentiv to commit it. Who can read of the crucifixion of sons and the burnt offerings of daughters without feeling an intense hatred of the religion that inspired infuriate fanatics in their cruel work? The accounts of the lapse from virtue of the most religious people are thick as falling leaves. Ministerial sins in this country alone are sufficient to form a volume. Robbery, murder—all the crimes in the long calendar of misdeeds—hav been perpetrated and defended by the church as a body and by Christians as individuals. There can be no possible doubt of the correctness of the conclusion that religion fails to stem the destructiv tides of vice and crime which engulf our Christian cities.

What then will do it? We answer, Secularism, as taught by the Utilitarian Freethinkers of the old and new worlds. The church's failure is apparent to all. Catholicism is notorious for the stupid ignorance and malicious rascality of its followers. Protestantism is more intelligent, but no more enlightened, and blunders as badly as Catholicism in dealing with social problems such as the Advocate confesses its inability to master. So far as ethics are involved, Buddhism is infinitly superior to Christianity. What Christian countries are there where dwellers may leave their dwellings unlocked and their stores unattended? Japan, with its "heathenish" Taoism, is unable to embrace Christianity because of Christian licentiousness and dishonesty. Mohammedanism, with all its cruel similarity to Christianity, restrains from drunkenness—the sin so vigorously condemned by the Advocate—while the Bible givs aid and comfort by precept and example to the wine-bibber and consumer of strong drink. All religious incentivs to a good life fail because of changing base and arbitrary dicta. Religions are like statute law—what is legal and "right" in one age is regarded as illegal and wrong in another. Sinai's thunder against stealing and otherwise disregarding our neighbor's inherent and natural rights was but an echo. Morality did not begin with Moses any more than with Menu. Forced goodness is of no lasting avail. Moral philosophy must hav a secure and stable starting point. This is found in Utilitarianism, the doctrin of measuring by its utility every act performed. Utility is usefulness. If an act is useful for our own and others' happiness it must be right, since pleasure and pain, in their broadest sense, are the real standards by which the world unconsciously measures actions. This philosophy forbids persecution, since that injures others. It forbids abuse of self, in any manner, since that injures self. Religion, on the other hand, invites its adherents to persecute, for if a man's eternal pain or pleasure depends on a mere belief, it is a small matter that he should be tortured for a brief period in order to secure the eternal pleasure. Indeed it would be the duty of a sincere Christian to force conviction where it did not exist. It also invites abuse of self, for the flesh, being supposed to be rebellious and corrupt, must be subdued. It is not only the individual but the general happiness which the Utilitarian must keep in mind, and the rendering of happiness to others is the surest way of gaining it individually. This is the motiv which should be the mainspring of all moral philosophies, not the selfish seeking of heaven, with a faint hope that others may get it by believing in a narrow little scheme.

We would commend the study of this philosophy to the official organ of the Methodist church, and ask that paper to use its influence to get it taught in Sunday school, with a view to its practical application to the lives of young men and women whom religion has failed to lead in the strait path. The training of youth is a very important matter. Christianity has confessedly failed. Some other system must be tried, and what so sure as that which has the sanction of science and takes for its base the happiness of all, to be gained by education in right modes of thinking and acting?

Freethought and Socialism.

Over the initial "W." (E. C. Walker) in Lucifer we notice the following gentle criticism of a portion of our remarks on the "Limitations of Freethinking:"

"THE TRUTH SEEKER, in the course of an otherwise fair and very able editorial in reply to an article in the North American Review on 'The Limitations of Freethought,' makes this partly true and partly incorrect statement: 'Communism and Freethought are growths from the same root of doubt, and restlessness, and dissatisfaction with a condition of civilization that givs one man all meat and another all bone, one heaven and another hell, but they hav nothing else in common.' If Freethought has 'nothing else in common' with Communism, then Freethought has no fellowship with our common school and postal systems, for these are as Communistic as it is possible for them to be in a country where all property is not held in common. We believe that a logical application of the principles of Freethought will supplant them with something much better, but we are not yet prepared to go so far as THE TRUTH SEEKER and say that they hav nothing in common with Freethought as they are at this time.

"THE TRUTH SEEKER continues: 'As another matter of fact, very few Communists are Freethinkers, and very few Freethinkers are Communists. The only ones who might use the motto he (Mr. Phelan) has put into the mouths of all Infidels, Fiat libertas, ruat imperium (freely translated, Let liberty liv though governments fall) are the Anarchists, and as a still further matter of fact, they are not a Freethinking class.' As a matter of fact, a very large proportion of Communists, outside of a few semi-religious societies, are Freethinkers; and as another matter of fact, a still larger proportion of Anarchists are the most pronounced type of Freethinkers. We certainly can say Amen to the sentiment that it is better that all governments should perish than that they should liv and strangle liberty in their deadly folds. Or does friend Macdonald prefer to hav a government in place of liberty?"

We did not intend to cast even the shadow of a slur upon either the Communists or Anarchists, but simply stated as a matter of fact that came under our personal observation. We hav attended a large number of Socialistic meetings, and found that, with the exception of about half a dozen, both audience and speakers were more or less Christian. They certainly believe in the divinity of Christ, whose Communistic sentiments, and Paul's idea of all things in common, were quoted as final authority. In fact, the Communism of most was based on early Christianity.

As to the Anarchists, their only representativ in this country is Tucker's Liberty—one of the sharpest, brightest little papers published in this country—but while the editor is himself a Freethinker, we hav failed to see much evidence of Freethought among his contributors.

On the other hand, we hav the pleasure of knowing a great many sterling Infidels, and if they believe in Communism or anarchy they hav kept their sentiments very closely veiled.

As to the choice between liberty and government, the two cannot be put in opposition, for no true liberty can exist that has not government. Mr. Walker should not confound liberty and anarchy. The words are not by any means synonymous, neither are the states of society they indicate. Liberty is well-ordered service to humanity; anarchy is a confused service of self.

Petty but Malignant Persecution.

It is well known that the government of Russia is a Christian barbarism, but few thought it would descend to so spiteful a piece of persecution as the circular just issued by Count Tolstoi orders. This decision, which goes into effect at once, is that no Christian shall work for a Jew. The circular has already been sent to the governors of provinces and to police authorities, with instructions to enforce its provisions and punish any evasion or infraction. The spirit actuating the passage of the iniquitous law is seen in this statement:

"The employment of Christians by Jews is proved on the one hand to be opposed to the national spirit of the Russians; and, on the other hand, a lengthy intercourse between Christian employees and Jewish employers is found to be subversiv of the religious feelings of the workmen, who become indifferent to religious ceremonials, and are even found to absent themselvs from church on saints' days and festivals."

It is amazing that Christian intolerance can go so far as to seek to ruin not only religious opponents, but the poor of its own sect. This edict means the closing of hundreds of large shops whose owners are Jews, and throwing out of employment thousands of artisans who are Christians. The czar, who is the head of the church, ought to at least provide for these men if it takes the bread from their mouths, or he but adds a large force to the dangerous classes now rending his distracted empire in twain. It is not to be supposed that any feeling of humanity rests in his breast, but common political sagacity would hav dictated a different course. As for Jewish capitalists, they can without doubt take care of themselvs, though the edict is in effect a legal stealing of their shops and manufactories. For this, the Jewish World says, "the Russian people will hav to pay some millions of roubles to the foreign creditors, to say nothing of the actual loss incurred in the country itself."

Nothing more ridiculous and tyrannical than this edict has been given to the world since the church arrested the early printers for being in league with the devil. Not only is Russia disgracing Europe by her acts of cruelty, but she is making herself a laughing-stock among nations. The nineteenth century is not the time to persecute in this wholesale manner and commit highway robbery upon a whole people. Each act of this kind sets back the civilization of the world, and the voice of all peoples should be heard in ringing tones protesting against the outrage.

Christian Treachery.

Had Stephen Girard supposed that his wishes in respect to ministers entering the college which he endowed would be totally disregarded, it is extremely probable that he would not only hav made the prohibitory clause in his will much more stringent, but would hav prohibited teaching by Christians altogether. The provision is now practically inoperativ by reason of the introduction of unordained ministers into Girard College. A man cannot legally be called a minister until he is ordained. But practically he is one upon the completion of his alleged studies. These fledglings are now surreptitiously insinuated into the college, to the great pain of the orphans who are compelled to listen to them, and their admissions are an unscrupulous violation of the provisions of the will. Regarding the torture of the helpless orphans the Philadelphia Times says:

"The provision in Stephen Girard's will excluding ordained ministers from Girard College has had an effect that probably was not anticipated by the testator. It has put the unfortunate boys at the mercy of amateur preachers, who usually hav the faults of amateurs in other professions in an exaggerated degree. These well-meaning but prosy persons go out on Sundays and discourse at great length in pious platitudes that are seldom edifying or productiv of reverence. It is a good idea, suggested by Mr. Lex, to put a time limit on the chapel exercises, for the diminution of twaddle and the relief of the hopeless orphans."

That is the humorous side of the case. The serious one is the unprincipled manner in which the Christians hav cheated the dead Freethinker. The institution was intended to be secular; they hav made it Christian by erecting a chapel on ground adjoining the Girard estate, and compelling the orphans benefiting by Girard's munificence to attend every Sunday. This miserable subterfuge is a violation of honor and a tacit acknowledgment that integrity is a stranger to the church.

Notes.

JAY GOULD is a pious man, and contracted the habit of praying while young. The inclination to make a pun on his early habits and later practices is almost irresistible.

WE are indebted to "Fall River's good angel," as the poor people of that town call Miss Susan H. Wixon, for a pleasant and flattering personal notice in the columns of the Investigator. Our modesty will not allow us to transfer it.

MESSRS. HARMAN & WALKER hav changed the name of their paper from Kansas Liberal to Lucifer in order to avoid the localization inevitable in the former name, and also because so many Liberals are now found among the younger Freethought journals. Lucifer is indeed a light-bearer, although his light sometimes flames one-sidedly, and we wish for him an extensiv dominion.

THE Rev. Mr. Talmage preached last Sunday on the "Sermon of the Future." He said that Jonathan Edwards was a good man in his day, but at the present time his sermons would divide his audience into two classes—"those who wanted to go to sleep and those who wanted to go home." This was applauded as a very good joke on Mr. Edwards; but Talmage may not know that his own audiences are divided into two classes also—those who go to hear him as a religious duty and those who visit the Tabernacle because there is no other circus open on Sunday.

THE religious news of this week is unusually prolific. The Rev. Mr. Vedder, of Albany, N. Y., is in jail for complicity in a case of malpractice. The Rev. Mr. Keiser, of Pottsville, Pa., is mulcted in the sum of $1,000 for bastardy and breach of promis. The Rev. John Harris, of Olathe, Kan., goes to the penitentiary for five years for a defalcation of $54,000. The Rev. B. D. Brown, of Lovelady, Texas, is reported as implicated in a murderous brawl. Barbara Miller, saint and murderess, has been hanged. The Salvation Army is before the courts as a nuisance, etc., etc., etc. At this rate how long will it be before the millennium is brought about through the influence of "Christian morality?"

"THE Christian church has been on the defensiv for the last ten years, and is now coming out victorious after a magnificent fight against Infidelity," said the Rev. Dr. Newman, the preacher who traveled around the world at the public expense. Yet the champion of orthodoxy at the Rochester Convention said Infidelity was never so prevalent as now. And an orthodox writer in the orthodox Sunday Tribune instanced six prominent ministers who hav recently been pronounced heretics, and concluded his paper by saying that the churches could not "resist the current, which is gathering strength every day." Will Parson Newman please giv us the facts on the strength of which he made his assertion?

ANTHONY COMSTOCK has come to the front again. This time he declares war on the pool-sellers at the Sheepshead, N. Y., driving park. He has given notice of the raid he is to make, has interviewed the district attorney of Kings county, and probably that is the last we shall hear of the affair. Comstock has almost sunk out of public notice, and he would like to get his name in the papers once more. There may be a sham raid; the pool-sellers, who are one kind of gamblers, may be minus a few hundred dollars of hush money, and then Comstock will subside until it becomes necessary to again raise the wind. The only effect Comstock's tactics hav on the gambling fraternity is to make them more rapacious and dishonest by making their business too expensiv to be honestly conducted.

THE agitation against church bells has recently been revived in this city. Mr. Jackson Schultz, from his German name presumably a Freethinker, is the head and front of the opposition to these noisy accompaniments of superstition. The Tribune declares that once in a public conference this gentleman advanced the opinion that churches ought to be taxed to support the police because they were the cause of riots. Mr. Schultz is conducting the present controversy in the courts, and as he is a man of wealth and prominence he will effect good results if any one can. If every one in the city wished to be woke up to go to church there would be some excuse for bell ringing, but as nine-tenths of the people—outside of the Catholics—never visit the church at all, their present use is a nuisance that should be abated at once.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM closed his address at the Rochester Convention on "The Spirit of Humanity in American Poetry" with the following glowing periods:

"The poet of the future must also be the poet of labor, for labor in the hereafter will become musical, and the poet must voice its music. Labor shall hav its armies as gay, as glittering, and as beautiful as the old-time chivalric hosts. The greatest bard is he who can understand, not the soul of an archangel, but the thoughts of him who digs and delves in the street. The noblest singer is he who with deft fingers touches the harp of our homeliest joys, who awakes the music of the humblest tasks, who roams not amid palaces to gather the jewels of his deathless crown, but amid the cottages, the daisies, and the sweet fields, where grow and glisten the harvests of our common work."

Mr. Putnam has the faculty of putting words and ideas into congenial relations as handily as any writer we know of.

BARBARA MILLER—the exit of whose companion in crime from this bustling sphere we noticed a few weeks since—was hanged last Friday. Her paramour went direct to heaven from the gallows, and she has joined him. At least, she said she should. The night before her demise she had a dream, in which, she says, three white angels appeared on the scaffold and carried her up to her eternal home in heaven before the sentence could be executed. The story of this vision spread among the negroes like wildfire. So great is the belief of the negroes in the miraculous that many of that race among the spectators fully expected to see the woman's dream realized, and the angels to appear and snatch the murderess from the hands of the sheriff before he could carry out the sentence of the law. The night before the execution a prayer-meeting was held in Barbara's cell, the exercises being prolonged until two o'clock in the morning. Barbara was then left with her mother, sister, and other colored women, and she and her companions slept soundly for several hours. At about nine o'clock she ate a hearty breakfast, and later the Rev. George Boswell, colored, the woman's spiritual adviser, with several members of his congregation, entered her cell and conducted religious services. Prayer after prayer, followed in each instance by the singing of a hymn, was offered in rapid succession. The excitement produced by the hymns was intense. The doomed woman stood in the midst of the sable throng, with her arms uplifted, swaying her body to and fro as the crowd chanted, "Barbara is nearing her home," and "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The services opened by singing the hymn, "Amazing Grace." Rev. Mr. Boswell lined out the hymn:

I once was lost, and now I am found.
Barbara—Yes, I is.
Was blind, but now I see.
Barbara—Yes.
'Twas grace that taught my heart to feel;
Barbara—Ever was.
And grace my fears relieve.
Barbara—Ever was.
How precious did that grace appear.
Barbara—Yes, Lord.

These exercises were kept up until the hour for the hanging arrived. Such words and actions as these carry their own lesson, and it certainly will not be a favorable one to that religion that holds out the promis of a bright heaven to cold-blooded, premeditating murderers.

SOME valuable suggestions to preachers and listeners are thrown out in the following remarks of a contemporary which is by no means esteemed:

"A purchaser at a recent sale of unclaimed baggage who came into the possession of a box filled with manuscript sermons must hav had his disappointment tempered by reading the marginal notes affixed to the sermons by their author. These notes were of the nature of stage directions, and their purpose was to aid the preacher in the effectiv delivery of the sermons. Such notes as 'Here pause and count twenty-five;' 'Here slam the pages of the Bible together;' 'Here let the voice tremble and use handkerchief;' and, 'Yell the first sentence of this and whisper the last,' must hav been of great use to their author. Had he preached his sermons in a quiet, clerical monotone they would doubtless hav been called dull and tedious, but accompanied at precisely the right moment by slamming together the covers of the Bible and mopping the eyes with the handkerchief, they must hav seemed wonderfully eloquent to the class of people who admire Talmage. In fact, it was at first supposed that the sermons in question were written by Talmage, but as directions such as 'Here throw right leg over pulpit,' and 'Here throw back somersault,' were wanting, it was evident that they were not meant to be preached in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The idea of adding marginal notes of expression to sermons is undoubtedly an admirable one. If followed, they must add variety and, to a certain extent, interest to the sermon. At the same time, such notes can only partially assist in relieving the tedium of listening to sermons, and it is strange that among those ingenious people who are endeavoring to invent liturgies for the use of non-liturgical sects no one has thought of the plan of responsiv sermons. There would be little difficulty in framing a system of verbal and mental responses for the use of a congregation while listening to a sermon which would be extremely edifying. Every minister, before preaching a sermon, should be required to prepare a series of directions for listeners, informing them in what spirit they should receive different parts of his sermon. For example, these directions might read somewhat as follows: 'Here become enthusiastic and shout "glory;"' 'Here be deeply impressed, and exclaim, "That's so, brother,"' and 'Here be overcome with the speaker's pathos, and cry "Amen" in broken accents.' Of course, 'cues,' to use a worldly expression, would hav to be given with these directions, so that the audience would know to precisely what parts of the sermon the directions were intended to apply. It would, of course, be easy to arrange this matter, and by printing the directions on cards to be distributed to every member of the audience, the pulpit and the people could be brought close together. This system of responsiv sermons would add greatly to the interest of sermon preaching and sermon hearing. It would giv the audience an activ share, so to speak, in the exercise of preaching, and remove to a great extent the temptation to sleep. It would make the delivery of sermons far more successful than it is now, since it would enable an audience to know what to admire and when to be moved to enthusiasm or to tears. Finally, it is a perfectly feasible scheme, and could the unknown author of the annotated sermons above referred to be found he would be precisely the man to elaborate and perfect it."

MONCURE CONWAY, who is on a visit to this country, has been interviewed by the San Francisco Chronicle. As a very liberal theologian his views command wide attention. In reply to the reporter's query whether he was acquainted with Mr. Bradlaugh he said:

"Yes. But I hav no desire to criticise him or his methods. He works in entirely different mental, moral, and social regions from myself. It is a mistake to suppose that he has loose principles on the question of marriage, when the fact is he is a stickler for old-time ideas on that subject. He was formerly married, but his wife is dead. His relations with Mrs. Annie Besant, his present business associate, hav never been otherwise than honorable, and no other opinion is entertained in London by those who are familiar with his affairs. She was driven out of her husband's house because she was too liberal in religion for him, not because she was too free in morals. But, as I hav said, he works in entirely different lines. My own radical views lead me to a somewhat bold republicanism. I look upon a president as a monarch, and think the Swiss republic without any president the best. I am also in favor of a parliament, assembly, congress, or whatever you choose to call it, of only one house. I regard Mrs. Besant as the most refined and highly educated woman in London since the death of George Eliot. She is a mistress of all the modern European languages. She is also a shrewd business woman, who attends to the great publishing firm in which she is a partner. She knows how to make and take care of money, and is, therefore, prosperous."

Of Emerson and the state of religion in England he said:

"The feeling in regard to Emerson is extremely profound. The proposition of Prof. Tyndall to erect a monument to the American philosopher near that of Carlyle, at Chelsea, has brought to him and to me many letters from Englishmen, many of them workingmen, who would be glad to contribute to such an object. The English sculptor, George Simonds, who married a Miss Prescott, of Boston, one of the most beautiful ladies in London, is now engaged upon a bust of Emerson, of which I hav just seen the first casting. It promises to be fine. If he succeeds it is quite possible the plan of the monument to Emerson may be carried out." "Does it not seem a little strange that there should be such a bond of sympathy between Emerson, the ideal idealist, and Tyndall, who, if he is not a Materialist, scarcely believes that man's nature has a spiritual side?" "There is a copula that binds these two widely differing natures together. Tyndall was always a great admirer of Emerson. It is a remarkable proof of the fact that the religious or spirital life is very deep in such men, and that they are by no means particular regarding naturalistic limitations or religious formulas. They merely wish to keep things flowing. They are constantly looking forward to a larger light and they like to keep the door open on the side of all those religious or idealistic writers whose views are not for formality in a metaphysical or dogmatic way. What they value in Emerson is the spirit and the tendency of his writings and their freedom from exact and precise metaphysics and all theological form." "What progress is making in religious thought in England?" "I may say that everything in England at the present time seems to me to be tentativ and experimental, and that there is a great dislike to any hard and fast negations or any hard and dry affirmations. The state of mind in England to-day is skeptical, taking skepticism in the old sense, but united with a large and with a very great interest indeed in universal religious history. No man is more sure of a hearing in England than a man who can giv a new and deeper idea of the life of Christ or his time, or the life of Buddha, and particularly is there visible in England a growth of cosmopolitan ideas on religion; that is, a growth of feeling and interest in the points of contact between the great religions of the world. This feeling has been illustrated by the appearance of a large number of young scholars, whose discussions and investigations into comparativ religion and discoveries in the fields of religion and mythology in the far east hav been of the most remarkable kind. Among these I might name Rhys Davids, Karl Pearson, and Edwin Arnold, author of 'The Light of Asia,' and all those scholars who hav been associated with Muller in the translation of the great books of the east, perhaps the noblest work that has been done in religious thought in our century."

Lectures and Meetings.

JOHN E. REMSBURG spoke in Chicago last Sunday. He will speak in Milwaukee next Sunday.

THE Sixth Annual Convention of the New England Anti Death League meets in Hampshire Hall, 712 Washington st., Boston, Sunday and Monday, Sept. 23d and 24th. Three sessions daily; B. Franklin Clarke, pres.; E. H. Heywood, sec; J. H. Swain, E. B. G. Horren, J. W. Stillman, Lyman A. Wiley, Joseph P. Sheafe, Prof. A. P. Barnes, and other speakers expected.

THE program of the Manhattan Liberal Club for the remainder of the month is: September 21st, "The American Hell," by Professor George Vaughan, of Virginia; 28th, "A Federal Republic, the only Basis of a Real Democracy," by Clinton Furbish. The meetings of this club are held every Friday evening at 8 o'clock at the German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15th street, between 2d and 3d avenues.

The Problem of the Atoms.

I am much delighted in reading the article by Otto Wettstein of July 28th on the question, "Which first: Mind or Matter?" in which he enters into a long statement to show that mind is the result of organization, and must cease to exist as soon as the disorganization or disintegration of the physical organs takes place.

The dissertation on matter would be edifying if he did not make the mistake to suppose that the ultimate atoms are all alike. He speaks of matter and force, but forgets that the essential reason of the force of matter is owing to the difference of its elementary character. No two elements of matter are alike, and hence the manifestations of force and motions. He has himself admitted to a question of Mrs. Heddon, in July 7th, that "force is a property of the atom," and, he consequently also avers, the cause, but never the effect of motion. Now it follows that if force is the the cause of motion it must be superior to the atom, and hence the force or life of matter is its organizer, and is its developer, and must be the quality that evolves what he is pleased to term consciousness, and when he admits this he as a Materialist is conceding the whole argument as opposed to the spiritual theory of matter. And I will say that his statement of the nature of the atom is not the "dead matter" idea of Huxley & Co., and will swamp his material boat in the sea of scientific abstractions if he does not change his base of supplies and operations.

The old idea of the transmutation of metals (alchemy) implicitly contains the assumption that all kinds of matters are ultimately one. This is a very simple and concise way to treat a perplexing subject; it is the easiest conception we can hav of matter; but unfortunately it leaves so much in relation thereto that by it is utterly inexplicable, that later researches hav convinced advanced scientists that such an assumption is inadequate and insufficient, as one simple experiment will prove. If we take equal pieces of gold, lead, silver, zinc, etc., and form them into a plate of equal thickness by adding square to square and submit them to a uniform heat, by placing them in an oven or chamber, on withdrawing them we find great difference in the amount of heat that each will contain. The zinc will be comparativly cold, and in like manner will each metal differ, and again, some metals will expand by cold, while most others will contract. We find that each element or primate has its peculiar force, and is known by its peculiar force. On this fact rests the whole science of chemistry in distinction as opposed to alchemy.

Alchemy has been discarded these hundreds of years, and friend Otto ought to know it.

Why do atoms exert a force at all?

To answer this question it will be necessary to inquire into their formation according to the latest theories, and I may start out by saying that no body of matter is absolutely solid; between each atom there is a space in which the atom is enveloped, in the same way the cell envelops the nucleus; or in other words, every atom of matter is surrounded by a sphere just as this earth as a mass is surrounded by its atmosphere, and as the atmosphere contains all the life that pertains to its surface, so does the atmosphere of the atom contain its life. It is polarized, having a positiv and a negativ end. If an iron magnet is broken into a thousand billions of parts, each part in it becomes a magnet, and this property or force cannot be destroyed, but a bar of iron may be demagnetized and neutralized so as to act in a state of positiv or negativ relation to any passing current, as it is usually termed, of electricity, and this is done by the effect which is produced on the combined spheres of the atoms composing the bar. That is to say, each atom has its surrounding envelope, or aura, or emanation, and when a great many are united together into a body, they form a mass by the union of their spheres and forces, and the mass will be solid in proportion to the attractiv quality of the atoms. The mass then in turn will send out an aura or sphere, and glow with the light (magnetic) peculiar to itself. The truth then is that up to this time it has not been established that any two atoms of matter or substance hav ever touched each other, and hence the penetrability and the dissolution of matter in mass is the law. This fact has also led our most eminently successful investigators to conclude that for all practical purposes, as we can know nothing of matter as an ultimate except by the force it exerts, it is obvious that the supposition of mere geometric points, or sphere envelopes, capable of exerting force, called centers of force, will as satisfactorily account for all observed phenomena as any other idea of the ultimate nature of matter. The question is, however, confessedly beyond the reach of experiment, and must be relegated to the domain of metaphysics, in which neither the Materialist nor Spiritualist can claim to solve any mystery connected by life or death, except to dogmatically assert that which is not susceptible of any proof; and so far as the Spiritualist and his future existence is concerned, he must depend on such other evidences as will convey to his mind a conviction of the fact, if a fact, and the "death-ends-all" theorist has no remedy by any known laws of science to help him in his denial of the spiritual phenomena. He must upset the manifestations, and defeat their manifestly spiritual intelligence, or remain dumb by the mysteries that from day to day are coming into view.

The doctrin of the conservation of force is fast supplanting the Materialistic notion of things and is introducing something to take note of which is infinitly beyond the substance idea of matter; and if friend Otto admits a force superior to his atom, which moves it, and manipulates it, alas! his Materialism is doomed to vanish into an airy nothing, of which he so much complains.

The theory of the ultimate sameness of matter will not answer, as such a state would be most likely to result in utter inertia, which he so much deplores. It is most obvious that in a mass of matter each atom must be capable of acting upon all others, and this can be accounted for only on the above theory that their envelopes or spheres are combined and united. It is this difficulty that has led some philosophers to conclude and state that there could be no actio in distans, but we are sure there can be, as, by the law of conduction and of force, a property may be changed from one body to another, as heat itself is a form of kinetic energy. If there be no difference in kinds of matter, there could be no cause of motion, and as elements never change, there must continue one eternal commotion of this elemental force and life.

No theory of matter or its nature can be complete till it accounts for the mutual action of separate atoms, and for this the existence of a continuous material medium in space is absolutely necessary, as Mr. Wettstein affirms; and this in turn, would, if accepted, do away with the atomic constitution altogether. Sir William Thompson has shown that mere heterogeneity, which I am sure exists in matter together with gravitation, or magnetic life, is sufficient to explain all the apparently discordant laws of molecular action, matter being continuous but of varying density from one point or place to another.

To assume that organic life is the result of inorganic matter in motion, etc., and to attempt to prove it by reference to the lowest forms of cell life, is too flimsy to be seriously entertained, because the point at which inorganic matter becomes conscious life can not be defined, and it has been demonstrated that even cell life is the result of a germ of life which simply feeds and grows into bodily form from the material upon which it feeds by endosmosis; but how did the germ come about? How was the germ deposited in the protoplasm? Otto says: "Whether or not an accurate and immediate solution of the intricate modus operandi of the transition of unconscious matter to conscious organism be forthcoming, the fact is patent that such a process does take place, and that matter, blind and unconscious, does produce every natural phenomenon in the universe."

In the above it will be seen that the whole argument upon his part is an assumption, and his patent inference is no patent at all. To assert that every atom contains life or force, and assume that it must be blind and unintelligent, from the fact that all the results of its operations are intelligent and produce organization and mind, is the most illogical inference ever deduced from facts. And to state that such a proposition "has the advantage of the greatest probability" is to set common sense and reason at defiance. It is the argumentum ad absurdum.

It seems much more reasonable to infer that because the result is intelligent and invariable, not by mere chance, that there must be a law of intelligence that directs their various motions and combinations. I deny that the forces and laws of nature are blind or dead; every atom is related to every other atom. They are united by the universal diffusion of atomic spheres, and their union produces one universal co-relation of force and life, which is the cause, by the laws of their heterogeneities or atomic constitution of all change, motion, and the development of organic life and human intelligence and mind. But of that universal intelligence and life of the atoms we hav the most superficial notions. We know, however, that if every atom possesses life and force, and is related to all other atoms, and if all space is made up of such atoms, there must of necessity be a universal union and co-relation of all matter and all force, and it is but reasonable from the results of life around us to infer that, being the cause of all intelligence, it must be intelligent also.

If in the production of man his finest sense organs are composed of a body which permeates his natural body, and upon which all the sensatory impressions of life are recorded and retained, and if his spirit, composed of this universal life element, should absorb this spirit body at the dissolution of his earthly body, and retain it, there is no reason why these could not remain united for an indefinit period of time, and exist in a state removed from the densest matter, or in a state of the finest and highest conditioned matter—a spirit world. The difficulty with most persons in relation to spirit vs. matter is that they do not understand each other's premises.

In the question above—"Which first: mind or matter?"—this is manifest. Otto says "mind is the result of organization." Well, suppose it is? So far as an outside view is had, this might appear so; but in fact it is much more an appearance than the rising sun. The spirit of man is transmitted from parent to child, and all the mental fabric with it; but what we call mind is usually simply our experience and use of the mental faculties we hav inherited; but the inner propelling force and life is ours by inheritance, and the properties of the germ were simply matured by the mother and provided for until the germ could take care of itself. From whatever source the original life and first parents came, we are certain that all subsequent life has been the result of transmission, and our friend Wettstein will never be able to solve the problem as to which was first, mind or matter, and he certainly will be unable to giv the world a single instance of any inorganic matter turning into conscious, organic life. I defy the whole Materialistic, "death-ends-all" fraternity to produce a solitary instance of it.

It is a demonstrated fact that one substance may contain many other substances, and yet by adding another the external bulk of the first is not increased a particle. This shows the interpenetrability of matter and the conservation of force.

Let me suggest to Otto, and to all investigating and honest thinkers: If you want to solve the question of a spirit life, lay aside all your preconceived notions about the absurdity of "spooks," and go to work patiently and honestly, and humbly witness what you can of the phenomena; then compare it with what you know of the laws of intelligence, and, by using your wits, endeavor to account for the intelligent movements of physical objects, and the facts they establish, and—my word for it—you will conclude there is much yet to learn in relation to mind and matter not down in the books, nor dreamed of by any philosophy.

I always hav admired the disinterested labor of the blank Materialist, who without any incentiv or inducement from the other side of Jordon, will work for the good of mankind. But I can assure such that with the additional prospect that such a life will not be in vain, and that the same self-sacrificing and happiness-promoting privileges will be enjoyed there, a knowledge of such life will greatly encourage the one you now enjoy; and as life is short, the sooner you commence this the better. J. R. PERRY.

Mr. Bradlaugh and His Home.

From the Home Journal.

The type of the British radical of the present day is clearly Bradlaugh. He is the great bug-a-boo of the parliamentary nursery. But on near view he is a very mild monster. He livs in a modest little house at 20 Circus Road, St. John's Wood, on the outskirts of London. A music store occupies the ground floor of the building, which is on the corner of the street. The bell-knob is of iron, and the plain door is opened by a maid servant. She takes your card and you await her return in a narrow hallway, covered with an oilcloth from which the figures hav long ago been effaced by wear. The steps of the stairway are hidden under the same well-worn oilcloth. You enter Mr. Bradlaugh's study, which is large and cheerful and has four big windows looking out on the street. Book-shelves reaching from floor to ceiling surround the room. Mr. Bradlaugh himself is perched on the top of a step-ladder busily rummaging a large volume of parliamentary debates, doubtless looking for precedents with which to fortify still more strongly his already impregnable position. He givs you a hearty shake of the hand and begs to be excused a moment until he finds what he is looking for. This affords you time to complete the survey of his busy study. Two large desks stand in the middle of the room, at one of which a secretary is hard work. Packages of Mr. Bradlaugh's speeches and pamphlets, all relating to his conflict with the "bigots in the House of Commons," are scattered about. A photograph of Charles Sumner and another of Mr. Brand, speaker of the House of Commons, hang together on the wall. But Mr. Bradlaugh has come down from the ladder, and is seated at his desk. His large, open face, without a whisker, reminds one strongly of Col. Robert Ingersoll. His hair, very thin on the crown, is fast turning gray. He has a hearty laugh and converses with great volubility, clearness, and caution. It is evident that you hav to do with a trained lawyer and a man who knows what he says, but does not always say what he knows. And just here is his strength in the present struggle. The sharpest men in all England, the longest heads in Parliament, hav been trying for three years to corner Bradlaugh; to worm out of him what he thought but would not say, and they hav seldom (if ever) been successful. Whatever we may think of the man, his principles, and his aims, nobody can help admiring the firm, circumspect, legal, honest course which he has been pursuing for the past three or four years in this up-hill effort to force the English House of Commons to respect entire freedom of conscience.

Letters from Friends.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Sept. 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: You will please find inclosed $2 to apply on my subscription.

I see by the papers that Mr. Leland and Mr. Wakeman will be in our city soon, and are going to speak in the same hall that our lyceum occupies. Our lyceum opens its meetings on the 9th of September, and I hav been thinking that it would be a good idea to hav some sample copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER to distribute on that occasion. I believe that I am the only subscriber for your paper in the lyceum. Although a Spiritualist for the past fifteen years, I hav been a subscriber to your paper for seven years and over. I think it is the grandest old warrior for truth in the world, and I trust that it will be forever. As I am conductor of the Children's Progressiv Lyceum, I shall endeavor to speak a good word for the paper, and also for the meeting to be held by Mr. Wakeman and others on the 12th. If you feel as though you could send any sample copies I will try and giv them out where they will do the most good. I would like to subscribe to the Monument Fund, but I would rather subscribe to a fund for the support of the grand old TRUTH SEEKER, for I think Mr. Bennett would rather see that sustained, as it was his heart's cause to perpetuate his paper, and I hope some one will start a fund for the support of the paper. I will guarantee to giv $2 toward the cause, and perhaps more if circumstances will permit. CHARLES L. WATSON.

HARWICH, MASS, Sept., 283.

MR. EDITOR: Every time I read THE TRUTH SEEKER I get an inspiration, and just now, this Sunday morning, I feel like returning thanks to the publisher, editor, printers, and all the operativs of THE TRUTH SEEKER office, even to the "devil," and all the contributors to its columns, for the handsome way in which everything is done.

Now and then, rarely however, there appears an article bordering upon impatience of contradiction; but, considering the nature of the subjects discussed, and the tendency of people to be tenacious of their pet theories, I must say we hav reason to congratulate ourselvs in the fact of our agreement to disagree, if need be, without feeling under a serious obligation to persecute, as do Christians, to save our theories or get our revenge. Besides, those varieties serve to make the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER interesting and instructiv beyond any other paper of my acquaintance.

This is saying not a little, since we are having, thanks to the great spirit, a host of excellent Liberal papers that are fast molding the sentiment of the country for good. The situation of an editor, I sometimes think, must be a trying one, such a contrariety of characters abound in society; and those editors that can please everybody, I presume, are about as plenty as white blackbirds. And "us fellows" should not be fastidious and exacting, but make large concessions as to privilege, for, as Paddy said, "One man is as good as another and a damn sight better." Some like the discussion between Prohibitionists and non-Prohibitionists. I like it. Some the discussion between Putnam and Andrews. I like that. Others like the discussion upon the origin of the human species. So do I. Some like the controversy between the Spiritualists and Materialists. Surely that is intercsting. Some like articles on the different scientific subjects—chemistry, geology, astronomy, etc. I take an interest in them. Physiology and hygiene cannot but be relished by many. Heredity is the theme of some—a great and good cause in which we should all take a part.

But not the least among all, it seems to me, is the secularizing of our government, making it what it was intended to be by the immortal Paine, a government free from all deadhead religions, and impartial in securing the right of all to elect their own religions and pay their own expenses.

But while to me this appears to be the paramount object, we should not complain if a large variety of other matter is served up to meet the appetites of the many and varied patrons of a paper so potent for good as is our TRUTH SEEKER. Indeed it is well spiced, and leaves no room for complaint from any quarter.

That communication from "American Jew" in THE TRUTH SEEKER of August 25th, relating to the Spanish Inquisition, ought to stimulate us with renewed zeal in the great work of sweeping from the earth such a scourge as the Christian religion has proved itself to be. The fruit of such an institution is the legitimate fruit of Christianity and its devotees. who, should they get control, would repeat the horrid tragedies of former times. Indeed, if such a man as our beloved Bennett, in the broad daylight of scientific enlightenment, and in the latter half of the nineteenth century, could be condemned to thirteen months' imprisonment for his faithful discharge of duty in this "land of the free and home of the brave" by "Protestants," what might we not expect from the more bigoted Catholics?

And if Comstock, whose soul, if he has any, is as black as hell, can prowl about in quest of opportunities to gratify his thirst for blood, and can contravene the legitimate force and purpose of the Constitution of the United States to carry out his nefarious designs, it would ill become us to "ground our arms" just yet, for the enemy would not fail to take advantage of every weak point, and would gather strength just in proportion to the relaxation of our efforts. The Protestant branch of the Christian church may die out in fifty years, but that old hoary concentration of disgusting superstition, the church of Rome, the devotees of which hav given up their souls to the keeping of the old hag, will die hard. But die she must (it's only a question of time), and then let the earth rejoice in the riddance and profit by its experience. B. F. ROBBINS.

EAST CHATHAM, Sept. 1, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Your weekly journal of good tidings of great joy (although unattended by angels or the heavenly host) is from week to week duly received, and how refreshing to a sensitiv mind of advanced years, who has been surrounded from childhood with orthodoxy gone to seed, and standing in their midst almost single-handed, to exchange the senseless twaddle of the once popular journals of orthodoxy, with which our land has so long been flooded, filled with the supernatural in all its senseless shapes, from the advocacy of treating incurable diseases by the simple vocal prayers of superstitious ignorance, and the old infamous theory of original sin, subject to which we were all born, with no other way to escape the awful, indescribable anguish of endless punishment, but through faith in a vicarious atonement, coupled with the old dogma of "he that believeth not shall be damned," that has been crowded upon the minds of humanity, from the infant Sabbath-school scholar to the last breath of expiring age, resulting thus far (according to the most Liberal construction of teachings of the hireling host who hav staked their all, bread and butter included, to keep the old sinking hull afloat) in damning at least nine-tenths of our race—I say, how refreshing to exchange all this for the scientific common sense, contributions from your able correspondents. Yes, let truth seeking and Freethought pursue its high mission. Every year's effort of ours makes a marked change. I well remember some forty or fifty years ago when I occasionally attended a Methodist meeting in our neighborhood, when I had been reported as advocating in the presence of some of the members of the church that the Bible was not the infallible word of God. The circuit minister on this occasion, without properly connecting with his discourse, branched off on an extravagant tirade against the man who, being a little stronger-minded than some of his neighbors, should attempt to dispute the sacredness and authority of the holy book. His influence in society, he said, is worse than the thief, the highway robber, or the murderer. After this I learned that the church approved his course and sayings. But I escaped the rack, the stake, and fagot, and even the thumbscrew, and am still permitted to breathe the pure, free, fresh air that surrounds me, thanks to Paine, Jefferson, and all the influential Liberals of their day who sowed the seeds of liberty and freedom we now enjoy. Thomas Paine said, "Take from the Bible the belief that it is the word of God, and it sinks to a level with Jack the Giant-killer, without the merit of being entertaining." And this with us to-day I believe to be the main question. While I make no high pretensions as an agitator and reformer, I will giv you a few specimen cases of later date in contact with the one alluded to. While on a visit to Judge Lyons, at Madison, Wisconsin, he gave me an introduction to an intelligent old gentleman who had retired from activ life as a minister of the gospel and professor in the university at that place, to enjoy apparently the remnant of a well-spent life. It was a cool, moonlight July evening, and the judge left us seated on a summit before his dwelling, overlooking one of those beautiful lakes. Everything seemed prosperous for social enjoyment, and my new friend struck off in his fine style as an instructor, and gave me some fine specimens of his conversational powers, to which I could but listen with interest and satisfaction, merely indorsing his well selected subjects and conclusions.

At length, after correcting me in reply to his inquiry as to the number of inhabitants of Blooming-ing, Ill., where I had lately been stopping, he gave a long list of the footings of the census that had then just been completed, showing that he had made a specialty of this subject, and we both congratulated ourselvs on the thorough system of enumeration we had adopted and the proud record we had made before the world as to our national importance. Here a new thought struck me that perhaps I had found the man who could giv me some Bible instruction. I had lately read 2 Samuel, chapter xxiv, giving an account where King David was moved by the anger of the Lord to number the people, which was accordingly done, and in consequence of which the Lord, as a punishment, slew seventy thousand of the people. After relating this holy Bible account, I inquired of my new acquaintance if he could explain to me wherein this great sin lay. Also the justice of God in destroying seventy thousand of the common people for the act of their king. Here a silent meditation ensued, and out of respect to my new acquaintance, notwithstanding this favorable opportunity, I dropped the inquiry, not even alluding to the discrepancy in the same account as recorded in 1 Chronicles, chapter xxii, where the writer says that it was Satan that stood up against Israel and provoked David to number them, instead of the Lord, that cost them seventy thousand precious lives to satisfy the merciful Lord for this numbering criminality. Now I hav but one theory to account for and reconcile the apparent contradiction in this infallible, indisputable voice of God, and that is, this angel that acted as assistant and executioner in this cruel drama might also hav acted as informer to the writers of Samuel and Chronicles, he being often in the presence of the great ruler of the universe, and, seeing Satan there also on apparent friendly social terms, as related in Job, "when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, Satan came also." And God in a little misunderstanding between them on the merits, patience, and integrity of Job to satisfy Satan that he, God, had not misrepresented Job's case, surrendered him subject to the power of this Satan, restricting him only to save his life; and in exercising this satanic power it seems he had the elements at his control, even fire came down from heaven and roasted alive Job's servants as well as sheep, and in this wholesale destruction of human life it seems that Job's children shared the same fate. I say this angel, having been detailed to carry out these direful plans, might hav been a little confused in transmitting for record the account at different times, and thus the contradiction between Samuel and Chronicles. Be this as it may, my new friend and myself soon resumed other topics, and finally parted with reciprocal good feeling, with this decided merit on his part, that silence is far better than a poor, lame, ridiculous explanation—a virtue not possessed by all of our evangelical teachers. For instance, the writer, while attending a Methodist camp-meeting at Lebanon Springs in 1881, listened to a discourse from a prominent minister then located at Troy, N. Y., where usually the better talent is selected, and for the first time in his life heard an attempt to reconcile and justify the apparent injustice of man's accountability for entertaining an honest belief contrary to the spirit of the text, "He that believeth not shall be damned," etc. The speaker here insisted that this belief as a religious duty was perfectly easy and natural, and all we had to do was to hav faith and belief would necessarily follow. This logical distinction between faith and belief was nearly new to me, having never heard but one person before who entertained the same idea, and that was the Irishman who, in a spirited strife with his neighbor in fattening the pigs, after being outdone, consoled himself by saying, "Well, my pig didn't weigh as much as I was sure it would, and I didn't believe it would."

Another notable case of priestly arrogance I noticed in the Christian Messenger, dated January 12, 1882, from the pen of a D.D.—A. B. Hide—describing the importance of Solomon's Song. He says, "Never was the ennobling passion of love more beautifully portrayed than in the matchless song of songs." Reader, if you desire to investigate these ennobling passages, please turn to the book of the Song of Solomon, chapter vii, under the heading of "a further description of the church's graces," purporting by the heading to be set forth by Christ (as I dare not make verbatim quotations for fear of involving you in trouble for publishing and circulating obscene literature); please read (but not in the presence of your children or the youth or our land) and think of the effort that has been made by priests to retain this book to be read in public schools.

No wonder that so many clergymen fall victims to amorous desires after reading and eulogizing such writings. And I hope the time will come when, if we are to hav a written standard of faith and practice, there will be another revision rejecting superstition, human butchery, and the supernatural, and substitute something to meet the wants and intelligence of our day. J. M. BARNES.

FROM WHAT SOURCE DOES THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH DERIVE HER POWER.

NEWPORT, ME., Sept. 2, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: Because THE TRUTH SEEKER is the leading Freethought journal in the world, and a grand educator, and because I hav long seen the "Nine Demands of Liberalism" do not lay the ax at the root of the tree, and that the Boston Investigator, in the following quotation, has given me a new inspiration, I will put on paper what has long been in my mind. Mr. J. P. Mendum says: "I hope when the congress meets it will confine itself to practical business—stick to the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and act in unity for the promotion of those principles. Let all other outside objects be set aside, and work for the building up of our cause, and leave Freelove, free religion, and new calendars to be nursed by those who see any good in them, but which, like old superstitions and a future state of existence, can never be explained, but only result in separation and disintegration."

And that is all that the proprietor of "the oldest Freethought journal in the world" has grown to in an experience of forty years, is it?

Long ago I was surprised that wise men—so called—could not see the Nine Demands of Liberalism did not lay the ax at the root of the tree, and would never free the people from the terrible evils from which they had long suffered.

"Church and state" were never separated, nor will they ever be. They were united all through the dark ages and are now, all over Europe, and even in America.

The cruel persecutions in the days of Puritanism, and since the enactment of the Comstock laws, prove the correctness of my statement. All this discussion about separating church and state will do no good only so far as it helps to educate the people. Why not lay the ax at the root of the tree?

Let me illustrate. A farmer has a flock of sheep which hav been constantly preyed upon by ravenous wolves. He is constantly complaining of the destruction of his sheep by the wolves. What does he do? Destroy the wolves, and thus protect the sheep from continual destruction? Certainly it would seem that a wise farmer would do that. But does he? No. indeed; he not only lets them alone, but he feeds them on the richest of food. What would you think of such a farmer? And is not this exactly what you are doing in supporting this murderous concern, the state? What is the history of the state? Every conceivable outrage on humanity—a million times greater than words can express. Its history is one of blood and carnage.

Your infamous prisons, the murderous gallows, the bloody battlefield, are all the work of "Church and State." And every time you vote, no matter who the candidates or what the party may be, you are supporting the very power from which the Christian church derives her power. Do you not create the state by your votes? and is it not from the state that the Christian church has always got her license to imprison and murder her victims?

Where did Comstock get his warrants to arrest the men he did? There can be but one answer—the state. What if the people refuse to support, by their votes, this wholesale murderer, the state—then what? Will not the Christian church be powerless for harm?

Do not the people, every time they vote, delegate the power to unprincipled men to enact the very laws from which Christians get their warrants to arrest, try, convict, sentence, imprison, and murder their victims? If an individual commits murder he is hung on the gallows; but when the state murders by thousands the people pay all the costs and applaud the bloody deed.

Will the people never open their eyes to see what they are doing in supporting this wholesale murderer, the state? Do they not see that while they support by their votes, and by the countless millions of money they pay in the shape of taxes, they are giving life and vitality to the very power of which they complain? Is not the history of the state, for hundreds of years, in its countless murders, enough to make the brain reel and almost make one lose faith in humanity?

Expose by voice and pen this gigantic fraud, Christianity; but, by all that makes life dear, do not support the very power from which the church draws her life, and then complain of her persecutions. Just as long as you giv her the power, as you do when you create and support the state, just so long will she continue her bloody work.

All history shows it is not safe to giv man power over his fellow-man. It is not that men are naturally bad, or that they really want to torture those in their power; but it is the dangerous power they are intrusted with that makes them inhuman monsters. The savage cruelty of that Christian monster, Constantine, so faithfully exposed in the last TRUTH SEEKER, is only one among thousands of cases showing what men will do when entrusted with unlimited power. Millions of eyes hav been opened to see the corruptions of the church. When will the people open their eyes to the villainy of her partner in crime, the state, and that the two are one?

The crimes of this monster, the state, will soon open the eyes of the people to see that its destruction is their only salvation.

Who can read the savage cruelties of England for hundreds of years, to say nothing of other nations, without being alarmed for the safety of the rights of the people. Ruthlessly, savagely, and murderously hav all governments, in all ages, trampled on the rights of the people and the Christian church always sustains her in her bloody work.

Let every free man and every free woman all over the civilized world exert their influence to expose and dethrone this bloody monster, the state, and in time we will hav order where we now hav savage despotism.

And it is not to be done by the ballot-box, alias the tyrant's weapon, the cartridge-box, but by letting the ballot alone, enlightening the people until the time comes for the people—men and women—to bring order out of the present political and religious chaos. SEWARD MITCHELL.

HAMPTONVILLE, August 28, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In a letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 21st, I said build the monument for D. M. Bennett with one dollar subscriptions. Let me ask again that it might be built with one dollar subscriptions. My reason for urging it is that I see in the Nonconformist account from the Christian Advocate that the Christians cannot let our friend, D. M. Bennett, rest. Now let us Liberals show them that he was loved by thousands, and that his name will not be forgotten. Oh, do giv a notice and your views; let the money of those that giv more than one dollar go to pay for the lot it is built on or for something belonging to it.

I think all that is needed is a statement of the case and why it should be built. The Christians will see that his memory is still in the hearts of his friends, and let it read on the monument as long as granit will last. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from the first number. GEORGE PADDINGTON.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of Sept. 1st I read with unusual interest the letter of Wm. L. Worley, in which he endeavors to giv by a peculiar process of reasoning a satisfactory solution of mind and matter, and says in conclusion that if the reader sees anything wrong in his statements "please point it out." I gladly accept the invitation. The first position that appears to me to be wrong is in his endeavoring to ride two horses at the same time while they are moving in opposit directions. Mind is matter, therefore material, or it is not; and the position in reference to this question so ably sustained by Mr. Putnam, to me seems the more sensible, and one that will stand the test of scientific investigation, when others hav passed into forgetfulness.

Mr. Worley says, "It does seem that any fool could see that if mind is an entity at all it must of necessity be material; that when all matter is subtracted naught remains but empty space." Does such a statement prove anything? The world has already been fed upon ifs too long. All matter is material. This does not say that mind is or is not material. Is mind matter? is the question. I hold that mind is the effect produced by a combination of particles of matter which we call brain, and is governed entirely by conditions, which I am frank to admit makes the brain "conditional matter," but never the mind. I think Brother Worley will readily understand this. A belief in the materiality of mind is too flimsy a rope to cling to in this advanced age of scientific demonstration. That a sound mind is the result of conditions of the brain and body needs no argument. It is a fact long since demonstrated. This being true, how can mind be matter? It would then be subject to its own conditions—a philosophical and scientific impossibility.

If mind is matter, as Mr. Worley would hav us understand, he does not locate it. Surely it cannot exist in the brain as matter. If it does, will Brother Worley tell us how we may know how much and what part of the brain is brains, and how much mind? Would not such a condition of affairs be somewhat mixed? The scientific position as given by Mr. Putnam rests upon a sure foundation, and in my judgment the argument advanced by Mr. Worley shows conclusivly that he, and not Mr. Putnam, is "off the track;" and think if he (Mr. Worley) will examin this matter more closely he will see that, as I hav stated, mind is not matter—only the effect produced by conditions; and that when these conditions no longer are favorable to produce the effect (mind), mind will cease to exist. A change in the conditions of the brain which will produce a corresponding change in the mind, may be from various causes, both directly and indirectly. A shock to the nervous system (as many of the victims of the Salvation Army prove) often changes the conditions governing the brain, so that the mind that once was activ and fruitful becomes apparently dead.

Friend reader, these are my honest convictions, and if you see anything scientifically wrong, please point it out. A. E. RINGER.

LOUDONVILLE, N. Y., Sept. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I think brother Jeremiah Hacker's letter of August 30th was deserving of the most prominent place in your paper. It is a shame and a blindness not to be readily excused, that our Freethought papers hav not one column for the young. We receive many papers in our house, and almost all, with the exceptions of our Freethought and Spiritual papers, hav a department for the young.

I hav a daughter, now four years old, and I hav fretted a great deal that I hav no Freethought literature for her suitable to her age. Already she wants to go to Sunday-school with the other children, and talks about and plays "church" with them. So far, she knows nothing of God, Jesus, or the Bible; but in a very few years she will be able to read, and what shall I place before her to counteract the effects of the silly "Jesus stories" about good little boys and girls that are to be found on every hand?

In our ranks are many gifted men and women who would readily contribute to a literary and children's department. We want something also to interest youths and maidens: poems in which are woven beautiful thoughts without any reference to God and all that twaddle; stories of love and adventure that will draw their attention to these papers we are so deeply interested in. We are out of the Slough of Despond (church slush), and we stand on firm ground with our children, who hav never been in the dark and mire as we hav, and we now want a literature of refinement and grace, written for a generation born with eyes not bandaged with superstition. We hav passed through the rudiments, and our children must go higher.

Oh, that our Freethought editors would giv one page to our children, both big and little, to help us keep them on the firm rock of reason upon which we hav placed them. WINEFORD V. ASPINWALL.

DIANA, TEX., Aug. 20, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I became a subscriber to your much valued paper just one year ago, and I think it the paper of all papers. Every number has been carefully read and portions of them re-read. I always find them exceedingly interesting. There could not hav been found a better name for the paper than THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am a truth seeker, and like to follow where she leads. I am the only one who takes your paper at this office, but I am going to make an effort to obtain other subscribers. I think it the duty of every Liberal to do all he can to spread Freethought. The people here are very orthodox, and, not only that, but very ignorant, Protracted meetings hav been the order of the day here for several weeks, and are likely to continue through the season. The so-called expounders of the gospel, who claim to be endowed with wisdom from on high, and who think they know it all, hav succeeded in duping some of their more ignorant hearers. I am sorry to see that this is so, but, perhaps, they will learn better by and by, as they are all young, with great room for improvement.

I am beginning to realize the great fact that, "no people are so blind as those who will not see." Christians actually do not known the truth when it stares them in the face.

Sometime since I supplied myself with some Freethought works, which I esteem very highly. I offered to lend them to some of my neighbors, in order that they might, through them, discover the error of their way, but being moral cowards they refused to read. "Christian fanatics these." I am acquainted with a few individuals who are in some respects Liberal minded. I giv you their names in order that you may forward them samples copies, and thereby increase the number of your subscribers.

Yours respectfully, J. M. WOODS.

NEW BLOOMFIELD, PA., Sept. 8, 1883.

MR. EDITOR: I inclose $1 75, for which continue to send THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as this sum will pay for it. It is a most excellent paper, and one of which every Freethinker can well be proud. You can count on me as a lifetime subscriber. Long may it flourish. CHAS. L. HARLING.

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 7, 1883.

DEAR MRS. BENNETT: Herewith I inclose $2 to apply on my subscription. Had I no other incentiv I would help keep THE TRUTH SEEKER afloat for the pioneer work it has done, and from the highest regard for its founder. MRS. P. LILLIBRIDGE.

AN instance of good-natured firmness comes from St. Paul, where a railroad man, by a remark at the right moment, cut off an argument that might hav lasted till doomsday. Walt Alexander, general traffic manager of the Manitoba road, was in his office one day when a Mormon elder came in and wanted a clergyman's half-rate ticket. He argued that the Mormon church was the only one recognized by the ruler of the universe, and that all other churches were side issues, counterfeits, well calculated to deceive. Walt did not like the looks of the Mormon, and was not particularly taken with his language, and he never was much mashed on the Mormon business anyway, so he told the elder, in a few well chosen remarks, that he could not grant the request. The elder looked hurt, and pleaded the cause of his church, and the good it was doing, and spoke of his desire to do missionary work in the northwest, and induce female lambs who were starving in Manitoba, to leave the country of snow and flee to the valley of the Jordon, where all was lovely and the goose hung high, or words to that effect. Walt did not want to see any women on his line of road packing up to go to Salt Lake, as there were none too many there, so he told the elder he could not hav a half-fare ticket. The elder became wroth, and said, "I suppose, sir, you refuse my request, on account of my religious views," and he put on a look such as Brother Beezum has in the play of the "Hundred Wives," when he is about to cause the murder of the husband of the woman he wants to add to his list of wives. Walt said that was about the size of it. "Then," said the elder, raising his bony finger and pointing it tremblingly at the modest railroad man, "Young man, I will meet you at the Throne of God!" He stopped as though his remark was going to hav about the same effect as the "launching of the curse of Rome," in the play of Richelieu. Walt looked up at him in contempt, said, "That will be all right. I will be there, elder," and turned to figure on the price of a car load of beer from Milwaukee to Winnepeg, for a brewer who had just come in. The elder went out, and it is said he walked to Manitoba, cursing the railroad all the way.—Peck's Sun.

THE TRUTH SEEKER will be sent three months to trial subscribers for 50 cents.

Working a Problem.

"Well, sir, what can I do for you?" asked the managing editor, a little impatiently, as a ministerial gentleman with an anxious expression entered the sanctum and took off his hat with a polite bow:

"I merely dropped in to say that we are progressing satisfactorily in our vinyard; that the means of grace are abundant, that the harvest is ripe and the gleaners many, and that, taking it all in all, we hav a very precious and refreshing season."

"You're in great luck," replied the managing editor, turning back to his work. "Is there anything else I can say for you?"

"I suppose I ought to add that through providence we hav been enabled to spread the word in stony places, and that we now see our way clear to the redemption of many souls that we feared were in the hands of the adversary," continued the dominie, regarding the managing editor with a perplexed look.

"I'm glad to hear that," rejoined the managing editor. "That is very encouraging."

"Ye-yes," stammered the clergyman, still contemplating the managing editor with a wistful expression.

"I say," chipped in the religious editor, who had dropped in quietly and recognized the dominie with a slap on the back. "I say, what is it anyway? What's the trouble?"

"The hand of omnipotence has been everywhere manifest in our efforts for the salvation of the unregenerate," murmured the clergyman, nervously. "The manifestations of the carnal heart are not—" and here he stopped short and looked appealingly at the religious editor.

"Who is it?" asked the religious editor, kindly. "Is it a recent convert or an old stager?"

"He has been among us for a number of years," replied the dominie, moving uneasily in his chair. "He has been, under divine guidance, the means of much precious work, and many will testify that grace has made him largely instrumental in bringing sinners to see their lives aright."

"Money?" asked the religious editor with a quiet wink.

"I think not," responded the dominie. "So far as I hav heard, money has not been mentioned."

"Hav you learned her name?" asked the religious editor, assuming a grave expression.

"She is one of the best of our sisters," conceded the clergyman, with every manifestation of deep emotion. "I am not at liberty to giv her name."

"What's his name?" demanded the managing editor, who hadn't the remotest notion of what was going on.

"It isn't a he at all," snapped the religious editor, savagely. "You just let the thing alone, will you? I say, dominie, do you believe the brother is guilty?"

"I do not," replied the clergyman, fervently.

"Oh, ho!" muttered the religious editor. "That's it. A man unjustly accused. I see; and you want this paper to omit all mention of the circumstances until after the hearing. Yes, yes; I suppose we can accommodate you—can't we?" and he turned to the managing editor and winked slyly.

"Don't see how," grunted the managing editor. "We must hav the facts."

"You see how I am handicapped by this son of Belial," said the religious editor, in great disgust. "If it were I, there wouldn't ever be a word; but this vassal hasn't a notion on earth beyond getting out his paper. Look here, won't anything induce you to let up on this poor man's church?" and the religious editor again winked at the helpless managing editor.

"I don't call anything to mind now," sighed the managing editor.

"Not if he gave up the name of the woman?" roared the religious editor, his contempt for his chief plainly written on his face.

"In that event we should hav to take the matter into consideration," chirped the managing editor. "If we could only be made to know, through the refreshing guidance of a precious providence, the name of this fair Balaamite, who has thrown down the temple and brought reproach on the means of grace that whooped the sinners out of the stony places, we might, under the pressure of great redemption, let up a little on the craving of the carnal heart, and do the square thing by all hands." And the managing editor looked at the religious editor for approval, and got it in the shape of a prolonged stare.

"That's the best you can expect," said the religious editor to the quaking dominie. "You'd better take him at his word before he changes his mind."

And the dominie whispered the lady's name and left with many protestations of gratitude to the religious editor for softening the unregenerate spirit of the managing editor.

"Worked that pretty well," laughed the religious editor, tapping gently at the closet door, and winking respectfully at the managing editor. "If it hadn't been for you we would never found out who that woman was in the world. By the way, where did you catch the lingo? If I had it as pat as that I'd preach." The religious editor smiled pleasantly and tapped again on the closet door.

"You made a bungle of the whole thing," growled the managing editor, affecting not to see the closet-door act. "What good's the woman's name without the man's? If you'd let me worked it, I'd hav had them both."

"Why, confound it!" exclaimed the religious editor, "he is the man! Didn't you hear him say that he didn't believe the man was guilty, and if you knew those folks as well as I do, you'd understand that if it had been anybody else that man would hav given up the whole business at the send off. Where's the key to this door?"

"So, so, I see," grinned the managing editor. "In that way we catch 'em both. Yes, yes. By Jove! I wish I had your sense. If I knew as much as you do; if I was half as d—smart as you are, I'd buy my own rum, just as you are going to do from now out!"

And the irate managing editor went back to his work, while the religious editor set up a job of "Honest Quaker" with the law reporter and the city editor for the much-needed spiritual refreshment.—Brooklyn Eagle.

TO TRIAL SUBSCRIBERS

The Truth Seeker,

With sixteen large pages, will be sent for THREE MONTHS, postage paid, FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RADICAL PULPIT.

Comprising discourses of advanced thought by

O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER

two of America's clearest thinkers.

Price, in cloth, $1

D. M. BENNETT'S WORKS.

ADDRESS THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

A Truth Seeker Around the World. Four large volumes. With a steel-plate engraving of the author in Vol. I., and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts. Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. 8vo. 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Two Volumes. Written in prison. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

From Behind the Bars. A series of letters written in prison. Over 700 pages. Price $1.50.

A Truth Seeker in Europe. A series of letters written during a visit of ten weeks in Europe. Giving some account of the International Freethinkers' Congress held at Brussels, to which Mr. Bennett was a delegate, followed by a description of what he saw in England, France, Holland, and Italy. The letters from Rome alone are worth the price of the book. With a steel-plate portrait of the author. 850 pages. $1.50.

The Semitic Gods and the Bible. Treating upon the gods of the Semitic nations, including Allah, Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, and the Bible. To the latter 230 pages are devoted, showing that book to be a very inferior production for a first-class God. 333 large pages. Paper covers, 60 cents; cloth, $1.

Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism examined historically and critically. It is thought to be the most damaging exhibit of Christianity that has appeared. 500 large pages. Price, $1.50.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. 700 pages. Paper covers, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate on Christianity and Infidelity, between D. M. BENNETT and Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY. This book has had a very large sale, and is a splendid work for Freethinkers to loan to Christian neighbors. 550 pages. Price, $1.

BIBLE SCIENCE.—To organize and restore the Holy Communion practiced by Christ and his apostles. Also to maintain the "Perfect Law of Liberty" by showing the difference between God's Righteousness and all other notions of right and wrong. This is Masonic Christianity, and intended only for zealous persons tired of talk and ready for business. Return papers, 10 cents.

Address, "REWARD,"
3t37 710 Broadway, New York.

SING, BROTHERS, SING.

USE THE

Liberal Hymn-Book

In your meetings, to make them lively and interesting The LIBERAL HYMN-BOOK contains songs by the best poets adapted to well-known tunes. It is highly commended by Messrs. Wakeman, Parton, Wright, Green, Underwood, Mrs. Slenker, and indeed by all who hav examined it. Second edition. Price, half-bound, 25 cents. In cloth, 40 cents.

D. M. BENNETT'S LAST WORK.

A TRUTH SEEKER

Around the World.

FOUR LARGE VOLUMES.

With a steel plate engraving of the anthor in Vol. I. and each volume illustrated with forty-seven cuts.

BY D. M. BENNETT,

Late editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, anthor of "A Truth Seeker in Europe," "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," "The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers," "Champions of the Church," etc., etc.

Handsomely bound in red cloth, $6.50; in leather, red edges, $9.50; in morocco, gilt edges, $10.50.

Readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know the circumstances nnder which this work was written. The last words penned by the great anthor were for the fourth volume which was nearly completed at his death, and which will now contain an acconnt of his world-lamented death and burial. Mr. Bennett was a very patient and faithful chronicler of the habits and customs of the different peoples of the many places he visited. The every-day life of all nations is laid before the reader by one who has visited them and beheld them with his own eyes. Particular attention is paid to the progress of Freethought in the various countries he visited, and the morality of so-called pagan nations is contrasted with the morality of Christian countries, much to the detriment of the latter. The work is a

Freethinker's History of the World.

This work and "A TRUTH SEEKER IN EUROPE" shonld be in every Liberal's library Besides its intrinsic worth it is a memento of one of the greatest Freethinkers the world has known—of one who ranks with Voltaire and Paine in the force and clearness of his writings.

[Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York city

THE

GOLDEN THRONE

By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

Author of "Prometheus," "Gottlieb," and "Ingersoll and Jesus."

A Radical romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natnral hnmanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a npernatural religion; crowded with incident and full of progressiv ideas and the poetry of the futnre.

PRICE $1.00. ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

THE

BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES

OF

The Pilgrims in the Land of Y hweh

D. M. Bennett, Scribe.

ALSO

THE EPISTLE OF BENNETT THE APOSTLE TO THE TRUTH SEEKERS.

From Volume II. of "A TRUTH SEEKER AROUND THE WORLD."

D. M. BENNETT
Price $1.00 33 Clinton Place, New York

THE

SECULAR REVIEW,

A JOURNAL OF

ENGLISH LIBERALISM.

CHARLES WATTS, W. STEWART ROSS, } . . Editors.

The representativ English Freethought journal. In its columns are impartially discussed all sides of Secular, Social, and Theological questions.

Price, 7 cents single number; $2.75 per year, postpaid.

For sale at this office, where yearly subscriptions may also be left. tf16

THE IMMORALITY

—OF—

RELIGIOUS CAPITALS

BY JAMES PARTON.

A lecture delivered in Paine Hall, Sunday evening, Jan. 28, 1883.

In this Mr. Parton "teaches the highest political wisdom by examples which are a terrible warning. He takes theology in its sacred Chosen homes, and shows what a curse it brings upon the people."

Price 10 cts For sale at this office.

THE

"WILSONIA,"

INVENTED BY

WILLIAM WILSON,

MEDICAL ELECTRICIAN, LECTURER ON ELECTRICAL THERAPEUTICS. AUTHOR OF THE "TRIAL OF ME' ICIN," THE "LANGUAGE OF DISEASE," "MEDICAL FALLACIES," ETC.

80 COURT ST., BROOKLYN, N.Y.

63 Broadway, Brooklyn, E. D.

For the past five years in England and America this system has performed such cures in almost ev ery form of diseaese as were until then unheard of. Step by step it has advanced since its first introduction (first relieving and curing one man who bent like an archer's bow for ten years, but was in two months able to walk erect). Then followed other cases equally marvelous in all known forms of disease; thus going on from day to day and month to month, until the method of cure introduced by Wm. Wilson, the originator of the magnetic clothing system of America, has saved tens of thousands from the grave, and is now recognized by our most eminent scientists and physicians, hundreds of whom prescribe it for their patients after medicin has failed, until it has become a household word in case of sickness. Since its first introduction we hav continually improved, until to-day we offer the lightest, best ventilated, most powerful continuous current garment in the world, constructed on the latest scientific principles—in fact, we offer the acme of excellence in magnetic garments, and when worn as advised by us, disease cannot exist.

The following are clippings from testimonials of which we hav thousands. ☞Note we giv full names and addresses, that intending purchasers may write and satisfy themselvs they are genuin.

J. H NORTH, M. D., Hammonton, N. J., in writing for clothing, says: "My patient in Virginia informs me he is more comfortable since the application of your magnetic garments. The goods sent were utilized on the deformed limb, and are working satisfactorily.

ED. HOLLENBECK, organ-builder, 111 W. State st., Rockford, Ill.: "From a terribly sprained knee the doctor was afraid my leg must come off. I sent for knee-cap, was able to walk in a few days, and have been all right since."

J. T. LISLE, Lebanon, Ky., says: "My health has improved, and they are exceedingly pleasant garments to wear. I feel free to recommend them to all delicate people."

MRS. C. A. GOULD, Omaha, Neb.: "I wore the suit with splendid results, for paralysis, and I hav recommended them constantly. I loaned my girdle a week to a friend for dyspepsia, with excellent results."

MRS. A. BRYANT, 93 Conselyea st., Brooklyn, E. D., N. Y.: "I suffered for years from bleeding at the lungs. Your garments hav stopped the bleeding, and I feel quite strong. I cheerfully recommend them."

H. LANGE (care of D. Hausmann), Cor. Jay & Nassau sts., Brooklyn, N. Y.: "Your garments hav entirely cured me of blood-poisoning of the worst form. I cannot find words to express my gratitude."

MR. WILSON, Dear Sir: Please send me a few circulars in regard to your curativ garments. I hav been telling several parties about them. I hav some friends who hav used them with great and pleasing results, and I would like to promote their use.

Yours, THOMAS W. BREWER,
Manasquan, N. J.

MRS. E. P. PLEASANTS, Alderson's, Monroe Co., W. Va.: "I hav found the greatest relief from my appliances, and would not be without them for all the world."

All our magnetic garments are worn next the underclothing, therefore they do not impart shocks or cause sores. They are also constructed under the special supervision of the inventor.

Continued success enables us to make the following offer: Persons writing us an accurate description of their disease, and then sending for the garments advised by us, will hav their money refunded should the appliances fail to cure. Therefore it resolves itself into

No CURE, NO PAY.

To assist the working class, we supply them on payment of half the amount, and take the balance by easy monthly instalments.

Send for illustrated pamphlet and information to the only office where the inventor can be consulted.

Address all communications to

DAVID J. COTTER,

80 COURT STREET, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Poetry.

A Tale of Revenge.

From the Freethinker.

Revenge is sweet; a blow for a blow
  Is a salve for wounded feeling;
The working of vengeance is sometimes slow
  But is always soothing and healing.
And if wrong was done long years ago,
And the injury has but one manner of curing,
'Tis consoling to feel in our silent enduring
That vengeance gets sweeter by proper maturing.

The tale of revenge I now relate,
Goes back to a fairly ancient date—
  About three thousand years or so,
When Israel's sons and dark-eyed daughters
  First went to dwell where seaward flows
The Nile's exceedingly turbid waters.

One son—called Joseph—most moral it seems,
  Was wooed by a Mrs. Potiphar,
Who found he wouldn't fall in with her schemes,
(Of the kind with which the Bible teems).
    For this rigid youth
    Adhered to the truth,
And swore that in his most amorous dreams
  He had never so much as thought of her.

Such virtue was all the talk, of course,
(The seventh commandment was not yet in force)
  And laxity was not uncommon;
But virtue sometimes is rewarded on earth,
And Joseph the Jew got a government berth,
  And the public scoffed at the woman.

A famin came on, yet the Jews grew rich—
For even then Jew palms would itch,
  But the means of their riches were sinister;
For though corn went up to a famin price
They bought it for nothing ('twas very nice)
From the virtuous Joseph, who in a trice
  Had become Pharaoh's own prime minister.

At last the Egyptian blood grew hot
  At what they considered Semitic tricks;
So to labor hard they condemned the lot,
  And set them working at making bricks,
And drawing water and hewing wood
As the best sort of thing for the Jewish brood.

The bondage was stiff and somewhat cruel,
  For the work was hard and so was the fare,
  A choice of food was extremely rare;
The staple diet was water-gruel—
  So the Jewish people grunted and groaned,
  And swore the wrong could be never condoned.

Then Moses, who knew a "fake" or two,
Arose and tried what he could do;
Showed by a number of conjuring tricks—
Developing serpents out of sticks
Which gobbled up snakes in a brace of shakes—
That Jews knew more than just making bricks.

Many other wonderful things he did,
Till Pharaoh thought he'd better get rid
    Of the Jewish crew,
    Who were raising a stew
    As no decent people would ever do.
So Pharaoh kindly agreed to allow
The Jews to depart to avoid more row.

Now Moses was "fly," as most Moses's are,
And intended to roam through the desert afar;
He was "up" in finance—as Joseph had been—
His wants were immense and Egyptians were green.
So he thought that he'd float the first Jewish loan
In a fashion that might, perhaps, serve to atone
For the slavery that his race had known.

He issued his orders with craft and with skill,
And the good honest "children" gave ear with a will.
Each one was to borrow—of course, from Egyptians—
Whatever he could by way of "subscriptions"—
"Jewels of silver and jewels of gold,
And raiment"—the items need not be told.

The order was "borrow," but we all must feel
Such borrowing meant "to beg" and "to steal;"
However that be, it is certain they got
More Egyptian valuables than they ought;
It also is certain they "sloped" with the lot.
    And ever since then
    These Semitic men
Are known by the rings and jewels they wear;
And over the earth, where'er they repair,
They keep on borrowing silver and gold
  At a rate now high, now low;
They are buyers of raiment—the sellers are sold.
  And Moses is known as "Old Clo."

Though starting from Egypt on capital borrowed
  They won in the struggle for life;
The Egyptian was soft—for his softness he sorrowed,
  But the Jew is as keen as a knife.
And recently he's lent Egypt again
  A part of the wealth that he stole;
For each shekel he lent he's extracted ten,
  But still keeps her down in the hole;
    And makes old John Bull
    A convenient tool
    To roam o'er the land
    With a gun in his hand
  To punish the evils of Pharaoh's rule.

The tables are turned and Israel is free,
  'Tis the Egyptians who suffer from "bonds;"
And in bonds that people is like to be
  For they can't make snakes out of wands!
The Jews make the most of heaven's decree
To spoil the Egyptians—the Egyptians are spoiled;
But where one would like the Jews to be foiled
Is in reading the phase as a wider description,
And treating us all as if we were Egyptian.

TEUTON.

THE most important newspaper of the Dissenters in England, the Christian World of London, recently contained a significant leading article acknowledging that the prayer-meeting had fallen into decadence there, and that there was little probability of the revival of interest in it. The Christian Union of this city, representing religious denominations in the United States of a like faith, says that the decadence of the prayer-meeting is as marked here as in England.

Popular Science Catechism.

From Life.

"What is this?" "This, darling, is a sweet and holy Sabbath bell."

"It seems to be large." "Yes, dear, it weighs about six tons."

"My! then it must be capable of some noise?" "Some little noise—yes, dear."

"But who is the solemn old gentleman working the rope in that perfunctory way?" "He is the pastor of the church that owns the bell, darling."

"But I never knew that pastors rang bells?" "Well, he has dyspepsia, and he is trying by exercise to work it off."

"And who is that poor gentleman in bed?" "He is a quiet and orderly citizen who now livs near the church."

"He seems to be excited?" "Yes, for a week he has been under treatment for insomnia, hyperæsthesia, neuralgia, and a few other diseases, and is threatened with angina pectoria and locomotor ataxia."

"Well?" "Well, his doctor told him his only hope was in 'absolute quiet.'"

"Well?" "Well, to secure 'absolute quiet' he moved next door to the parson's house."

"Gracious! And got under the big bell?" "Apparently so, my precious."

"But does the poor, benevolent, humane, and Christian pastor know what suffering his bell is causing?" "He does."

"Then why does he ring it?" "Because bell ringing is 'a good old custom.'"

"But burning witches, racking heretics, traveling by ox-team, and treating smallpox with sulphur and onions were good old customs, too?" "Yes, dear. But several centuries ago bells were used to call people to church."

"But people nowadays hav watches?" "Yes."

"And clocks?" "Certainly."

"And church advertisments and pious timetables in the wicked morning papers?" "Of course, darling."

"Then everybody who wants to go to church knows just when to go, without all that metallic fuss?" "Certainly."

"Then why the pendulous uproar?" "To punish those lazy sinners who criminally overwork themselvs during the week, and are hardened enough to want to sleep Sundays."

"Oh! then it is a penal institution?" "Slightly."

"But that poor nervous invalid who is catching the devil—will he not die?" "Unless he has 'absolute quiet' he will."

"Cannot his friends find a quieter place for him than between the parson's house and the church?" "Oh, yes."

"Where?" "Between a summer garden and a boiler factory."

Agents for The Truth Seeker.

JAMES ASHMAN, Salt Lake City, Utah.
J. F. BURR, 449 Main street, Hartford, Ct.
W. B. COOKE, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto, Can.
D. F. KEELER, Park City, Utah.
FERDINAND PFISTER, Nashville, Tenn.
W. F. REYBOULD, Salt Lake City, Utah.
Dr. J. H. RHODES, 505 1-2 No. 8th st., Phila., Pa.
A. M. STEVENS, 222 Beaver ave., Allegheny City, Pa.
Mrs. ELMINA D. SLENKER, Snowville, Va.
D. WOOLF, 620 No. 5th st., St. Louis, Mo.
J. S. MANSFIELD, Tucson, Arizona.
A. BERENZ, 140 Montgomery st., San Francisco, Cal.
JOSEPH MARSH, Northampton, Mass.
CHAS. S. COBURN, 123 Essex st., Lawrence, Mass.
M. V. THOMAS, 324 W. Lorimer st., Denver, Col.
S. B. WRIGHT, 385 Larimer st., Denver, Col.
THO'S FOREMAN, 1414 Chicago st., Omaha, Neb
S. D. MOORE, Adrian, Mich. Box 465.
DR. J. L. YORK, San Jose, Cal.
C. S. ROWLEY, Jackson, Mich.
JOSEPH L. ANDREWS, Corning, Iowa.

The American and New York News Companies will furnish the paper to news dealers upon application.

ANOTHER GREAT WORK!

JESUS CHRIST A FICTION

Founded upon the Life of

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.

How the Pagan Priests of Rome Originated Christianity.

Transcribed by SPIRIT FARADAY, late Electrician and Chemist of the Royal Institution, London, England.

Price, boards, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Address: THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

FARADAY PAMPHLETS.

No. 1.—The Relation of the Spiritual to the Material Universe; the Law of Control.
Two papers given in the interest of Spiritual Science, by Spirit FARADAY, of England. Price, 15 cts.

No. 2.—Origin of Life;
Or, Where Man Comes From. The Evolution of the Spirit from Matter through Organic Processes; or, How the Spirit Body Grows. By Spirit FARADAY. Price 10 cents.

No. 3.—The Development of the Spirit After Transition.
The Origin of Religions. By Spirit FARADAY. Price, 10 cents.

No. 4.—The Process of Mental Action;
Or, How We Think. By Spirit FARADAY. 15 cents.

No. 5.—Jesus Christ a Fiction.
Founded on the Life of Apollonius of Tyana. How the Pagan Priests of Rome originated Christianity. Translated by the late M. FARADAY. 208 pages. Price, bound, 75 cents. Paper, 50 cents. Postage, 5 cents.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit Life.
Medium, ATHALDINE SMITH, Oswego, N. Y. Price, 20 cents.

No. 1.—Experiences of Samuel Bowles.
Late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in Spirit Life; or, Life As He Now Sees It from a Spiritual Standpoint. Written through the mediumship of CARRIE E. S. TWING, of Westfield, N. Y. 20 cents.

No. 2.—Contrasts in Spirit Life:
And Recent Experiences of SAMUEL BOWLES, late editor of the Springfield, Mass., Republican, in the first five spheres. Also a thrilling account of the late President Garfield's reception in the spirit world. Written through the hand of CARRIE E. S. TWING, Westfield, N. Y. Price, 50 cents.

WETTSTEIN'S

JEWELRY STORE,

ROCHELLE, ILL.

Established 1857. Beats the World.

There is not another town three times the size of Rochelle that can show so large and beautiful a stock of fine gold and silver watches, fine gold and plated chains, charms, necklaces, and lockets, bracelets; plain gold, diamond, pearl, turquois, and fancy stone rings; solid silver and plated ware; optical goods, gold pens, accordions, pocket and table cutlery, guns, revolvers, shears, etc., as WETTSTEIN'S.

Square dealing, enterprise, adaptation, accurate judgment, best of taste in buying, steady application during twenty-five years, best of watch-work, and LOWEST PRICES AT ALL TIMES, hav done it.

If you hav a watch that no one else can put in perfect order, send it to me. If you hav no watch, send to me for prices, and I will save you money. If you want a chain, necklace, ring, solid silver or plated spoons, castor, spectacles, opera glass, etc., send to me for prices and description, and I will convince you.

REFERENCES: Mayor and City Council, officers of Rochelle banks.

GOODS SENT TO ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

LACY'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

"NATURE'S HARMONY,"

Of evolutionary theory, solving the problem of life, and advocating the perpetuation of spiritual identity, demonstrating from scientific standpoint. Neatly bound in muslin. Price, $1.00.

"STAR LAKE ROMANCE."

A poem of love and rivalry, written in view of discussing Christianity vs. Infidelity. The arguments are rendered by the characters of the story, in their colloquies, and the reader is left as umpire. 200 pages, bound in muslin, gilt and embossed. Price, $1.50.

Both of the above works contain the author's portrait. Address ARTHUR J. LACY, 28tf Nirvana, Lake Co., Mich.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25
Including, "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child;" "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois;" "The Great Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George P. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, $1,00; cloth, $2.00.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of

A Scene at the Death-bed of

THOMAS PAINE.

DID BISHOP FENWICK WRITE IT?

18 pp. Handsomely printed and bound, Price, 5 cents. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SKETCH OF THE.

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF SALADIN.

(W. STEWART ROSS.)

A very interesting biography of a remarkable man Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By MARTEN HAUG, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By LUDWIG FEUERBACH. Translated from the German by GEORGE ELIOT. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By HALSEY R. STEVENS, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. MIDDLETON. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. GROTE, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By JOHN E. BURTON. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of BARON D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by CHARLES MORAN. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," COLLINS and WATTS. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By WM. MCDONNELL, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. SARA A. UNDERWOOD. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. SCHLESINGER, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, New York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. DORSEY. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusivly that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge CHAS. B. WAITE. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By DEAN DUDLEY. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By EDWARD W. SEARING. 15 cents.

RELIGION THE GIBRALTAR
OF THE
World as Now Constituted.
By Geo. T. Bondies.

And a Lecture by W. T. Purviance,
STYLED
Exceptions to the Character of Jesus Christ Considered as a Gentleman.

A Pamphlet of Sixty-six Pages, Large Print.
Price, Twenty-five Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
6m9 33 Clinton Place, N. Y

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Me.

THE PERRY
Piano and Organ Co,
No. 352 North Main Street,
Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Specially Offer to Sell Direct on a Contract. Have the latest and best inventions, and want them fully tested before purchasing.
Write for Catalogues and Terms.
10teom14 J. R. PERRY, Supt.

SKETCH OF THE
LIFE AND CHARACTER OF CHARLES WATTS.
BY W. STEWART ROSS.
Price 10 cents. Address, THE TRUTH SEEKER.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLET & Co., Portland, Me.

ANCIENT MAN IN AMERICA,
INCLUDING
Works in Western New York and other States, together with Structures in Central America.

By FREDERICK LARKIN, M.D.
Member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Neatly Printed, with Numerous Illustrations. 290 Pages.
Price, Cloth $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
Real Blasphemers.
BY JOHN R. KELSO, A. M.

Showing that the writers of and believers in the Bible, and not the deniers of its truth, are the ones who really do injustice to the character of God, if a God exists.
IN SIX LECTURES.
Price, Fifty Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

"ANTICHRIST."
Proving conclusivly that
THE STORY OF JESUS CHRIST
His birth, life, trial, execution, etc.—is a myth.
Price, $2.00. TRUTH SEEKER Office. 33 Clinton Place, New York

TRUTH:
A Poem in Three Parts.
BY E. N. KINGSLEY.
Dedicated to Truth Seekers, Spiritualists, Skeptics, Reformers, Practical Atheists, and Impracticable Christians.
Containing a picture of the
JEWISH JEHOVAH.
As Described by the Bible.
"There went up a smoke out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled with it" (Psalms xviii, 8).
40 pp. Handsomely executed. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

LIFE-SIZE
LITHOGRAPH
OF
D. M. BENNETT.
Heavy Plate Paper,
SUITABLE FOR FRAME OR WITHOUT FRAME.
Sent by Mail for Fifty cents.
ADDRESS THIS OFFICE

LADIES' MAGNETIC JACKET. Price, $18.

THE EUREKA
MAGNETIC CLOTHING
CURES EVERY FORM OF DISEASE WITHOUT MEDICIN.

THE
EUREKA MAGNETIC INSOLE
CURES COLD OR MOIST FEET.

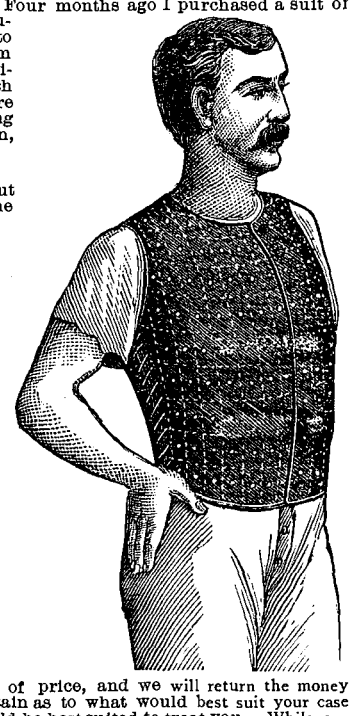
Sent to any address upon receipt of $1.00. EVERY PAIR GUARANTEED. Pamphlets and all information by letter or in person free of charge. Send for Illustrated Pamphlet.

Address all communications to
DR. L. TENNEY,
324 Race Street, cor. Ninth,
Cincinnati, Ohio

TESTIMONIALS:
Read the following testimonials, and be convinced that our claims are correct in every particular, and that your ailments can be eradicated without the aid of MEDICIN. THESE APPLIANCES ARE THE ACME OF PERFECTION:

Remarkable Cure of Paralysis in One Week.
CINCINNATI, Dec. 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: As I feel greatly indebted to you for the benefit I hav received from your treatment, and the use of your Magnetic appliances, I can say without hesitation to those afflicted as I hav been that the effect was simply marvelous. Two weeks ago I was stricken with paralysis in my right arm and could not use it at all, but after wearing a suit of your MAGNETIC CLOTHING for one week, can use it quite as well as ever. I hav also been troubled with Dyspepsia and Kidney Complaint for a number of years, from which I hav suffered intensely, and, although doctoring all the time, never found but temporary relief. Since putting on your appliances I hav experienced great benefit, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav in the past two weeks, will soon be well. I would, therefore, recommend to those suffering as I hav your Magnetic appliances as the only means of effecting a sure cure. Yours respectfully,
WM. H. CLEMMER,
No. 80 Eastern avenue.

Remember that the same appliances which will effect a cure in a case of Paralysis will at the same time eradicate CATARRH or DYSPEPSIA in the same patient. We do not, like the Old School Physician, change medicins every day until, after dosing the patient almost to death, he may possibly strike something (if he is very skilful) that brings relief for the time being.



Neuralgia of the Heart of Six Years Standing Cured in Three Weeks.
SHULLSBURG, WIS., Dec. 11, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY—Dear Sir: After wearing one of your MAGNETIC VESTS for about three weeks, I was entirely cured of Neuralgia of the Heart and Side, which had been a source of misery to me for the last six years. I had tried numerous remedies before without benefit, but as soon as I put on the MAGNETIC VEST I got relief instantly. With unbounded gratitude, I remain
Yours respectfully,
H. A. BROWN.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been under drug treatment for eight years with nervous prostration and female weakness:
OSBORN, O., Dec. 15, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY: Your letter just received; also the Clothing on Tuesday last. Fitted perfectly. FELT BETTER FROM THE FIRST HOUR I HAD THEM ON. Am not joking, and if I improve as rapidly as I hav since Tuesday, will soon be well. Will report again soon. Respectfully yours, E. J. K.

This lady reports herself entirely cured in less than six weeks after putting on the garments, and, although in bed, unable to get out, when applied, she nevertheless was able to ride twenty miles in two days after the application. The lady's name can be had upon application at this office, by anyone desiring to communicate with her.

Ladies, read the following testimony from a lady who had been suffering for two years with an Ovarian Tumor, and who had been told that nothing but the knife would save her life, and the chances were as 9 to 1 against recovery. In four months' time she is perfectly well, and has not taken a dose of medicin since putting on the appliances. Consult us when your physician tells you he can do nothinog for you; it will pay you.

SHULLSBURG, WIS., November 19, 1882.
DR. L. TENNEY, Dear Sir: About two years ago my health began to fail me; I became nervous, lost all desire for food, and, in fact, began to fail rapidly, so that I became alarmed and consulted several physicians of St. Louis, at which place I was then stopping, all of whom declared that I had an Ovarian Tumor, and that the only thing that would save my life would be the knife. About six months ago I grew rapidly worse, and had about made up my mind to take the only course that seemed left to me, and submit to an operation, when my attention was called to the Eureka Magnetic Appliances. As a drowning man will catch at a straw, so did I catch at this faint hope of a cure. Four months ago I purchased a suit of your appliances. From the very first I felt invigorated, the tumor, which had extended entirely across my abdomen, began to decrease, my pains became less from day to day, until now I am as well as I ever was in my life. Since putting on the appliances I hav not taken a single dose of medicin. My bowels, which before were constipated, are now regular. I would therefore cheerfully recommend them to anyone suffering as I hav, believing hat they will do all and more than you claim for them. I remain,
Gratefully yours, MRS. MARY J. STEWART.

Remember that these appliances are not worn next the skin, but over the under-garment, and, unlike all other appliances in the market, they impart no shocks and leaves no sores.

PRICE LIST.

Nerve and Lung Invigorators,	$ 6.00
Gentlemen's Belts,	6.00
Ladies' Abdominal Belts,	6.00
Sciatic Appliances, each,	5.00
Leg Belts, each,	4.00
Knee Caps, each,	3.00
Wristlets, each,	1.50
Sleeping Caps,	4.00
Ladies Jacket,	18.00
Gentlemen's Vests,	15.00
Superfine Insoles,	1.00
Children's garments upon application.

Any of the above garments sent to any address upon receipt of price, and we will return the money if they are not as represented in every respect. If you are uncertain as to what would best suit your case send us word stating symptoms, and we will advise you what would be best suited to treat you. While our appliances are offered at less than one-third of what others are selling worthless appliances for, yet we will guarantee that the magnetic quality is a hundred fold superior to any other appliance ever offered the public, and will outlast the garments themselvs. Every magnet is put through a particular process, and hav raised five times their own weight six months after being magnetized, while not a single appliance in the market will attract the smallest particle of iron, the majority of such worthless appliances having so-called magnets made of material no better than hoop-iron, and not capable of retaining magnetism for a moment. All of our garments are made from the very best material for the purpose, and will outlast any and all other garments now before the public. Every magnet is arranged in the garments upon scientific principles, and not haphazard as in all the others. We offer you therefore

The Only Scientific Magnetic Appliance Ever Constructed.
And challenge comparison with any of the so-called magnetic garments now offered under that head. At the same time the application of labor-saving machinery in our manufacture enables us to offer them at about

ONE-THIRD THE PRICE HERETOFORE CHARGED,
So that we can say with truth, None are so poor that they cannot procure them, being but a trifle higher than ordinary clothing.
Remember that we are offering you the cheapest and best magnetic appliances in the market, and if upon receiving the garments they do not meet your expectation, return them at our expense and we will refund your money.

Ladies' Abdominal Jackets and Gentlemen's Vests are made to order, and a fit guaranteed.
AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN IN THE UNITED STATES. LIBERAL COMMISSIONS ALLOWED
Address for further information, Dr. L. Tenney,
324 Race Street, cor. of 9th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian.
History of Christianity:
Comprising all that relates to the Progress of the Christian Religion in "THE HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE," and
A VINDICATION
Of some Passages in the 15th and 16th Chapters.
By EDWARD GIBBON, Esq.
With A LIFE OF THE AUTHOR, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars.
Handsome 12 mo, 864 pp. Cloth. With Engravings. $2.00
Published by PETER ECKLER, 35 Fulton Street, N. Y.

The Labarum of Constantine.

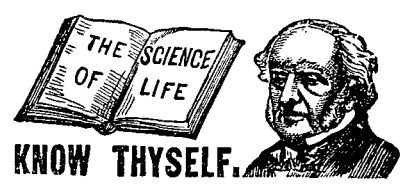
"By this sign thou shalt conquer!"

This volume contains Gibbon's Theological writings, separate from his Historical and Miscellaneous works. It shows when, where, and how Christianity originated; who were its founders; and what was the character, sentiments, manners, numbers, and condition of the primitive Christians.
Gibbon's Vindication of the 15th and 16th chapters of his History from the attacks of his Christian opponents, is reprinted verbatim from the original edition of his Miscellaneous Works, edited by Lord Sheffield, in 1796. It effectually and forever silenced his detractors; who, being vanquished in argument, unhesitatingly accused Gibbon of infidelity!
All that can be said by Christians in regard to the Origin of Christianity is reprinted from the valuable notes of DEAN MILMAN, WENCK, GUIZOT, an ENGLISH CHURCHMAN, (the learned editor of BOHN'S edition of Gibbon), and other eminent Christian historians.
☞ Among the Illustrations will be found representations of the principal divinities of the Pagan mythology.
For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.
6t 15



DR. FELLOWS
SHAKER REMEDY
A REGULARLY educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove,
Cures all forms of PRIVATE, CHRONIC and SEXUAL DISEASES,

Spermatorrhœa and Impotency,
As the result of self-abuse in youth, sexual excesses in maturer years, or other causes, and producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions, (night emissions by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective Memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, &c., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an EXTERNAL APPLICATION in from 30 to 60 days. No medicine taken. It has never been known to fail!

Middle-Aged and Old Men.

There are many at the age of thirty to sixty who are troubled with too frequent evacuations of the bladder, often accompanied by a slight smarting or burning sensation, and a weakening of the system in a manner the patient cannot account for. On examining the urinary deposits a ropy or cotton-like sediment, or sometimes small particles of albumen will appear, or the color will be of a thin or milkish hue, again changing to a dark and torpid appearance, which plainly shows that the semen passes off with the urine. It is the second stage of Seminal Weakness, and causes wasting of the system and a dejected and haggard appearance, as you see here in cut. There are many men who die of this difficulty, ignorant of the cause. Dr. Fellows' External Remedy will bring about a perfect cure in all such cases, and a healthy restoration of the genito-urinary organs.
☞ Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable and correspondence strictly confidential.

"PRIVATE COUNSELOR"
Sent to any address, securely sealed, for two three-cent stamps, treating on Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, giving its cause, symptoms, horrible effects, and cure, followed by strong testimonials, headed by an affidavit as to their genuineness. Should be read by all. ☞ Remember a radical cure is certain. Address, plainly, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, Vineland, New Jersey, and say in what paper you saw this advertisement.

MANHOOD!

KNOW THYSELF.
A Book for Every Man.
Young, Middle-aged, and Old.
The untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase and read the new medical work published by the Peabody Medical Institute, Boston, entitled the Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. It is not only a complete and perfect treatise on Manhood, Exhausted Vitality, Nervous and Physical Debility, Premature Decline in man Errors of Youth, etc., but it contains one hundred and twenty-five prescriptions for acute and chronic diseases, each one of which is invaluable, so proved by the author, whose experience for 21 years is such as probably never before fell to the lot of any physician. It contains 300 pages, bound in beautiful embossed covers, full gilt, embellished with the very finest steel engravings, guaranteed to be a finer work in every sense—mechanical, literary, or professional—than any other work retailed in this country for $2.50, or the money will be refunded in every instance. Price only $1.25. Gold Medal awarded the author by the National Medical Association. Illustrated sample sent on receipt of six cents. Send now
Address PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, or Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience. 1y38

RUPTURES CURED by
my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

FIFTY YEARS' SUCCESS.
SHAKER EYE AND EAR BALSAM.
For all afflictions of the above organs.
Dimness, Inflammation, Soft Cataract, and Roaring etc., of the Ears.
30 cents per box.
Try us once, and find entire relief.
1y18 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

Gems of Thought.

SOMETHING which befalls you may seem a great misfortune; you meditate over its effects on you personally, and begin to think that it is a chastisment or a warning, or a this or that or the other of profound significance, and that the angels in heaven hav left their business for a little while that they may watch its effect on your mind. But giv up this egotistic indulgence of your fancy, examin a little what misfortunes greater a thousandfold are happening every second to twenty times worthier persons, and your self-consciousness will change into pity and humility, and you will know yourself so far as to understand that "there hath nothing overtaken thee but what is common to man."—John Ruskin.

THEN let us cheerfu' acquiesce;
Nor make our scanty pleasures less,
By pining at our state,
And, even should misfortunes come,
I here who sit hae met wi' some,
An's thankfu' for them yet.
They gie the wit of age to youth;
They let us ken oursel';
They make us see the naked truth,
The real good and ill.
Though losses and crosses
Be lessons right severe,
There's wit there ye'll get there
Ye'll find nae ither where. —Burns.

WE cannot serve God in the manner we serve them who cannot do without such service; and, therefore, the only idea we can hav of serving God is that of contributing to the happiness of the living creation that God has made. This cannot be done by retiring ourselvs from the society of the world and spending a reciuse life in selfish devotion.—Paine.

OUR mothers can recollect when, if the butter did not come in the churn, it was because the cream had been bewitched. The day has not wholly passed away when, in some localities, an appalling catastrophe is a judgment from heaven. One reads of, if he does not remember, the time when it took a man of courage to pass a church-yard at night, because voices might be heard, lights seen, and other strange things might happen, which no physical cause was for a moment supposed to explain. From this stage of superstition and credulity, the first step gained was for a few bold thinkers to convince themselvs by slow degrees that for every physical event there is a physical explanation if you look for it.—Rev. S. C. Beach.

WE knew it would be said. We were perfectly sure of it. We wanted to see which paper would say it first. It is the Presbyterian: "And what a place the Ring theater of Vienna was from which to go into the opening eternity!" Please tell us why, Friend P., Lincoln was shot in a theater, Garfield in a railroad station. Did it make any difference in the destiny of either?—Christian Register.

MEN, I think, hav been much the same for natural endowments in all times. Fashion, disciplin, and education hav put eminent differences in the ages of several countries, and made one generation much different from another in arts and sciences. But truth is always the same; time alters it not, nor is it the better or worse for being of ancient or modern tradition. Many were eminent in former ages of the world for their discovery and delivery of it; but though the knowledge they left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasure; they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after ages, and so shall we.—Locke's Conduct of the Understanding.

GREAT men are not always wise; neither do the aged understand judgment. Therefore I said, Hearken to me; I also will show mine opinion.—Job xxxii, 9, 10.

THE popes, when they assumed the power of the apostles, laid claim also to their infallibility; and in this they were consistent. Protestant churches renounce with all their might this infallibility, whilst they apply to themselvs every expression that describes it, and will not part with a jot of the authority which is built upon it.—Paley's Subscription to Articles of Faith.

THE right of private judgment may in a Protestant country be reduced to a nullity. It is true that men are sent to the scriptures; but they are told before they go that they will be driven from the church on earth and in heaven, unless they find in the scriptures the doctrins which are embodied in the popular creed. They are told, indeed, to inquire for themselvs; but they are told at what points inquiry must arrive; and the sentence of exclusion hangs over them if they happen to stray, with some of the best and wisest men, into forbidden paths. Now, this Protestant liberty is, in one respect, more irritating than papal bondage. It mocks as well as enslaves us; it talks to us courteously as friends and brethren, while it rivets our chains. It invites and even charges us to look with our own eyes, but with the same breath warns us against seeing anything which orthodox eyes hav not seen before us.—Dr. Channing.

AS regards the extent to which the improvement of natural knowledge has remodeled and altered what may be termed the intellectual ethics of men—what are among the moral convictions most fondly held by barbarous and semi-barbarous people? They are the convictions that "authority" is the soundest basis of belief; that merit attaches to the readiness to believe; that the doubting disposition is a bad one, and skepticism a sin; that when good authority has pronounced what is to be believed, and faith accepted it, reason has no further duty. There are many excellent persons who yet hold by those principles, and it is not my present business, nor intention, to discuss their views. All I wish to bring clearly before your minds is the unquestionable fact that the improvement of natural knowledge is effected by methods which directly giv the lie to all these convictions and assume the exact reverse of each to be true.—Huxley's Lay Sermons.

'TIS not the many oaths that make the truth,
But the plain single vow that is vowed true.
—Shakspere.

Odds and Ends.

"TALK about my war record," said an Arkansaw orator at a political meeting. "My war record is a part of the state's history. Why, gentlemen, I carried the last confederate flag through this town." "Yes," replied a bystander, "for I was here at the time." "Thank you for your fortunate recollection," gratefully exclaimed the orator. "It is pleasant to know that there still liv some men who move aside envy and testify to the courage of their fellow-beings. As I say, gentlemen, my war record is a part of the state's history, for the gentleman here will tell you that I carried the last confederate flag through this town." "That's a fact," said the man who had witnessed the performance. "He carried the last confederate flag through this town, and he carried it so blamed fast you couldn't hav told whether it was a Union jack or a small-pox warning."

IN front of a Detroit butcher shop yesterday a butcher sat cleaning a revolver. It was a rusty old "Colt," which had not been in use for years, and was to be put in order and traded off. A shoemaker came along directly and observed: "Of course there'll be an accident." "Y-e-s, I presume so." "It isn't loaded, is it?" "Oh, no." "But will it go off?" "It will." "I never see a revolver without wanting to handle it. Let me look at that weapon. Ah! I'm satisfied now that it doesn't contain any stray bullets. Do you suppose you could hit my foot at that distance?" "Certainly I could. Now if she was loaded I'd take a dead sight like that and pull the trigger, and——" The shoemaker jumped two feet high and yelled like an Indian, and when he came down he danced, and kicked, and galloped around until people thought him crazy. It was only after a crowd had collected and cornered him up in the shop that any one found out the trouble. The butcher had put a bullet along the sole of his foot close enough to draw blood. "I told you she'd go off," howled the shoemaker, as he sat with his boot in his hand. "And didn't I agree with you?" innocently responded the butcher.

THE OTHER FELLOW'S.

The sun had retired through the golden gates
To his bed in the gilded west.
And the moon was tilting her silver horn,
When the girl that I love best
Was slowly swinging around with me
In the waltz's passionate whirl;
And my heart kept time to the fairy tread
Of my girl, my beautiful girl.

The stars shone out on the dusky night
Like the pin near her milk-white throat,
And her voice was tender, and sweet, and low,
And her hands—but how could I note
Every charming turn of form and face,
When one most bewildering curl
Fell over her brow, and kissed the white lids
Of my girl, my very best girl?

She breathed her love on my tender soul
Like a sigh from the land of the blest,
And I looked in her eyes with a right that was mine;
And then—shall I tell you the rest?
We return'd to the room, and the music swelled out,
And again she assayed the mad whirl;
But another man had her—the son-of-a-gun!
Oh! my girl, my beautiful girl!
And he kept her. —Texas Siftings.

RELIGIOUS REFLECTION.

Come er long an' put on de crown
An' put on de flowin' robe,
Yer kin praise de Lawd in sich a gown
An' laugh at de biles ob Job.

I fell from grace, but now I'se back—
Dun gone in de fold wid de lam',
An' I cuts a caper wid a mighty fine knack
As I eats de religious ham.

Ebery man oughter b'long ter de church
Ter keep outen de way ob sin,
Fur den he'll not be lef' in de lurch,
But will shine like a new breas'pin.

My ole mars' was a mighty bad man,
An' he nebber would sing an' pray,
An' whar' he's gone he needs a fan
Fur wid him it's a mighty hot day.

But marster's wife was a good ole soul
An' she prayed ter de Lawd on high,
An' now she's got de crown ob gol',
An' libs on de heabenly pie.

I'se so good now dat'll steal no mo'
While I stan's on de gospel boat,
But once in a while I'll step on de sho'
When I sees a nice fat shoat.

"GEMLEN," said the president, as the meeting came to order with 230 members present and Elder Toots ready for a two hours' nap, "let your conversashun be plain an' to de pint. Say what you mean, and mean what you say. I has noticed a tendency on de part part of sartin members of dis club to affect de Shaksperean style. I want it stopped. It doan' sound right in a man applyin' whitewash or stove-blackin'. How many members of dis club know de meanin' of de term 'prognosticate toward the individuality,' an' yet I h'ar it uttered a dozen times a day. What's de use of a cull'd man airnin' ten shillings a day remarkin' dat he expects to condescend to de irresponsible endeavor, when he kin just as well observe that blackberries am down to 15 cents per quart? If any of you has an ideah dat de use of such words as bombastic, delirium tremens, Cicero, or inconsistency, elevates you in de mind of your naybor, you is greatly mistaken. When a man comes to me an' wants to borry two tablespoonfuls of eighty-cent green tea, kase de preacher am gwine to be at his house to supper, let him spit it right out in plain English language, instead of beatin' around the woods an' luggin' in such words as abdicate, reaction, Cæsarism, and cahoots. If I had a son twenty y'ars ole, an' he should come home with his whitewash brush on his shoulder, an' inform me dat de gratificashun ob the incontestible syntax had withdrawn its bombardment of de planetary desideration, I should riz up an' put my No. 12 agin him with such auxiliary reprehensibility dat he would feel lame fur six weeks. Let us now purceed to bizness.—Detroit Free Press.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separately, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, LL. D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS EINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. 75 cents.

SPIRITUALISTIC WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Achsa W. Sprague's and Mary Clark's Experiences in the First Ten Spheres of Spirit-Life. Paper, 20 cents.

After Death; the Disembodiment of Man, The World of Spirit, Its Location, Extent, Appearance, Inhabitants, Customs, Sex and its uses there. By P. B. RANDOLPH. Price, $2.00.

After Dogmatic Theology, What? Materialism, or, a Spiritual Philosophy and Natural Religion. By GILES B. STEBBINS. Cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

Agassiz and Spiritualism: Involving the Investigation of Harvard College Professors in 1857. By ALLEN PUTNAM, author of "Bible Marvel-Workers," "Spirit Works," "Natty a Spirit," etc. This sterling work combines in itself the characteristics of memoir, essay, and review. The matter considered is of vital interest to the cause of Spiritualism, and readers cannot fail of being pleased with the treatment which Mr. PUTMAN accords to it. Price, 25 cents.

Angel of Horeb. By M. B. CRAVEN. A Critical Review of Biblical Inspiration and Divinity. Paper, 10 cents.

Angel Voices from the Spirit-World. Essays taken indiscriminately from a large amount written under angel influence. By JAMES LAWRENCE, Dial and Transcribing Medium, and Reputed Author. Cloth, pp. 400; $1.00.

An Hour With the Angels; or, A Dream of the Spirit Life. By A. BRIGHAM. Price, 50 cents.

Answers to Charges in General Belief. By Mr. and Mrs A. E. NEWTON. Price, 15 cents.

Armageddon; or, the Overthrow of Romanism and Monarchy. By S. D. BALDWIN. Price, $1.50.

Baptism of Fire. An Autobiographical Sketch. By LUCIFER. Price, 30 cents.

Battle-Ground of the Spiritual Reformation. By S. B. BRITTAN, M.D. The latest and best defense of Spiritualism—at once a text-book and a vindication. An armory from which Spiritualists will draw weapons for years. Price, $2.

Better Views of Living; or, Life According to the Doctrin, "Whatever Is Is Right. By Dr. A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.

Beyond the Breakers. A Story of the Present Day. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. Finely illustrated. This story of village life in the West is, in its narrow and interior meaning, a profoundly spiritual story, through and by whose numberless incidents, scenes, characters, and narrations is illustrated the great truth of spirit-life and communion. Cloth, $1.50.

Beyond the Veil. Dictated by the Spirit of P. B. RANDOLPH, through the mediumship of Mrs. E. H. M'Dougal and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. Cloth, with steel-plate portrait of P. B. Randolph. Price, $1.50.

Biblical Chronology. By M. B. CRAVEN. Contrasting the Chronological Computations of the Hebrew and Septuagint Versions from Adam to Christ; Critical Essay on the Geographical Location of the Garden of Eden. Paper, 10 cents.

Bible in the Balance. A Text Book for Investigators. The Bible weighed in the balance with history, chronology, science, literature, and itself. With illustrations. By Rev. J. G. FISH. Cloth, $1.50

Bible Marvel-Workers, And the Power which helped or made them perform mighty works and utter inspired words; together with some personal traits and characteristics of prophets, apostles, and Jesus, or New Readings of "The Miracles." By ALLEN PUTNAM. Price, $1.25.

Book on Mediums; or, Guide for Mediums and Invocators. By ALLEN CARDEC. Price, $1.50.

Buddhism and Christianity Face to Face. By J. M. PEEBLES. A Discussion between a Buddhist priest and an English clergyman. Paper, 25 cents.

Chapters from the Bible of the Ages. Compiled by G. B. STEBBINS. Price, $1.50

Christianity Before the Time of Christ. By M. B. CRAVEN. With Quotations from the Ancient Sages and Fathers, showing the Historic Origin of Christian Worship. Paper, 25 cents.

Christ and the People. By A. B. CHILD. Price, $1.25.

Christ, the Corner-stone of Spiritualism. By J. M. PEEBLES. 10 cents.

Civil and Religious Persecutions in the State of New York. By THOMAS R. HAZARD. Paper, 10 cents.

Claims of Spiritualism. By a Medical Man. Price, 25 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 10. No. 39. | PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY M. W. BENNETT. | New York, Saturday, September 29, 1883. | NO. 33 CLINTON PLACE, NEAR BROADWAY. | $2.50 per year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. Mr. Henn is a minister in Georgia. Probably a lay preacher, suggests a Rochester punster.

IT is well that they do not burn heretics now. There would be demand for considerable fuel.—Sun.

JUDGING from the throngs at the beaches on Sunday during the season, the Sabbath would seem to be not so much the Lord's day as the landlord's day, says the editor of the Commercial Advertiser, who has been there.

IN Pere Hyacinth's church the deacons who pass the plate say "Thank you" to those who contribute. Good idea. In this country a man has more opportunity to say "Thank you" to the deacons for leaving him anything at all.

THE Methodists of Kentucky hav passed severe resolutions against the camp-meetings which encourage Sunday trains on the railroads. But without Sunday trains some of the camps would perpetually close their gates from lack of sufficient patronage.

A MOTHER who has a very bashful son, but for whom she says all the ladies express the greatest admiration, asks an editor how she can cure him of his aversion to the female sex. "Make a minister of him," replies a man who has used his eyes to some advantage.

AN exchange says that a clergyman in western Massachusetts recently gave a notice on Sunday that, owing to the severe illness of his brother, who was rapidly nearing his end, the evening services would be omitted. The choir immediately followed with the hymn commencing, "What cheering words are these?"

THE fact, says the Merchant Traveler, that John Slugger Sullivan is making thousands of dollars every week while the Y. M. C. A. of Philadelphia barely saved its building from the clutches of the sheriff, is a much stronger argument in favor of the Y. M. C. A. going into the slugging business than of John going into the Y. M. C. A.

PREACHER—"Why do you cry, my good woman?" Lady—"Because my husband who went away to Germany about five years ago treats me very badly." Preacher—"How's that?" Lady—"He writes me to come to him at once and bring the 'two' children along. Just think of it, the 'two,' and between you and me I've got four now."

THE Rochester Post-Express says it behooves the clergyman who is returning from Europe to remember just what ailment he was suffering from when his congregation sent him abroad to be cured. Nothing is so apt to excite suspicion as to hav the D.D., who went across to cure his consumption, return rejoicing in the removal of his neuralgic headaches.

A WICKED story from the Merchant Traveler: "Hav you made your peace with the world?" asked a minister of a dying man. "There's only one thing, sir, I'd like to do, and I could die happy," was the faint reply. "What is it, my friend? Speak quick, for you hav but a few moments left of earth." "Well, I'd like to kick the stuffin' out of Zeke Brown for beatin' me in that last hoss trade. I—I—"

SCENE: A Boston Sunday-school class. Teacher: "Johnny, who was the strongest man?" Johnny: "Sullivan." Teacher: "Why, Johnny, Samson was the strongest man." Johnny: "No he ain't." Teacher: "Why yes. He was so strong he slew ten thousand men in the Philistine's army with the jawbone of an ass." Johnny: "He may hav been the strongest man onst. Sullivan has slew everything that's ever stood up before him, an' I'll bet yer a nickle he'd not let a Philistine git away if he'd had the jawbone of an ass to sling around. Sullivan can clean out the whole United States army with his bare fists." The teacher finally admitted that Johnny was right and wondered why the revision committee hadn't substituted Sullivan's name for Samson.

THE preacher was a good man, an honest man, a zealous man, and a consistent man. That's why, according to the Kentucky State Journal, after he preached an hour and a half against "the great demon, money," he said: "We will now take up a collection for the benefit of your pastor; and I trust that not one in this congregation will disgrace him or himself so much as to not contribute liberally."

THE Boston Post in commenting on the deacons of the New Hampshire legislature amending the woodchuck law so that no bounty will be paid for a woodchuck killed on Sunday thinks "this will giv the boys Sunday to go fishing." The Post may be correct in so far as fishing is concerned, but confining ourselvs to the woodchuck question this new law is a premium on expert lying as to time of killing woodchucks. Well, fishing and lying go hand in hand anyway.

"MERCY!" exclaimed Deacon Jones, "see here! They say that the oyster supply is rapidly diminishing! What are we going to do at our festivals this winter? We shan't make enough to pay for lights and fuel, let alone the parson's salary." "Oh, don't be alarmed," replied Mrs. Smithson, the most prudent soul in the society; "don't be alarmed, deacon; I took the precaution to save an oyster over from last year. I guess it will carry us through, if we are careful with it."

ICE cream at a Methodist festival seems to be a very dangerous compound. Recently a lot of people were poisoned by eating ice cream at a Methodist festival at Union Springs, N. Y. This is the sixth case of poisoning by ice cream on record this summer and, strange as it may seem, they all occurred under the auspices of the Methodist church. It looks as though ice cream had a grudge against that denomination. If it has, the church festival will hav to confine itself to red lemonade of the circus brand—one lemon to a barrel of water kept cool by a big lump of glass.

THE Primitiv Baptists are holding a camp-meeting at Silver Creek, Georgia. News just comes of a peculiar interruption of services. Feeling had been wrought up to a high pitch by appeals of the preacher, when suddenly a Mrs. Nichols began a violent scene, denouncing every one around her. It was some minutes before it was discovered that she was quarreling instead of praying. So violent became her actions that the preacher stopped the services and hundreds of people assembled pressed around the excited woman for explanation, which she gave by pointing to her daughter, who was clinging to the arm of a well-known young gentleman of the neighborhood, whose attentions to the daughter were forbidden by the mother. Having in his possession a license and procuring the services of a friendly preacher, they crowded up to where the young lady and mother were, and, in an undertone, words of marriage were spoken before the old lady realized what was going on. The mother was taken out to one of the tents by friends and services were resumed.

THE Arkansaw Traveler relates this story: The other day the new minister, while making calls in the suburbs of the city, visited the house of Colonel Alfred Coledon, a well-known citizen. Colonel Coledon was at work in the garden a short distance from the house. He was dressed very plainly, of course—in fact, he looked very much like a day laborer. The minister passed him without speaking and entered the house. The colonel turned and watched the divine, while an expression closely resembling one of contempt settled on his face, and seemed to hang in dark folds from his bulging brow. Shortly after the minister entered, Mrs. Coledon, who is devoted to the church, came out and said: "Colonel, Brother Rinze is in the house and is going to pray with us." "I'll be blamed if he prays with me," the colonel replied. "He passed me just now in his high-headed way without even noticing me. Now he wants to pray with me, eh? Confound him, if he fools with me I'll wrap a hoop-pole around him. Fine preacher of the gospel! Takes me for a tramp, no doubt. You can go on and pray all day with him if you want to, but just count me out, if you please." The good woman was grieved, but knowing that argument would be useless, she went back into the house and was soon kneeling in devout prayer. Just about this time a cow jumped into the garden, and the colonel, calling his dog, hissed the animal on the invader. The dog barked furiously and chased the cow around the house. Her bell rang like a fire alarm, and, infuriated, she rushed on to the porch. The colonel seized a squash from which all healthfulness had departed, and threw it at the cow. The squash went through the window and struck the minister on the left temple, mashing all over him, and giving to his evangelical head a coloring that would hav driven him, had he appeared in such a plight, from any well-organized body of religionists. He sprang to his feet just in time to meet the cow, who, followed by the dog, rushed into the room. The cow knocked him down and tramped on him. He arose with great difficulty just as the animal, finding an outlet in any other way impossible, turned to go out. She knocked him down again, and pounded him in the back with her sharp hoofs. The colonel rushed to the rescue and apologized, and washed the minister's head; but the good man could not be induced to continue his prayer.

THE tissue of falsehoods in the following paragraph appeared in the Watchman (the Baptist paper of this city) on the 13th inst.: "The Paine memorial was and is not. A building for some years past known by that name, in honor of Thomas Paine, the apostle of what was formerly styled French Infidelity, is now named Appleton Chapel, and opened for Christian worship—as an extension of the work so long carried ou at the Warren street chapel. It is stated that the necessary funds hav been raised for the continuance of the work here, and there was a formal opening last week. If the original purpose of the building has come to an end, the end is reached sooner than was to hav been expected." What misrepresentations abound in the above article! The facts are, that the managers of Paine Memorial, ever true to their professions, are, and always hav been, willing to let a portion of the building to any good, responsible tenant; and the Warren street chapel, having had a division in its ranks, and turned off a faithful servant of many years' standing, he and his adherents came to Paine Memorial as to a house of refuge. We received them, not as their Christian brethren did, but bid them enter our premises with the hope that if they stopped long with us, they might see the difference between Liberal and Christian practices. We had a similar experience some years ago, when we leased a part of Paine Memorial as a chapel to the Day Star Baptist church—some of the Watchman's friends, probably, who after being treated like gentlemen for three or four years, failed to pay their rent, and we had to notify them to vacate, which they did, owing some three hundred dollars, which they hav not yet paid. The Appleton Chapel being more of a Liberal sect than the Day Star Baptist church, will no doubt prove better tenants and pay their rent. Paine Memorial still stands an honor to the Liberal cause and a testimony to the worth of Thomas Paine. Our liberality is evinced by the fact that Jews, Christians, Spiritualists, and Atheists occupy the premises together in harmony—each bearing with the other, and hearing the reason given by each for the faith or no faith that is within them. The object of the Watchman's bigoted attack upon the Paine Memorial is no doubt to injure it in the public estimation, and therefore, as its article may be extensivly published, we shall be obliged to any paper that will publish our reply or the substance of it.—Boston Investigator.

News of the Week.

GOV. BUTLER will run for re-election as governor of Massachusetts.

RUSSIA is making preparations for war alon the Austrian and German frontiers.

A COMET of considerable size and brilliancy is reported to be rapidly approaching the earth and sun.

A COLORED convention was held at Louisville, Ky., on the 24th. Fred. Douglass left Washington to attend.

THIRTY-EIGHT officers in the Russian army hav recently been arrested for connection with the Nihilist agitation.

THE large stables attached to the exposition at Pittsburgh, Pa., were destroyed by fire last Sunday. Several valuable horses and a stable boy were burnt.

THE wife of the Rev. A. W. Green, pastor of a Methodist church at Ithaca, N. Y., committed suicide last week by hanging. The act is attributed to ill-health.

MEMBERS of St. Stanislaus's church in Buffalo, N. Y., attempted to lynch their priest, the Rev. Father Pitass, one evening last week. Stolen funds caused the trouble.

FATHER KEARNEY, of Freeport, L. I., is under arrest for assault and battery on a hotel keeper. There is also a suit against Kearney for $10,000 damages for an immoral offense.

ONE hundred convicts in the Connecticut state prison were poisoned one day last week by eating some corned lamb. Some of them are in a precarious condition. The origin of the poison has not been traced.

JUDGE HOADLY, Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio, and who has been under medical treatment in Philadelphia, has recovered his health, and will soon return to Ohio to take an activ part in the canvass.

THE Germans of Brooklyn held on Wednesday evening a meeting which was announced in the posters as an "anti-fanatic" meeting. It grew out of the alleged persecution of Germans for violation of the Sunday law.

Two young men of Milwaukee recently determined to fight a bloody duel, but failing to get satisfaction with swords as weapons, they fell upon each other with bare fists, and fought until one of them had to be carried home.

IN Richmond county, Va., on Friday morning, the 21st., a negro named Archie Johnson was hanged by lynchers for attempting to outrage a white girl only six years of age, the daughter of a highly respected planter of that county.

THE gubernatorial campaign in Iowa is being conducted with unusual vigor this fall. The issues outlined are prohibition and a protectiv tariff on the Republican side, and license and tariff for revenue on the side of the Democrats.

A GREAT deal of the evidence in the Rose Ambler murder at Stratford, Conn., goes to show that the dead girl's lover was instrumental in causing her death. Blood stains hav been found on his clothing and upon the floor and lap-robe of his carriage.

THE ceremonies preceding the opening of the Council of the Roman Catholic Province of New York were held in St. Patrick's Cathedral in this city last Sunday. There was a good deal of attendant pomp and splendor. One lunatic was developed, but the ushers ejected her as soon as the symptoms of insanity manifested themselvs.

A MAN having a sufficient amount of religion to be denominated a crank, appeared at the White House in Washington, one day last week, and asked for an audience with the president. He said that he had come all the way from Colorado to crown the president king of America, which duty he said had been committed to his charge by the Lord Jesus Christ. The man gave his name as Portroit, and said he was a nativ of Germany. A policeman took him in charge.

Selections.

Early Man in America.

From the North American Review.

Who were the earliest inhabitants of America, and when did they liv? are questions which hav generally been approached solely from the point of view offered by discoveries in the United States, and, until within the last three or four years, hav been discussed only on the slender basis of the Calaveras skull and the implements found in gold-mining in California. In the following essay I propose to deal with them as portions of one great problem common to the Old and New Worlds, and to show that the first traces of man, as yet discovered, prove him to hav lived in the same low stage of culture on both sides of the Atlantic, at a time when the hands of the geological clock pointed to the same hour over the greater part of the world. The story of early man in America is a part of the greater story of the first appearance of man on the earth, so far as he has yet been revealed by modern discovery.

Before we enter into these questions, we must define clearly what is meant by the geological clock. In dealing with events recorded in documents, we not only know the relation of one event to another, and how long an event was in coming to pass, but we can accurately measure the intervals in terms of years. This obviously cannot be done without chronicles of some sort or another. In the great geological past outside history, we hav no such evidence of the flow of the years, and we can only arrange our events in due relation to each other, without knowledge either of the length of time necessary for each, or of the length of any of the intervals. Consequently we cannot fix a date, in the historical sense, for events which happened outside history, and cannot measure the antiquity of man in terms of years. The present rate of the retrocession of the Falls of Niagara, or of the deposit of Nile mud, or of stalagmite in caverns, or of the accumulation of the rocks themselvs, or of the movement of glaciers, hav been vainly used as natural chronometers, on the assumption that they hav been going on at the same rate through all the past, and hav been warranted never to stop, or to want winding up, or to go faster or slower than at the moment the observer was looking at them. Such attempts are so obviously futil that it is not a little strange to find them seriously made by men like Wallace and Mortillet. The antiquity of man is to be measured simply by an appeal to the succession of events in the geological record, by the changes in the face of nature, in climate, in geography, and in the forms of life.

The change in life has been so regular, definit, and orderly in the geological past, that it enables us to classify the rocks over the whole world into primary, secondary, and tertiary groups. In the last of these, the higher types of Mammalia become more and more specialized as we draw nearer to the frontiers of history; and their pedigrees, when traced from one period to another, assume the shape of genealogical trees, such as that which Professor Marsh has discovered for the horse. The living orders first appear in the Eocene, the living genera in the Miocene, a few living species in the Pliocene, while nearly all the living species come in in the Pleistocene division. Again, in the interval dividing the last from the Historic period, the domestic animals appear and the cultivated fruits, and this—the Prehistoric—gradually passes into the period embraced by the written records. The succession of events may be used as the figures on our dial-plate, marking the lapse of geological time in the Tertiary period, as follows: (1.) The Eocene period, in which the placental mammals now on the earth were represented by extinct allied forms belonging to existing families and orders. The order Primates, to which man belongs, is represented by creatures allied to the lemurs both in the Old and New Worlds. (2.) The Miocene, in which the alliance between living and extinct mammals is more close, and living genera appear. The Primates are represented by a higher division, the family of apes, in Europe and in the United States. (3.) The Pliocene, in which, for the first time, living mammalian species appear; but they are few in number compared with the extinct species. (4.) The Pleistocene, in which the living species are more abundant than the extinct among the Mammalia, and the Primates are represented by their highest development, the family of man. (5.) The Prehistoric, characterized by the present fauna and flora, being in possession of the regions in which they hav been known historically. Man has increased and multiplied on the earth, and is possessed of domesticated animals and cultivated fruits, and has acquired the arts of spinning, weaving, mining, and pottery making in the Old World, and gradually passed through the Neolithic, Bronze, and Iron stages of civilization. (6.) The Historic, or period covered by written records, which varies in each country, going back to 4000 B.C in Egypt, and in America to the time of Christopher Columbus. Were the extinct species taken into account, it would be seen that they fill up the interval separating one living form from another, and that they approximate to living species as they approach nearer to the present time.

It will be seen from the examination of the above periods that the inquiry into the antiquity of man is limited to the last four. The most highly specialized form in the animal kingdom cannot be looked for until the lower animals by which he is now surrounded made their appearance. We cannot imagin him to hav been living in the Eocene age, when animal life was not sufficiently differentiated to present us with living genera of placental mammals. Nor is there any probability of his having appeared on the earth in the Miocene, because of the absence of placental mammals belonging to living species. It is most unlikely that man should appear in a fauna in which there was no other living mammal. He belongs to a more advanced stage of evolution than that presented by the mid-Miocene of Thenay, in which flint splinters fashioned by man are said to hav occurred. Up to this time, the evolution of the animal kingdom had advanced no farther than the Simiadæ in the direction of man, and the apes then haunting the forests of Italy, France, and Germany, were the most highly organized types. We may also look at the question from another point of view. If man were upon the earth in the Miocene age, it is incredible that he should not hav become something else while those changes were going on in the conditions of life by which all the Miocene land mammalia hav been so profoundly affected that they hav either assumed new forms or been exterminated. It is impossible to believe that man should hav been an exception to the law of change. Nor in the succeeding Pliocene age can we expect to find traces of man upon the earth. The living placental mammals had only then begun to appear, and seeing that the higher animals hav invariably appeared in the rocks according to their place in the zoological scales, Fishes, Amphibians, Reptils, Placental Mammals, it is hardly reasonable to suppose that the highest of all should then hav been upon the earth. The few scored bones in the Pliocene strata of Italy, referred by Professor Capelini the work of Pliocene man, are considered by Evans and Mortillet to hav been marked by the teeth of the large sharks abundant in those seas. And if they be artificial it is not, in my opinion, proved that they were marked in the Pliocene age. "The fossil man of Denise" is of uncertain age, and other alleged cases of Pliocene man in Europe hav now been given up.

The question has, however, been revived in the United States by Professor Whitney, in his work on the Auriferous Gravels of California, and the existence of man in California, in the Pliocene age, has been accepted by such high authorities as Marsh, Le Conte, and others. It becomes, therefore, necessary for us to see how the facts will stand the test of criticism. In the first place, it is assumed that the auriferous gravels in the Sierras, with traces of man, which are in some places three hundred feet thick, and sometimes covered with ancient lava streams, are of Pliocene age. They are, however, proved by their fossils, identified by Dr. Leidy, to hav been deposited by the streams from the Miocene (Elotherium) age down to the present time. Among the animals we may note the skull of a mustang, identical with that of Mexico and California, which could not hav been buried in the gravels of Sierra county before the time of the Spanish conquest, when the living race of horses was introduced. Consequently the discovery of human remains in the auriferous gravels does not prove that man was an inhabitant of Pliocene America, even if it be allowed that they are of the same age as the strata in which they lie. There is, however, no evidence of this in any one instance. The objects themselvs point to a directly opposit conclusion. The stone mortars, pestles, polished stone axes, beads, etc., found at various depths, are identical with those scattered over the surface and used by the Indian tribes of California, described by Bancroft in his "Nativ Races of the Pacific States," and more recently by various writers in the seventh volume of the United States Geographical Survey under the direction of Captain Wheeler. The human bones are indistinguishable from those of the Red Indians. The famous Calaveras skull, according to Professor Wyman, is related to the Indian type, with a doubtful affinity with the Eskimos; it was obtained from a shaft sunk through three alternate layers of gravel and basalt, at a depth of one hundred and thirty-two feet from the surface, was associated with the remains of other individuals, and had been buried along with shell beads of the kind usually met with in Indian interments. Had these remains been found near the surface, they would hav been undoubtedly classified with the ordinary traces of Indians, and their occurrence at so great a depth is the sole cause of their being the object of special interest.

Nor hav we to go far to account for their presence at great depths. It is very strange that Professor Whitney should hav ignored the fact that mining operations had been carried on in those very districts long before the time of "the forties." "In 1849," writes Schoolcraft ("Archæology," vol. i, p. 105), "the gold-diggers at one of the mountain diggings, called Murphy's, were surprised, in examining a high, barren district of mountain, to find an old site of a mine, with a shaft two hundred and ten feet deep, at the bottom of which were a human skeleton, an 'altar,' and other remains of an ancient people, probably Indian." In other ancient mines in the Western states, as Dr. Southall has recently pointed out, human skeletons hav been met with which prove that gold mining was extensivly carried on long before the discovery of gold in the present century. The whole group of human remains, therefore, in the auriferous deposits, instead of proving the existence of Red Indians in California in the Pliocene age, belong to a comparativly modern period. Some are probably the results of interments which took place in deep mines, or in superficial deposits, while others hav found their way by accident into the auriferous gravels from the surface at various times. The famous ode of Bret Harte, in which he humorously puts down the Calaveras skull to a miner from Missouri—"But I'd take it kindly if you'd send the pieces home to old Missouri"—is true so far as the mining is concerned, and M. Simonin was not so wide of the mark as appears at first sight when he seriously followed Mr. Bret Harte in ascribing, in the Revue des Deux Mondes, the "Pliocene skull" to "un mineur Missourien." The remains, looked at purely from the archæological point of view, are Neolithic, and identical with those which unmistakably belong to the ancient Indian tribes of North America. We cannot seriously entertain the idea that mankind first appeared on the earth in the Neolithic stage of culture, identical, so far as we know, in every respect with the ancestors of the present Red Indians, at a time when there were but few living species of the higher mammalia, and that he lived in California before canyons from two to three thousand feet had been cut by the existing streams out of the solid rock. Neither in the New nor in the Old World is there any trace of Pliocene man revealed by modern discovery.

We come now in our inquiry to the succeeding period, when the higher Mammalia, now contemporary with man, appeared in force on the earth, and man himself may be reasonably looked for. We will take the point of view, first of all, offered by Europe. The Pleistocene, or Quaternary, period in Europe is characterized by the arrival of numerous living species, which are divisible into four natural groups, according to their present habitats. To the first belong those now living in the temperate zone in the northern hemisphere, such as the mole, musk-shrew, beaver, lynx, wild-cat, wolf, fox, martin, ermine, stoat, otter, brown and grizzly bear, horse, bison, urus, saiga antelope, stag, roe, fallow-deer, and wild boar. They emigrated from Asia, and some pushed their way as far south as northern Africa. The second consists of arctic animals, such as the arctic hare and lemming, musk-sheep, reindeer, and wolverine. These animals also came from Asia, and found their way as far to the south as the Alps and Pyrenees, and as far to the west as Ireland. The third group is composed of those animals now enjoying the cold climate of high altitudes in Europe, such as the chamois, ibex, and Alpine marmot. The fourth is represented by animals now only found in warm countries, such as the lion, panther, African lynx, spotted and striped hyena, hippopotamus, and African elephant and porcupine. The remains of these animals lie scattered over southern Europe, and as far to the north as Yorkshire, and to the west as Ireland. With these certain extinct species appear, hitherto unknown, such as the straight-tusked elephant, mammoth, pigmy elephant, woolly and small-nosed rhinoceroses, the Irish elk, pigmy hippopotamus, and the cave bear. The distribution of these animals throws a flood of light on the geography and climate of Pleistocene Europe. The British Isles, at the time of their migration, must hav formed part of the continent, and the evidence is tolerably clear that the hundred fathom line off the west coast of Ireland was then the Atlantic coast line. The area of the North Sea was a broad, open valley, gashed by a deep fjord extending close to Norway and as far as Denmark. The Mediterranean occupied a much smaller area than it does now, and was isolated from the Atlantic by a land barrier, extending in the direction of the Straits of Gibraltar, along which the animals could migrate freely between Spain and northern Africa. It was also cut into two deep basins by a neck of land extending northward from Cape Bon, by way of Malta and Sicily, along which the animals now found in the bone caves and river deposits of those regions could freely pass. To account, indeed, for the distribution of animals in the islands, we must believe that, in those days, the Mediterranean area was elevated about 2,400 feet above its present level, a change which would unite Corsica and Sardinia to France, turn the Adriatic into a broad valley, and elevate the islands of the Greek Archipelago into mountain peaks.

The climate of Europe at this time differed considerably from that of the present day. To allow of the northern animals penetrating as far south as the Alps and Pyrenees, the temperature in middle Europe must hav been low, while it must hav been high for animals of warm habits, such as the hippopotamus, to hav lived as far north as the British Isles. The remains of both these groups are so intermingled in the river deposits and caves throughout middle Europe—hippopotamus with reindeer and the like—that it is impossible to refer them to periods separated from each other by long intervals. In most of the caves the gnawed remains prove that the reindeer formed a large part of the prey of the spotted hyena. The solution of this difficulty lies in the fact that Europe was then a large tract of land, reaching from northern Africa far into the Atlantic, and, therefore, enjoyed a continental climate, with the summer heat greater than now, and the winter cold more severe. But this only disposes of one part of the difficulty, for it is not likely that the animals would swing to and fro over such a wide area as that reaching from the Pyrenees to the Baltic in one season. There must, therefore, hav been some other cause at work, and that cause is distinctly shown, by the ice marks scattered far and wide over the flanks of the mountains of central and southern Europe and over the low-lying districts in the north, to hav been a secular and gradual lowering of temperature, until it reached its minimum, probably with long pauses and possibly with the return of warmer conditions. Owing to these climatal changes every inch of ground, in middle and western Europe, would successivly form a frontier between the northern and southern animals, and their remains would be mingled together as we find them to be. During the extreme cold, the arctic animals would arrive at their southern limit. Closely following on this lowering of the temperature to its minimum, geographical changes of great magnitude took place in the north of Europe. The area to the north of the line passing from the lower valley of the Severn eastward into Russia was depressed beneath the waves of a berg-laden sea, and again lifted up so that the British Isles, then an archipelago, again formed part of the main-land. As the land emerged from the water, the Pleistocene forests crept over it, and the animals found their way over the southern and midland counties.

Such as this was the scene on which man first appears in Europe. Rude splinters of stone, and roughly-chipped pebbles of flint and chert, at their very best trimmed to an almond shape, and mostly intended for use in the hand, occur abundantly in the river deposits of England and France, in association with the remains of the above animals. They are the implements of savages living by the chase, and probably also by fishing and fowling. Not only hav the implements been discovered, but the very spots on the river-bank where the hunter sat and made them hav been identified, as at Crayford and other places in the valley of the Thames. Could we hav penetrated to the banks of the Thames, or of the Seine, in those times, guided by a thin column of smoke rising over the trees till we reached the camp of the river-drift hunter, we might hav seen the men selecting blocks of flint and chipping their implements out of them, the women preparing the half-raw meal of flesh—it may be of reindeer, mammoth, or rhinoceros, while the children broke the silence of the evening with their shouts on those very spots where are now to be heard, day and night, the voices of London and Paris.

Nor can there be much doubt as to the relation of the river-drift hunter to the above-mentioned changes in climate and geography which are usually summed up under the term Glacial. The balance of evidence is in favor of the view that the hunter at Crayford was in the valley of the Thames before the submergence, and before the temperature had reached its minimum, or, in other words, in Preglacial times. The river-drift hunter whose implements are left at Abbeville traversed the shore of a berg-laden sea, and possibly may hav inherited a tradition from his ancestors of the famous hunting-grounds then lying at the bottom of the British Channel and the great Northern Ocean. The hunter who followed the hippopotamus and the reindeer in the valley of the Ouse, near Bedford, was there after the re-elevation of the land and the cutting of the valley through the mantle of bowlder-clay which had been dropped from the melting bergs. He probably went far enough northward to see the glaciers then crowning the Pennine chain and the mountainous regions of Wales.

Southward the river-drift man wandered far and wide over France, hunting the same animals in the valleys of the Rhone, Loire, and Garonne as in the valley of the Thames. In the Iberian peninsula he was a contemporary of the African elephant, the mammoth, and the straight-tusked elephant, and he camped in the neighborhood of both Lisbon and Madrid, showing here, as in France and Britain, singular facility in choosing places, which became, in the long ages which were to follow, the sites of great capitals. He also ranged over Italy, leaving his implements behind in the Abruzzo; and in Greece, in the neighborhood of Corinth, he was familiar with the extinct pigmy hippopotamus. We can also track him south of the Mediterranean, by the implements found in Oran and near Kolea in Algeria, in the Sahara, and in several places in Egypt. At Luxor they hav been discovered by General Pitt Rivers in the breccia, out of which are hewn the tombs of the Egyptian kings. In Palestine they hav been obtained by the Abbe Richard between Mount Tabor and the Sea of Tiberias, and by Mr. Stopes between Jerusalem and Bethlehem. Throughout this wide area the implements are of the same rude type, and generally of the same materials, flint or quartzite, those of Luxor and Palestine being identical with those in the river valleys of Britain and of France. Throughout this area, too, the river-drift man hunted some or other of those animals which we hav mentioned above.

Nor is our survey yet ended. He is proved by many discoveries to hav ranged over the Indian peninsula, from the valley of the Nerbudda in the north as far as Madras. Here we find him forming part of a fauna in which are to be numbered species now living in India, such as the Indian rhinoceros and the arnee, as well as extinct types of oxen and elephants. There were two extinct hippopotami in the rivers, as well as living gavials, turtles, and tortoises. It is plain, therefore, that at this time the higher mammals of India stood in the same relation to the present Indian animals as the European fauna of the Pleistocene does to that now living in Europe. In both there was a similar association of living with extinct forms, and in both the central figure is the river-drift hunter.

We are led from the region of tropical India to the banks of the Delaware in New Jersey, by the recent discoveries of Dr. Abbott, in the neighborhood of Trenton, which I hav had the opportunity of examining with that gentleman and Professors Haynes and Lewis. The implements are of the same type, and occur under exactly the same conditions, as the river-drift implements of Europe. They are found in a terrace of river gravel and loam overlooking the river, and are composed of materials derived from the old terminal moraine which strikes across the states of New Jersey and Pennsylvania in the direction of Lake Erie. The large blocks of stone which it contains indicate that during the time of its accumulation there were ice rafts floating down the Delaware in the spring, as in the Thames, the Seine, and the Somme in those days. According to Professor Lewis, it was formed either during the time when the glacier of the Delaware was retreating ("Late Glacial") or a later period ("Post-Glacial"). The physical evidence is clear that it belongs to the same age as the deposits with similiar remains in Europe. The fossil animals—the reindeer, bison, mastodon—found in it also point to the same conclusion. These animals belong to a fauna occurring in fluviatile deposits in North America, composed of the same elements, and even some of the same species (as may be seen in Dr. Leidy's list) as that of the Pleistocenes of Europe. In it living and extinct forms, and those now found in warm and cold regions, were mingled together. To the temperate division belong the Virginian deer, the bison, raccoon, and the stag, the beaver and the elk; to the northern, the reindeer and musk-sheep; to the southern, the tapir and peccary. Among the extinct species we may note the American variety of the mammoth, the mastodon, and the great sloths—Megatherium, Megalonyx, and Mylodon, as well as a species of capybara and of musk-sheep. The Felis atrox of Dr. Leidy I am unable to distinguish from the cave-lion of Europe. All these animals were probably familiar to the river-drift hunter as he passed northward to the edge of the great glacier, or southward into the tropics of Central America. He was encamped at Trenton either while New York lay buried under the ice—which has left its unmistakable marks in the smoothed rocks of the Central Park—or while that ice was melting away. Thus, in our survey of the conditions of life when man first appeared in Europe, India, and North America, we see that the animal life was in the same stage of evolution, and that "the old order" was yielding place "unto the new" in these three regions so widely removed from each other. The river-drift hunter is proved by his surroundings to belong to the Pleistocene age in all three.

It remains for us to weave the scattered threads of the inquiry into general conclusions. The identity of the implements proves that the river-drift hunter was in the same rude state of civilization, if it can be called civilization, in the Old and New Worlds, while the hand of the geological clock pointed to the same hour. It is not a little strange that his mode of life should hav been the same in the lands bordering on the Mediterranean, in the tropical forests of India, and on both sides of the Atlantic. The hunter of the reindeer in the valley of the Delaware was the same kind of savage as the hunter of the reindeer on the banks of the Thames or the Seine. It does not, however, follow that this identity of implements implies that the same race of men ranged over this vast tract. While this may be left an open question, it certainly indicates a primeval condition of savagery, from which mankind has emerged in the long ages that separate it from our own time. We may also infer from his wide range that the river-drift hunter (assuming that mankind sprang from one center) inhabited the earth for a long time, and that his dispersal took place before the glacial submergence and the lowering of the temperature in northern Europe, Asia, and America. It is not reasonable to suppose that the Straits of Behring could hav offered a free passage either to the river-drift man migrating from Asia to America, or to the American animals from America to Europe, while there was a great barrier of ice, or of sea, or of both, in the high northern latitudes.

It will naturally be asked who and what was the river-drift hunter. The question can only be partially answered in the present stage of the inquiry. The few fragments of human bones, beyond doubt associated with the implements, are too imperfect to offer any evidence as to race. They, however, point out unmistakably that he was a man, and not "a missing link," and that he was without traces of Simian ancestry, such as hav been ascribed to him by Mortillet and others. On this important point I entirely agree with Dr. Virchow. The river-drift man has vanished from the face of the earth without leaving any clew to his identification with any living race. After him the race of cave-men appeared in Europe, now represented by the Eskimos.

We may realize before the rock-hewn tombs at Luxor the impossibility of measuring the date of the river-drift hunter in terms of years. In the interval between the time of his encampment on the site of ancient Thebes and the rise of the splendor of Egypt, the conditions of life described in the preceeding pages passed away, and man had progressed from the hunter stage of civilization into that of the Neolithic, of the Bronze, and of the Iron ages. He stands on the other side of an abyss of past time, the depth of which has not been, and which in my opinion cannot be, fathomed. W. Boyd Dawkins.

How the Hindoos Worship.—Their Faith Weakening.

From Dio Lewis's Monthly.

About eight o'clock in the morning a Brahman priest comes in to conduct morning worship.

He has already visited the river, or some other body of water, for his morning bath, which must be finished before the sun rises. He has gathered a basket of flowers, which he brings with him. Passing through the house, he says to each one, "Blessings be upon you."

In the worship room there is a small sacred stool. If the family be rich, it is of pure gold or silver. Among the poor it is copper, but always metallic. Here, it is believed, the spirit of God takes his seat to listen to our worship.

Many families, longing for some visible object to represent the deity, bring from the riverside a small black stone, and lay it on the sacred stool. The weight of this stone expresses to them strength and solidity. It helps them to think of the substantial force and power of the Infinite. This may stand for what, among the white races, is known as an Indian idol. Every Hindoo knows that the various images we use to represent the supernatural are not God, but each thing represents some quality of the Supreme Being.

Christians treat with reverence their Bible, though they know it is made of paper which was rags. Just so a Hindoo treats with reverence one of his idols. He knows it is clay, or stone, or wood, and no more God than paper rags; but, like the Bible, his piece of clay or stone helps him to thank God.

The Brahman, having saluted each of us with a blessing as he passes through the house into the worship-room, now sits down upon a square rug in front of the golden or silver stool. He there repeats an invocation to the Supreme Being.

This occupies a few minutes, and is spoken in Sanscrit. It is a prayer to the invisible God to come and sit upon our family seat. At the close of this invocation, the priest turns, and facing the family, kneels. They likewise fall upon their knees, and repeat after him each phrase of a prayer. At the end of each sentence he throws a flower from his basket upon the sacred stool. The flowers remain there, and are only removed in the early morning before the priest comes again. All the members of the family bow to the Brahman as he leaves, and he responds with a "God bless you." Each priest attends five or six families.

My people are astonished when they are told that in Christian countries only one family in five or ten has morning and evening prayers. I do not believe that a single family in Goriva has omitted these prayers in a century; if so, the circumstances must hav been of a most extraordinary and overwhelming sort. I ought to say that our contact with the West is beginning to weaken the force of our ancient faith, and that the number of Indians with "no religion" and no form of worship is increasing every day. At the evening worship, the priest's presence is not necessary, though he is frequently with us.

The Truth Seeker appears on our table this week for the first time. It is an ably edited paper, and shows preachers' deviltries in a fearless manner. We advise those of our readers who care to hear both sides of the story, to subscribe for it.—Michigan Trade Journal.

Editorial Notes.

THE Portland, Or., Weekly Standard showers its editorial abuse upon Ingersoll, Bennett, and Beecher very impartially. They can all stand it, and their rest lose none of its sweetness.

A WRITER in the Christian Advocate urges the increased study of Greek, and givs as one of his reasons that it was the tongue Christ spoke. This discovery should hav been made by Mr. Shapira.

THE Catholic Union and Times angrily inquires why some Freethinker does not take up Father Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll" and answer them. If the Union and Times really wants to know we will tell it: The book is not worth noticing.

Truth went to hear Justin D. Fulton preach last Sunday in Brooklyn, and over the report of his sermon puts the picture of a donkey. This is evidently a mistake, caused by the printers getting the reports of Fulton and Talmage mixed, or perhaps they thought Joe Cook was in town.

THE London Freethinker prints this anent itself. It is an extract from a prayer offered on August 26th, at the Gospel Temperance Hall, Holloway Road: "O Lord, a man put into my hands a paper called the Freethinker, but, thank 'Gord,' I am past Freethinking into free grace. Do thou, O Lord, destroy these men."

AT a meeting of the Derbyshire miners last week the steward of the duke of Rutland—upon whose ground the miners met—refused to allow any speaking on the subject of the extension of the county franchise or the redistribution of seats in Parliament. Free speech is not exactly an accomplished fact in some portions of England.

THE Boston Congregationalist denies the right of members of that sect to fellowship with other Christians who hope that somehow the people who never hear of the salvation scheme will finally be saved. It says such fellowship, for which Mr. Addison P. Foster pleads in its columns, won't do; it is not safe. What a kind and loving religion is Christianity!

MR. BRADLAUGH expresses himself as anxious to see the account of cash disbursed by Roman Catholic organizations, under the direction of Cardinal Manning, to defeat the Affirmation bill in Parliament. This anxiety is hightened by a view he recently obtained of the balance sheet of the City of Edinburgh Conservativ Association, by which it appears that about $85 were paid for the signatures to the Edinburgh petition alone.

THE old story so thoroughly exploded by Col. Ingersoll in his controversy with the New York Observer has been resurrected by the Chicago Standard and Free Methodist, and is again doing duty among the faithful. It seems to us this venerable lie ought to be allowed to rest awhile. Once a year is often enough to trot it out, and the usual time is when Paine's birthday is being commemorated. Don't rush the season, brethren!

WE are pleased to report that Mr. Watts is thoroughly successful in his second visit to America. His lectures in Canada hav caused great excitement in the press and among the public. In each place he has spoken he has been engaged to return for additional lectures. This looks well. Mr. Watts has signed an agreement for a public debate to take place in November, in Toronto, with one of the leading reverend gentlemen of that city. In the mean time, Mr. Watts is making an extensiv tour throughout the West with Mr. George Chainey.

THE Rev. O. P. Gifford opened the Massachusetts Republican State Convention last week with prayer. The next day in a speech he said he believed his prayer did no good. It was true that he prayed for Republican success, but he was ready to pray for anybody. He would go to Springfield and pray for the Democratic convention if they wanted him to. An accommodating person like this ought to be kept constantly in the field opening conventions with prayer. When conventions are out of season he might exercise his special gift of prayer by opening oysters with it.

FULLY 3,000 men and 150 women assembled at Chesterfield last week to hear Mr. Bradlaugh speak, and notwithstanding a pouring rain they waited patiently on the wet grass for him to arrive. Many of them walked eight miles to the meeting, and had the same distance to traverse at its close. Both speaker and audience were drenched to the skin. The dead-in-earnestness of both parties to this meeting may well be considered by the English government. Mr. Bradlaugh means to enter Parliament sooner or later, and if he needs a crowd at his back this audience would be good material to draw from.

ACCORDING to the Rev. Dr. Crosby, of this city, Protestant Christianity is in a bad way. He says in a recently published lecture that "the great bulk of the Protestant church is identified with the world. It has a name to liv while it is dead. It has turned its doctrin into naturalism or rationalism, and its life into selfishness. The old landmarks are gone. Family prayer is given up. Sunday newspapers are read, prayer-meetings are ignored, worldly partnerships are formed, social sins are connived at, and even excused, the pulpit is made a stage on which to strut and pose before a gaping world, and religion is made one of the instruments of fashion. We may not cure this dreadful evil, but we may ourselvs avoid it and its doom. We may look to ourselvs and to our own families, that we go not with the multitude of Christians to evil and to perish in the hour when Christ shall come as a thief to their dismay." If this picture of religious declension is accurate in its portrayal of facts, remarks the New York Sun, the reformatory efforts of another Martin Luther are urgently needed. To which it may be added that the efforts of a Martin Luther would be of no avail. While he may hav been an important assistant at the birth of Protestantism, there is no reason to believe that he would hav the slightest success in revitalizing its corpse.

A RELIGIOUS paper says that "a sister requests that some one upon whom the Lord shall lay it, write an article on Christians marrying unbelievers. She does not wish any empty theory, but that some one whom the holy spirit has shown the deadly consequences of such a step will write his or her mind about it. A little experience accompanying the light of the spirit might help the writer in replying." We do not know what effect it has upon the Christian, but from the experiences told us by a few Freethinkers, we imagin that marrying a shouting Christian is about the shortest way of getting into hell known to men. The zealous Christians appear wholly unable to accord to others the rights in literature and worship they claim for themselvs.

WE hope that Mr. Jeremiah Hacker, of Berlin, N. J., will not be forgotten by his Liberal friends. A cold winter is coming on; he and his wife are very old and poor, and are in need of all the aid they will receive. He does not like to be an object of charity, and has written and printed some "Racing Rhymes to Suit the Times," which embody sound Infidel thoughts, and he would like to sell them. He will send them for five cents singly; in dozens or over at three cents each. They are handy to inclose in letters to friends to amuse or set to thinking. Last winter his Liberal friends sent enough to keep him comfortable, but during the summer very little has been received by him. He now hopes to sell enough of these rhymes to keep the fires burning on his hearth and something to eat on the table.

IT was evidently through no fault of the New Orleans Christian Advocate that the slaves were liberated. It regrets that event even to this day. Hear the good, pious paper:

"If slavery was profitable to the whites it was perhaps more so to the blacks. They were fed, and clothed, and taught the things most necessary for them to know. They were subjected to such government and disciplin as is perhaps best suited to all people in their condition. If they hav made any progress since their emancipation it is no doubt due almost solely to the disciplin of slavery."

What a warm reception Parker Pillsbury, Elizur Wright, Amy Post, A. B. Bradford, Lucy Colman, and other anti-slavery leaders, would meet down there in the Christian fold even now! Abolitionist and Infidel—lord! what a bonfire their bones would make for the Christians to dance around!

THE Catholic Review favors the knocking of Protestants on the head when they are not sufficiently respectful to Catholic symbols. It says:

"They call the Catholics idolaters; they abuse their faith and its practice; they insult the blessed mother of God, and if now one of them gets knocked on the head for his open insults to all that a Catholic holds dear, he has himself to thank."

To which the Independent says:

"Many a Protestant in Catholic countries has been knocked on the head for refusing to perform an act of idolatry to bread and wine carried in procession through the streets as the body and blood of Christ. This the Catholic Review seems to think no infringement of personal rights."

And many a Catholic in Ireland was knocked on the head for refusing to turn Protestant, or for sending his child to a Catholic teacher, or for being that teacher. This the Independent doesn't think of sufficient importance to mention.

IT appears from latest reports that the Rev. R. Heber Newton is not to be tried for heresy. The Rev. Dr. Samuel Buel, one of the clergymen who presented Mr. Newton for heresy, says:

"I hav nothing more to do with the presentation of Mr. Newton. Bishop Potter has not acted in the matter, and I do not believe that he will do so. The canons of the church allow him to drop the whole affair. I think he has dropped it, and that nothing will ever be done about it."

It will be remembered that Mr. Newton is author of the work on "The Wrong Uses of the Bible," which was thought to be so Liberal in its treatment of the subject as to demand a trial for heresy. The book is indorsed by so many prominent religious people that to convict its author of heresy would be to impeach the religious soundness of a larger number of influential persons than the church feels that it can afford to lose. It is by condoning just such heretical sins as these that the church preserves her numerical integrity and enables preachers like Parson Newman to shout that she is going ahead. If all the heretical ministers and laymen were dismissed, a corporal's guard would scarcely remain.

A HIGH-HANDED proceeding in a republic with a written constitution is the recent act of Postmaster-General Gresham in ordering the postmaster at New Orleans to withhold not only all letters directed to the Louisiana Lottery Company but those directed to a bank of that place, on the ground that the bank was a cover for the lottery company and the lottery company a swindle. Granted that the lottery, per se, is evil, it is none the less an illegal step for the postmaster-general to take. In directing this withholding of properly directed letters Mr. Gresham has gone a long way toward that interference with private correspondence which years ago drove an English postmaster-general into political disgrace. The English people reasoned that if the post-office officials could open sealed correspondence which they thought contained treason they could open it for any other purpose, political or personal. Just so will the American people reason to-day. If Mr. Gresham can detain letters addressed to a bank because he suspects they are really intended for a lottery company, there is no safety for any one against whom the postmaster may hav a suspicion. The alleged power to do this is derived from the so-called Comstock laws. These laws should be repealed for the safety of the country against such arbitrary and unconstitutional orders as General Gresham is giving. Who constituted him dictator and censor of public mails and morals? Certainly not the people.

The Liberal Club.

The meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, on the evening of the 21st, opened with Mr. Andrews in the chair. This gave it an air of dignity at the start. Professor Vaughan, of Virginia, was the lecturer of the evening. "The American Hell" was the subject with which he proposed to deal. The lecture was preceded by a recitation, which related in very beautiful language how a priest acquired a pair of golden candlesticks by giving his silver ones away in charity. The American hell, Professor Vaughan said, was of several sorts; for instance, there are political, religious, industrial, and social hells. The world, too, was full of cranks, bigots, and windy people. Everybody wanted to be a leader. There was not unity enough among Liberals. The lecture was sold to the audience in printed form after it had been delivered.

Professor Vaughan is one of the unexplained manifestations of nature. He is a sort of electric light. At one moment he dazzles an audience by his oratorical effulgence, and at the next moment his hearers may be left in the dark and feel like going home.

Mr. Andrews ensued. He arose in defense of bigots and cranks. A bigot was a man who loved the truth, and thought so much of whatever truth he knew that he was afraid to loose his grip on it in favor of a new truth. The bigot was one of those who took to heart the lesson of the dog that dropped the meat he had in his mouth under the impression that he saw a larger piece, but which turned out to be only a shadow. Cranks also were useful in their way. In fact, the Liberal Club, Mr. Andrews said, was a congress of cranks. That was the beauty of it. It was the first organization that had ever given cranks any kind of a show. A crank was simply a person who pushed an idea to its extreme. On his own particular hobby a crank knew more than all the rest of the world. Consequently in a council of cranks there was a good deal of wisdom.

Mr. Putnam took exception to the previous speaker's estimate of a bigot; he (the bigot) wasn't the good fellow Mr. Andrews had defined him to be. The bigot was not a lover of truth; he was a person who thought he had the whole truth, and who was determined to make others accept his ideas of truth and no more. Mr. Putnam said his "bond of union" as set forth in THE TRUTH SEEKER had been criticised, and he was accused of making a creed and setting limits. He had done nothing of the kind. It was the exclusiv people who set the limits and barred themselvs out. He had no desire to fraternize with a person who did not enjoy his society, but he would work with any man who would work with him. Extending his hand toward the chairman, Mr. Putnam further said that he would shake hands with the devil if the devil wasn't afraid of him. Mr. Andrews, misconstruing this overture, cautioned the speaker good-naturedly not to gesticulate so pointedly in his direction while talking about the devil. Mr. Putnam, with profuse apology, and amid great merriment on the part of the audience, disclaimed any intention of being personal. It may be said that, while Mr. Putnam is not physically a large man, when upon his favorit subject of liberty he tips the beam at about a ton.

Following Mr. Putnam came Mr. Caleb Pink, who announced that he had sufficient self-conceit to believe that he was the only consistently honest person in the house. This announcement was received with shouts of derisiv laughter. Mr. Pink then reminded those present of some disagreeable facts concerning the general lack of personal honesty. The chairman did not call him to order at the end of ten minutes, but kept an eye on his watch to see which would run down first, the speaker or the timepiece. It was not perhaps a fair trial, as the latter had evidently been recently wound. It must go upon record that Mr. Pink was the first to peter out.

During the contest between the speaker and the chairman's watch, many persons, who had laid their money on neither, but who evidently had great confidence in the staying powers of Mr. Pink, arose and left the hall. Those who remained, however, were treated by Dr. Caleb S. Weeks to one of the most thoughtful speeches of the evening. He said that it was the political and religious systems under which people suffered that needed reforming more than the people themselvs. It was not necessary to formulate a new system of things until the people had been aroused to the fact that they needed one. The new system would then come in the natural course of events. He alluded to Mr. Putnam's "Gottlieb" as a valuable work, wherein it was detailed that one man had reformed all hell and transformed it into so desirable a place of residence that people went there by choice in preference to the less congenial atmosphere of the orthodox heaven. In the course of his remarks Dr. Weeks made the altogether original observation that Calvinism came at the world hell-end foremost.

For some reason which the importance of his subsequent remarks by no means sufficed to explain, Mr.

Edward King was called upon by the audience. Mr. King said that he disagreed with all that had been said by the other speakers. He got along for some time without saying anything of an interesting nature, apparently hoping for an inspiration, which he did not exhibit any evidence of having received, until the expiration of his allotted ten minutes made it necessary for him to desist. A peculiarity of Mr. King's speech was that most of the enthusiasm it was destined to arouse preceded its delivery. This speaker might score a strong point and create a favorable impression sometime by declining to speak when a well-meaning but misguided audience ill-advisedly call upon him to address them.

Professor Vaughan replied to his critics, and read further extracts from his printed lecture. The meeting then adjourned. Mr. Shook was not present.

Mr. Leland at Work.

HE STATES THE OBJECTS OF THE LEAGUE TO A CLEVELAND REPORTER.

From the Plain Dealer of the 12th.

An elderly gentleman of clerical demeanor and dress entered the Plain Dealer sanctum this noon and asked to hav an announcement made that Mr. T. B. Wakeman, a New York lawyer, and president of the National Liberal League, will deliver an address this evening in Weisgerber's Hall.

"Are you Mr. Wakeman?" asked the reporter of whom the request was made.

The visitor replied, "No, sir, I am Mr. T. C. Leland, secretary of the League. We are lecturing our way to the national convention to be held in Milwaukee September 21st, 22d, and 23d. We shall lecture tomorrow night in Toledo."

"What is this Liberal League?"

"In theory our government demands absolute separation of church and state. In practice we hav not worked up to that yet. The Constitution of the United States is all right, but the constitutions and laws of some of the states conflict with our views. For instance, in Pennsylvania an Atheist cannot take an oath. In the Western states people can go to the theater on Sunday but in the East they cannot."

"You wish, then, to be able to attend the theater on Sunday in the east?"

"Yes, if we want to. We want to be able to do as we please, whether we are in the East or the West. We oppose religion in our laws. We object to the Bible and devotional services in the public schools. Many worthy people do not believe in the Bible and do not wish their children taught to worship it. We would suppress no conscience. We are willing that the Bible should be used in the schools like any text book, as a study in history, but we oppose any sort of fetichism. But the principal thing we are working for at present is the taxation of church property the same as any other property—and in this many Christians are with us."

"Who compose this League?"

"Infidels, Atheists, Agnostics, and those Spiritualists who do not believe in Christianity. Some Spiritualists believe in Christ and religion and also that spirits return to earth after death. Others do not believe in God or Christ. I think that at no distant day a distinct church will be formed by Christian Spiritualists."

"You are the irreligious people, then, the heathen of the country?"

"Yes, we are the scientific heathen, the pagans of the United States. We worship nothing but science, we must hav proof of things before we believe. We object also to chaplains in the navy and army. We object to prayers in Congress and the legislatures. Every prayer at Albany costs $3 and takes perhaps two or three mills out of my pocket; I object to that on principle."

"Do you believe in an overruling power?"

"None but nature."

"What is nature?"

"Well, that is hard to define. Taking the solar system, say, we go no further back than the nebula. Everything springs from nebulæ."

"Where did the nebulæ come from?"

"That we don't know. It is a profound subject. Of course we believe that light, heat, and electricity are the underlying principles of nature and we know that they come from the sun, so perhaps the sun is as near the first cause, the overruling power, as anything."

"You are sun worshipers?"

"No, we are worshipers of nothing. We are scientists."

"Then you are iconoclasts?"

"We are iconoclasts so far as concerns destroying fetichism. But come up and hear Mr. Wakeman. Some people claim that the world was created in six days of twenty-four hours each, that men, animals, and so on were made suddenly, all at once. Mr. Wakeman believes in evolution. Come up and hear him on the subject of whether the hen or the egg was made first. He is perhaps not eloquent, but he is interesting and clear."

"Which was made first, the hen or the egg?"

"We think the egg."

"Who laid the egg?"

"Ah! that is what we don't know. We believe it was gradually developed. The subject is a very deep and puzzling one."

"What is the strength of the League?"

"We hav 260 branches from Maine to California, and they represent a membership of perhaps ten thousand. Probably we shall attempt to establish a branch here."

"How do you propose to wage your war?"

"Politically. We advise our members to go first with one and then another of the great parties, allying themselvs with whichever one will adopt one or more of our planks in its platform. We shall not undertake to start an independent party; that costs a great deal of money, and we prefer that the great parties now organized shall pay those expenses for us."

"You mean to work, then, to hold the balance of power?"

"Yes, that's it. We see John Kelly with his forty thousand votes dictating and carrying his points in New York, and with one half million votes in this country we ought to be able to do something."

"Do you mean that half a million voters in the United States believe—or disbelieve—as you do?"

"Yes, I think half a million is not an overestimate."

"It is a singular thing," Mr. Leland added, "that both Mr. Wakeman and myself were educated for the ministry. He was educated at Princeton College—that's Presbyterian, isn't it?—and I was educated at Lima, N. Y., in the strictest Methodism. I calculate that in my minority I spent over one year on my knees. My parents were both devoted Christians, and my mother could pray as well as my father, if not better. So between their prayers and Sunday-school, church, and prayer-meetings, I spent at least one year, altogether, on my knees before I reached manhood."

"And you mourn over that as lost time?"

"Yes. I regret it as time lost which might hav been put to much better purpose."

Illinois State League Convention.

The third annual gathering of the Illinois State Liberal League convened in Union Park Hall (formerly Grow's Opera House), 517 West Madison street, Chicago, Sept. 15th. This hall has a radical record. Here the memorable morning session of the National League was held in 1880, when the faint-hearted, weak-kneed element "wilted" under the unconditional demand for repealing the Comstock laws, and from this platform more Freethought lecturers hav proclaimed the gospel of common sense than from all other halls of the city combined.

Friday, the 15th, about 2 P.M., Mr. F. F. Follett, secretary of the State League, called the delegates to order, and John E. Remsburg assumed the temporary chairmanship with appropriate remarks. Mr. T. V. Lawson felt impressed to open the meeting by delivering a dollar for membership in the State League, which he had obtained from a friend, and thought that was the best example he could giv the rest to go and do likewise.

E. A. Stevens was introduced, and, on behalf of the local League, bade the delegates welcome to Chicago, regretting that the city's chief distinction was the overwhelming number of her wealth-worshipers. Old orthodox gods held little sway among men of to-day, but they had set up a new god as false as the former—like the Ephesians, who cried before the glittering image, Great is Diana! Here, on the Board of Trade, the business office, "bucket" shop, or gambler's alley, a shrine to Moloch was erected and surrounded by earnest devotees. But, on behalf of the faithful of Freethinkers, who in this city of 600,000 keep up a constant agitation for freedom and humanity, he bade them thrice welcome.

There being no press of business on the program, Mr. Stevens was requested to read the circular and platform adopted by the Committee of the National League on Political Action. After the reading, Mr. Follett said he had given this matter of political action much consideration, but could not determin what was the best course to pursue under the circumstances. It was a question which would come up for action at the National Congress, and, to bring the matter up for discussion, he moved, "That the delegates of the State League of Illinois advise the National Liberal League to take independent political action."

An interesting discussion followed, participated in by Messrs. T. V. Lawson, Wm. Black, T. W. Lemmax, F. F. Follett, Blair, and Stevens, and Mrs. Ames, at the conclusion of which an informal vote was taken of the sentiment of the League, and the motion was passed with but two dissenting votes.

The session closed by the announcement that John E. Remsburg would lecture in the evening on "The Church and Its Claims."

The evening session proved a profitable one, as Mr. Remsburg's lecture was the clearest and most irrefutable argument, disproving the claims of the church as the conservator of morality, and its poetical diction ranks him among our best platform orators. His lecture was received with rounds of applause.

Even after the lecture the audience were averse to being dispersed, and brilliant speeches were made by Messrs. W. J. Gorsuch, Prof. Baumgras, President Hinckley, Wm. Paterson, and other members of the Chicago League, on the political question, until a late hour, when it was was decided to renew this all-absorbing and interesting topic in the morning.

Sunday morning the weather looked unpropitious and the attendance was light. In the absence of the president of the State League, President Hinckley, of Chicago, was called to the chair, and made a good speech in behalf of holding this political question in abeyance, but was ably replied to by Messrs. Peterson and Gorsuch.

During this debate, T. B. Wakeman, Secretary Leland, and Mrs. Dr. Juliet H. Severance dropped into the hall and were invited on the platform.

Mr. Wakeman was called to giv his opinion, and said he had no wish to influence the vote whatever, but thought the delegates should be left unhampered by instructions, leaving them capable of obtaining more light and wisdom on the subject, and acting in accordance with that wisdom, and their highest conceptions of right. The vote was then taken and passed in favor of independent political action, with but one vote recorded in opposition.

Officers of the State League were then elected as follows: president, Ferris Burr, Braidwood; vice-president, T. V. Lawson, Gurnee; Secretaay, F. F. Follett, Bloomington; treasurer, Wm. Black, Carrollton. Delegates to National Congress, F. F. Follett, F. Burr, Wm. Black, and T. V. Lawson.

A subscription was then taken as a slight recompense for the unceasing labors for the past three years throughout the length and breadth of the state in behalf of the League work by that tireless Freethought missionary, F. F. Follett, but of the amount realized we are not informed.

The audience refused to retire until Mrs. Dr. Severance should be heard from. She outlined the state work, giving valuable suggestions for the future, and urging Liberals to carry forward the prominent reforms by political action. Her speech was rapturously applauded.

As the hall could not be secured for the afternoon the session closed until evening, when Mr. John E. Remsburg gave an eloquent vindication and eulogy on the heroic patriot, statesman, and philosopher, Thomas Paine. It was a fine effort, which to be realized must be heard, and if applause is any criterion of appreciation the audience were delighted.

T. B. Wakeman then roused the audience to the highest pitch by a graphic disquisition on the Mosaic cosmogony, the Angustinian conception of the universe, and the total annihilation by science of these flimsy foundations of orthodoxy, urging the necessity of educating the race to a clearer understanding of science, so that a new world will be opened to their vision, their hearts, and their aspirations, and that world will be the here and now. Nothing could be accomplished by the many reforms agitated until a more general aspiration prevailed among the people to make this life, in this world, correspond to what they hav been taught to look forward to in the "city of God." That will be brought about by education, and consecration to this cause by those who wish to develop the soul-life of man.

Mrs. Dr. Severance, a universal favorit among Chicago radicals, was called for. She said the aim of society was to develop men and women; to do that they must hav the best possible conditions, and to remove the conditions that hampered and restricted this development was the work of the League. A great trouble with the League movement was that a large element of the Spiritualists would not work with them for state secularization. These people were properly called Christian Spiritualists. They had only become convinced of spirit communion, but held on to the rest of their old absurdities and appeared incapable of growth. Many Materialists refused to join in League work because of the presence of Spiritualists. They could consistently be classed in the same category as Christian Spiritualists, for though they had got over the superstition they clung to the narrow, persecuting, and illiberal spirit of the Christians. The doctor demanded the greatest personal liberty consistent with a respect to the rights of others, and denounced those who, while demanding reforms, were by their personal habits infringing on the rights of others by polluting the atmosphere with tobacco. She also treated of the labor question, and woman's enfranchisment, in her usual trenchant style.

Mr. Leland brought Man to the notice of the audience, and invited membership in the National League, after which the third annual session of the Illinois State League was brought to a close, the general feeling among the members being one of renewed aspiration to carry on its work. Illinois is destined to be the pivotal state of radical thought and action, and it is hoped Mr. Follett will receive such aid before the next annual meeting as will make it fittingly comport with the dignity and destiny of our state and the determination of her Freethinkers.

E. A. Stevens,
Sec., pro tem.

Communications.

Let No Innocent Man Suffer.

It is an old familiar trick of political leaders, in times of enthusiasm or excitement, to formulate some terse, epigrammatic phrase as a kind of catchword to be constantly repeated and dinned into the great public ear, and whether there be reason in it or not, so long as it sounds well and serves the temporary purpose of a party motto to influence the "dumb driven cattle" who vote and pay taxes, it is always found to repay abundantly the ingenuity of contriving it. Thus phrases become historic and follow each other like a series of milestones to mark the sentiment or prejudice, the earnestness or folly, the devotion or caprice, of parties and nations from time to time.

Such a phrase, fraught with mischievous teaching, was promulgated ten or more years ago and h s since served as a war-cry for the violent to incite judicial onslaught. When General Grant said, "Let no guilty man escape," he formulated an aphorism that served well his purpose for the time, but he thrust forward with undue prominence the least worthy part of a great principle and turned loose a sentiment that has thrown courts, juries, and public officers off their guard, and perverted their functions to the working of incalculable wrong. His maxim is so dangerous and misleading, so false yet so captivating to those who think only superficially, that it should never be stated alone. It should never be separated from its more important antithesis, Let no innocent man be convicted.

The object and purpose of all law, and the only reason or justification for the existence of law, is the protection of the innocent; and when hue and cry is raised for the punishment of the guilty, and moderation and reason are unheard in their call for protection of the innocent, the law is dethroned and becomes merely an object of contempt. "When the innocent is convicted, the judge and the law are condemned."

Blackstone's idea that it is better that ten guilty men should escape than that one innocent man should suffer, seems to be lost sight of in these days of ours, and the purposes of justice are perverted, judicial integrity is at a discount, and the law is become a snare and a delusion, a net to entrap and entangle the unwary rather than a safeguard for the protection of virtue. And we believe that General Grant's cry, "Let no guilty man escape," has had as much to do in driving moderation and reason from the bench and the jury box as any other one influence that can be indicated.

These reflections force themselvs upon us as we meditate upon the events of the past year. At the annual meeting of the New York Freethinkers in 1882 the return of the beloved D. M. Bennett from his tour around the world was a matter of rejoicing and congratulation. The last meeting that we held was without him. We missed his kindly and genial countenance, his cheerful influence, and his wise counsel. His sufferings are over, but it may be ours to share his triumph if we rightly improve the lesson which his life taught.

No more inhuman outrage was ever perpetrated in this country, in the name of justice, than that of which D. M. Bennett was the victim. Although he was clearly innocent, there was no escape for him. He was to be convicted at all events. Brutal clamor was his accuser, Fanaticism his prosecutor, Malevolence the witness, Inhumanity the jury, Corruption the tribunal, Obstinacy the judge, and a mistaken estimate of popular sentiment the law. And so convicted he was. It is written, "Let no guilty man escape."

Just at this time it may not be inopportune to review this outrage, and if displaying it in the light of thought, only a little advanced from the thought of the time when General Grant said, "Let no guilty man escape," shall hav the effect of directing the attention of our politicians and maxim mongers to evils that should be remedied, and of exciting them to efforts to prevent the recurrence of such crimes as caused Mr. Bennett's sufferings, then the triumph of his spirit will be assured, and his suffering and our labor not in vain.

A gentleman who has acted for eight years as prosecuting attorney in Judge Benedict's court, testified upon a certain examination not long ago as follows:

"Q. Don't you think that your services in that case were just as valuable as those of the defendant's counsel?

"A. No; nor in any government case, because we don't put a man on trial until we hav two-thirds or nine-tenths the best of the case before we start, and the lawyer on the other side has harder work. It is easier for the district attorney. You hav all the power of the government of the United States behind you, and you hav all the detectivs you want who will swear almost anything you want them to swear to, and you hav all the jurors, because they are paid by the United States and they don't pay the jurors as they are paid in this court—there they are paid so much a day and the verdict is for the government every time."

No more real or truthful description of Judge Benedict's court could be given. This short paragraph tells the whole story of fraud, corruption, and outrage. Thus surrounded with misery and sorrow, the brutal Benedict has sat in that court for fifteen years without holding up a finger to change a state of affairs which is a disgrace to our humanity. In this court Edward Lange and the grand old humanitarian, Dr. E. B. Foote, were convicted of offenses, trivial in themselvs, but which were made the pretexts for the infliction of the most hellish punishments. The desolation of families, the ruin of reputations, the anguish of the innocent, are nothing to Benedict, and many a noble, honest, innocent victim has been crushed beneath this judgment.

